The campaign, run by Conway and several alumnae volunteers, focused on two larger donations in the amount of $2 million each from two anonymous alumnae. Other major contributions came from various foundations and corporations, such as the Scraggs Foundation and IBM.

The non-profit and unique all the support generated by the campaign," Conway said. " have given faculty, students and administrators more energy to respond to the increasingly complicated and social challenges of the future and to keep our traditions strong throughout a second century of outstanding achievement."

The $40 million raised over the past four years, will be used to finance a variety of general operating expenses, such as faculty salaries, scholarships and the renovation of the college's library according to Marjorie Jones a college spokeswoman.

Snow causes minor accidents

No major accidents were reported in the Amherst area last night despite yesterday's snowfall, Amherst police said.

A police spokesman said there were no minor accidents yesterday. The road conditions in the Amherst area were poor but not freezing by early evening.

The temperature is becoming around freezing. The road conditions may change and freeze," Amherst Police Sergeant Bartley said.

The worst state in Massachusetts was under a traveler's weather advisory at three to six inches of snow with heaviest recorded for the National Weather Service in Bradley International Airport in Windsor, Connecticut.

The colder weather is expected to remain for the next few days with a chance of snow tomorrow, the weather service spokesman said.

The spokesman said the streets are expected to stay dark, though there is no danger of flooding.

"The circumstance of the winds was in the southeast and now it is from the north bringing in the colder air. The winds of the storm system are moving around the entire New England area," the spokesman said.

Contest will rename bar

By LAURIE CANTALUPO
Collegian Correspondent

The popular bar on the Campus Center concourse with the strange looking walls and no-stick floors, will not have a grand opening ceremony until students choose a new name for the former Blue Wall.

William M. Harris, Director of the Campus Center, said a committee of six to rename the Blue Wall met on Tuesday, and drafted a plan to hold a contest to pick a new name. An announcement for this contest appears in today's Collegian asking students to submit entrees by March 5, Harris said. The Blue Wall has been blue since it opened in 1970.

Harris said architects who redesigned the bar and Campus Center officials suggested holding off on a grand opening until a name has been chosen and "do it all at once." The architects, when they began renovations in the summer of 1980, suggested renaming the Blue Wall because their plans involved changing the bar from blue to a beowaish color. Other renovations include sculptured walls, park benches, and an "outdoor look", Harris said.

Harris said the renaming committee will screen down the number of responses to 10, and then go back in the paper and ask students to vote on the new name.

Many new specials planned for TOC

By MARYELLEN GAMBALE
Collegian Correspondent

The Top of the Campus has reopened with a totally new look and many new programs planned for the semester including Dinner Specials and a Soap Opera Happy Hour.

Richard Ellis, food service manager for the TOC and the Bluewall Bar, said that the new programs will include a "Dinner of the Month Club" and a Friday night "Two for One" dinner special.

Many new promotions will be instituted in the lounge this semester, said Lynch, including a "Soap Opera Happy Hour," where General Hospital fans can enjoy dollar feature live piano entertainment on weekends and a weekly amateur comedy night.

Ellis said that business has been good so far, but is expected to improve once their advertising campaign begins next week. Ellis also said that students will still receive a 10 percent discount on dinner at the TOC, although a TOC sticker is needed to buy alcohal in both the restaurant and lounge.

TOC Manager Timothy R. Lynch said the renovations were done primarily to generate new business. The work, which took six months to complete, cost $105,936, and should be complete in two weeks, according to William M. Harris, director of the Campus Center.

Wooden fixtures have replaced much of the old concrete and the entire back wall of the restaurant is hung with vintage photographs of the UMass campus in the early 1900's. The lounge was also treated to a total makeover, with the old service bar transformed into a sit-down lounge. The lounge is open to everyone with a TOC sticker, which may be obtained at the door with proof of age.

Lynch said the advertising campaign will consist of a comic strip about the TOC which will appear in the Collegian.

He said the idea of the ad campaign is to "get the students talking about the TOC" and to renew interest in the restaurant and lounge in the UMass community.

The top concert this weekend is the Boomtown Rats Sunday night at the Fine Arts Center with Boston's own Rings opening the show. Tickets are still available for this one if you want to check them out.

David Bromberg is in the Student Union Ballroom Friday, but if you want to see him you'll have to go to the door and beg somebody to sell you their ticket.

Elsewhere on campus this weekend, the Atlantics will be in the Bluewall Friday with the Hot Dates backing them up. The Atlantics have visited campus several times in the past few semesters, and you can be sure to get your money's worth.

The Shittons (no it's not spelled wrong) invade the Wall on Saturday. Their picture tells more about them than I can. Both shows have a $2.00 cover.

Ina Ray, an all-woman rock band from Boston, will be at Rahars Friday, and it'll cost you two bucks to get in. Locals, First Rate, will play on Saturday.

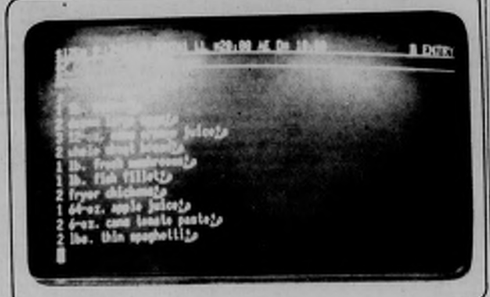
Shopping by TV in the future?

By TERESA TEETER
Collegian Correspondent



Less impulse spending and a reduction in the variety of brand name products would be effects of the "Telecommunications Shopping Revolution," which could replace large stores as a major form of retailing within the next decade, a UMass professor has predicted.

Larry Rosenberg, a visiting professor of marketing at the University of Massachusetts, has been doing research on the subject for the past three years.

Telecommunications merchandising now in developmental stages, combines computers with a two-way television system. It is a futuristic version of other retailing techniques such as catalog shopping and direct order merchandise, Rosenberg said.

This type of buying and selling would consist of customers receiving catalogs, in the form of video cassettes, which would be plugged into a TV, he said. As different items are shown on the screen, customers could stop the tape and order a certain item by pressing numbers into an attached computer console.

From there, the item's costs would be automatically withdrawn from the customer's bank accounts. At the same time, the order would go to a local automated warehouse for delivery to a home or to a centralized pick up site, Rosenberg said.

College age people of today might be using telecommunications merchandising on a wide scale by 1990, Rosenberg said. Couples with both partners working probably are bound to be the typical customers, he said.

Items such as groceries and staple commodities will be the main products sold, because consumers will not want to take the time to shop for them, Rosenberg said.

Prices should remain competitive though because supermarkets and large stores will be too expensive to be economically feasible in 10 years in terms of rent, heat, and manpower, he said.

Many shopping malls could be endangered by the transition to telecommunications merchandising, Rosenberg said. "The whole premise that malls are built on is being removed, because the proffessionals of the future are not going to want to waste precious gas of the time that it take to get to a mall," he said.

"People are getting ready for it" Rosenberg said of the new shopping system. They have grown up with computers, video games and automatic banking, and the technology exists."

However, Rosenberg said, unemployment will not be increased by all of the automation.

"The problem is we have to retrain and relocate people. We will need them, not in the steel mills, but in the computer factories."

Fencing offers challenges in dueling

By JOHANNA HOSOM
Collegian Staff

Editor's note: In response to the series on Recognized Student Organizations printed in the Collegian last semester, the series will continue periodically this semester.

In the tradition of the Three Musketeers, the University of Massachusetts fencing club allows its members to relive the days of duals and swordsmanship.

For $10 a semester, 5-college students can practice parries, lunges, and en guardes, and participate in bouts against other clubs in the New England area.

The fencing club originated in the 1950's, but it died out during the late 60's due to lack of interest. Sean Conley, now the senior advisor, started it again five years ago.

RSO
RECOGNIZED STUDENT ORGANIZATIONS

"We're not a varsity sport," said vice president Gregory Frick. "We're a club. It's much more relaxed that way."

"Because it's a club you don't have to dedicate all your time to it," added Conley. "You can just enjoy it."

President Ann McDonough said interested people should know the basic moves of fencing before they join and she recommends they take fencing classes from the physical education department first.

"We don't teach," said Frick. "At meetings on Tuesday and Thursday evenings from 8-10 and Wednesdays from 4-5 in NOPE, we practice the basic moves, and the more experienced members demonstrate new techniques. There's a lot of support among the members. We don't have a coach, but the relaxed set up works very well."

The men's team, consisting of nine members, has a record of 3-1 so far this year. The women's team, comprised of only four members, has a 0-2-1 record.

"It's hard to get enough women together to make a team, and we've had to forfeit bouts," said McDonough.

In bouts, each time a foil touches an opponent, the pressure affects the electrically wired jacket. The signal is sent down a wire to a box where a light goes on, McDonough said. If both opponents touch each other at the same time, and two signals are sent to the box, nothing happens. Directors keep track of the signal lights and determine the winner.

"If a fencer wins his bouts, and then wins the open, he becomes classified," Frick continued. "For example, right now I'm an unclassified fencer, but if I do well at the next competition, depending on the level of my competitors, I could become classified a C-level fencer. Then, if I continue to do very well, I could eventually earn an A classification."

One advantage to fencing is people of all ages can participate.

"Maybe older citizens can't move as quickly as the younger fencers, but you can polish your moves and have gained enough experience to outsmart them," said Conley.

"Fencing is a one-to-one sport. Each is trying to outsmart the other," McDonough said. "You are trying to control your opponent, and he is trying to control you."

"It's a very good, satisfied feeling to win a match because of that individual challenge," said armorrer Peter Cannon.

"I like the challenge. It's a very quick sport," said club member Andrea Diss.

"I like the romantic appeal," said Frick.

"If you fence, a club's the best way," he added. "Fencing is an expensive sport. Weapons can cost up to $40. The dues we collect, and the money we're raising from showing The Three Musketeers on March 1, and an upcoming backgammon tournament goes for our weapons, paying directors to preside over the bouts and bus transportation. Jackets can be received at fencing classes, and foils, gloves, and masks are available to anyone with an I.D. It just makes it easier to enjoy the sport."

Black history: No longer lost, stolen or betrayed

This is the last week of Black History Month, which celebrated the cultural, scientific and political achievements of black Americans. This nationwide celebration seeks to bring to Americans a recognition of the triumphs and advances black Americans have brought to America — a recognition withheld by standard American history.

Black people have contributed greatly to all aspects of American society and, in many instances, have not been given full credit. While the names of black athletes and entertainers are very easily recognized, those who have made scientific and political contributions are often overlooked.

Jan E. Matzeliger invented the "lasting machine" in 1883, making the mass production of shoes possible. Dr. Daniel Hale Williams performed the first successful open heart surgery in 1883, while Charles Drew's discovery of storing blood plasma for future use saved many lives in WWII. Drew, also responsible for the start of blood banks, died on the steps of a southern hospital because staff refused to give a transfusion to a black man.

Blacks also fought and died for America since the American Revolution. Lemuel Hayes served as a minuteman in Connecticut in 1753, Jack Sisson helped capture the British commander-in-chief, Major General Richard Prescott in 1777, and during the revolution 5,000 blacks fought for the Patriot cause. A runaway slave, Cripus Attucks, was the first man to die for American independence, in 1770.

Black historian Carter G. Woodson sought to rectify the misrepresentation and denial of black history in American society. He initiated Negro History Week in 1926 to gain national recognition of black participation in American life. As more and more black achievements were discovered, Negro History Week quickly expanded into Black History Month.

The Third World organizations at UMass have continued the example set by Woodson. The Third World Affairs Office, the African-American Society, the Malcolm X Center, and The Duke Ellington Series Committee have provided month-long programming in celebration of Black History Month.

The information provided by these organizations gave proper recognition to black achievers in the past, honored those in our community, inspired those striving today and served as a model for the future.

As the month concludes, we hope a presentation of black history succeeded in giving students the knowledge to fill gaps left by the selective proffering of American hsitory in American society.

A couple of Odd Couplers

Bob Conte

There was something striking, almost riveting, about the tall and slender woman beside me in the check cashing line. She was wearing a dirty grey sweatshirt over a pair of baggy khakis, and her plunging ash blonde hair was topped by a faded blue baseball cap. When she turned to ask to borrow my pen, I saw that it was a rumpled old New York Mets cap, and that her piercing eyes were of the same icy blue. I noticed a red, hand-lettered button pinned to her sweatshirt, and my heart skipped a beat when I saw that it read "la forta del destin."

"Felix Unger said that, didn't he?" I asked casually, though I knew that he did.

Her eyes brightened with surprise. "Yes, he did."

I eagerly examined her casual, dime store elegance. "Do you always dress like Oscar Madison?"

She looked away for a second as the red ran to her cheeks. "Only on the Mets' game days," she answered through an embarrassed giggle. "They were Oscar's favorite sins, you know."

I turned for a moment to catch my breath. Of course I knew. I knew everything about Felix Unger and Oscar Madison. And all my life I'd been searching for that special someone who shared my wonderful obsession with the Odd Couple. Most girls laughed at me, or pitied me. Some thought me deranged. But here was this Madonna, this goddess, this Venus in khakis and sweat socks who carried the wisdom of Felix Unger on her chest.

A playful smile spread across her full, lovely lips as she hawked her wad of bubble gum to the floor. "Betcha don't know who Nunzio Abruzzi was."

I hesitated a second before answering. I didn't want to appear too cocky. "He's the cabdriver who drove Felix around Manhattan all night when Oscar needed to be alone to write his book."

Her jaw fell in joyful shock. She stared at the floor and absently shuffled her feet as she stammered her words. "I...I've never met...I've never met anyone who knew who Nunzio Abruzzi was before."

"Neither have I."

She gazed up at me and our eyes met and locked. She spoke in soft, measured tones. "How about...Harvey Faffner?"

"The guy's plumber, of course."

"What two awards did Felix win in high school?"

"Most Limber Boy and Most Likely To Interrupt."

She looked confused, almost awed, as she raised her hand to her forehead. I reached to touch her cheek, but she quickly moved away to cash her check. Her breezy, leggy stride suggested the quiet charm of Gloria Unger, and the confident grace of Nancy Cunningham, all wrapped around the simmering sensuality of Crazy Rhoda Zimmerman. I cashed my check and ran to catch her before she started up the escalator.

"They're having lasagna and french fries in the dining commons tonight."

"Oscar's favorite meal!"

"And they'll probably have a good dessert..."

"Because it's Monday..."

"And Monday is..."

"Felix's baking day," we whispered in breathless unison.

"Would you join me," I asked.

"Love to."

I watched in silent rapture as she mashed her lasagna, french fries, stewed prunes, and chocolate pudding into a pulpy lump before digging in with both fists.

"You eat just like Oscar," I cooed.

She stared grimly at her plate. "It doesn't look right. It needs something green."

I grabbed a handful of peas and ground them deep into the glutinous mass, and she mumbled a drippy "thank you" as our eyes met again.

"I think we should go away," I said, taking her hand.

"Where?" she whispered, wiping her mouth on her sleeve.

"To Manhattan. To 1049 Park Avenue..."

"Yes, Apartment C-3! And we can walk Murray the Cop's beat is Central Park, and eat in Oscar's favorite restaurants down at the docks..."

"And visit Felix's photography studio. And we can stop in Absenville where Oscar married Blanche..."

She suddenly dropped her fork to the floor as her eyes narrowed and darkened. "No! Absolutely not! No Absenville, and no Blanche!"

"Oh, Blanche was all right..."

She pounded her tray with her fist and stood, fuming, over me. "Blanche was all right?! How can you say that Blanche was all right? That bitch ruined Oscar and you know it! He was a good, loving man and she ruined him!" She reached for her cap and turned to leave.

"Hey, come on, I didn't mean it."

"I'm sorry, but if you think that Blanche was all right, then we have nothing more to discuss." She looked scornfully down at me. "And I thought you were different." She turned and skulked away.

I finished my dinner alone and remembered that "la forta del destin" means "the power of fate."

Letters

Reporter was negative

We were apalled to see your article entitled "Third World Group Quits Women's Week" on the front page of Monday's Collegian (2/23). As some of the organizers of this year's International Women's Week, we have many reactions and responses that we feel need to be made to the Third World Women's Task Force. However, the Collegian is not the place to make those responses. Instead, we are writing this letter in order to respond to the Collegian's approach to covering International Women's Week.

When Ann Kirby came to our meeting last Wednesday, we tried to explain to her why we felt the Collegian should not be covering this struggle. Without minimizing the importance of the issues raised by the Task Force, these issues are internal issues which need to be dealt with within the context of the planning committee and not in a public forum such as the Collegian.

In these times of rising conservatism it is important to maintain as much unity as possible without constantly falling apart over internal debates and struggles. The progressive community needs to deal with its own problems, without losing sight of the larger issues that threaten all of us and over which we should be able to unite, in word if not in action.

The role of the Collegian should be as a voice through which our various movements can gain publicity and support, and not a tool for spreading divisiveness. If, as Ann Kirby insists, the public wants to know about International Women's Week there is a great deal to tell them about—its history, its focus, the more than twenty-five workshops lectures and panels which will be included. Instead, Kirby chose to publicize the negative aspects of our organization, once again playing up our failings without any recognition of the many positive aspects of the week as planned.

We hope that in the future the Collegian will be somewhat more responsible in the way it covers political issues. We also hope that Ann Kirby will attend some of our "several workshops, films and entertainment" and, hopefully, reach a better understanding of the nature of political struggles—both internal and external—and the role that the press should responsibly play in them.

Squatters' Rights

Reading the front page story "Co-ed johns banned" (Collegian 2/23), we were curious to know how many of those complaining parents raised their children in a household where there were separate bathrooms for males and females. College students are considered adults, and we believe it is up to the students to make the decisions which concern their lifestyles. They obviously did make this decision back in 1971, as Denis Madsen, vice-chancellor for student affairs, so conveniently pointed out.

Those who waste their thoughts on the "evils" of co-ed bathrooms are escaping from reality. Single-sex living is not a true-to-life situation. At some time in our lives, most of us will be living with members of the opposite sex. However, those people who want single-sex bathrooms belong in single-sex dormitories.

If the plan is put into effect, who will enforce it? What we will see next is an army of "bathroom monitors," enforcing truth, justice and the sexist way!

Will President Reagan destroy financial aid? Will UMass students be able to afford to continue their education? We should concern ourselves with more important matters such as these. There is an obsession with the thought of a pair of feet pointing in the opposite direction in the adjacent stall. The amount of time one spends in a bathroom on a daily basis is trivial.

We pay to live in these dorms. Why should we be inconvenienced due to someone's overly-prudish parents? We plan to continue using our coed facilities—rules or no rules. This inane issue lends support to the popular notion, If it makes sense, it can't be UMass.

Coolidge
11th floor (co-ed)

Arguments of convenience aside, the recent controversy and concern of the question of co-ed bathroom area in dormitories brought back some unpleasant and not easily forgotten memories. I'd like to share them with you.

As time travelled senior here at the University I've been shuttled out of classes I've wanted and locked into classes I cared less about. I've met all types, I've had all types of experiences, I've aged from all of the red tape. However, no experience has taught me more than the experience of co-ed bathrooms in the Baker Resident Hall in the Central Living Area.

Weeks upon weeks would go by before these bathrooms were cleaned. Every weekend was a new adventure in seeing how many curtains could be ripped off the stalls—without replacement. The use of these bathrooms became a nauseating experience for me. The fear that a male would walk in on me at any time became a reality more times than I care to recall. The embarrassment I'felt when I had friends stay with me on weekends was compounded by these intrusions and unclean conditions.

To say that "no student should have to climb a flight of stairs" to use a facility is to completely ignore conditions found on many floors of dormitories on this campus. I climbed that flight, willingly, to take a quiet shower and a worry-free bathroom trip.

Why subject males and females to dual sex bathrooms? Some people may care less about this condition. The choice, I agree, is ultimately up to the students living in the resident hall. However, it is extremely important to tell them about the bad side of the issue as well as the good. Most students, you might find, wouldn't mind that extra flight of stairs.

Marie Simpson
Sunderland

I am writing to you about the highly controversial decision to de-co-ed the dormitory bathrooms. I am a Resident Assistant in one of the five high rise dorms in Southwest. The administration has asked our staff to come up with a plan to implement such a system.

Seeing that there is only one bathroom per floor, that means the only option available to us is to alternate floors from male bathroom floor to female bathroom floor.

What this means is that women from my floor will have to walk up one set of stairs to go to the bathroom or to shower. The corridors between these floors are constantly in darkness due to non-replacement of broken or burnt out lights, and are often littered with broken glass.

In today's society, where violence against women is such a major problem, the administration is asking me to force the women on my floor to climb these unlit, dangerous stairways, sometimes clad only in bathrobes, to use a public facility. I consider this an unnecessary risk to take, and personally will not adhere to it until such time that the administration comes up with a safe, workable plan of it's own. Also, I strongly urge other Resident Assistants in the towers to do the same, to protect the safety of those you live with.

Bob Lue, R.A.

Print opposing views

Last Wednesday (2/18) a letter was printed in the Collegian condemning the "ceaseless heterosexual blizzard" in the media. In response to this I wrote a letter to the Collegian expressing an opposing point of view. Some over-the-phone editing made my letter "printable" by your standards, and I anxiously waited for its printing. The letter never appeared. Furthermore, no other response to the original letter has appeared to date.

I can only interpret this omission as an ENDORSEMENT of the point of view expressed in the first letter, and suppression of any and all opposing views. I doubt anyone would miss your wormout left wing clutter and half-assed attempts at humor if you devoted more of your op/ed page to a more balanced set of viewpoints. For instance, instead of rehring back-to-back editorials about the presence of the Trident manufacturer on campus, you could have given the opinion of an engineer who takes real courses at this school with the hope of working for such a firm. You lend space to every conceivable left/wing and/or minority group and allow their often foolish propaganda to go unchallenged. Why not print some opposing views as well? If the Collegian is to liffer a public forum, it should express more than just the narrow-minded views of left-over radicals from the sixties.

By the way, the printing of the two NUMMO News letters in Monday's Collegian is an excellent start.

Floating around in my isolation tank the other day, it occurs to me that past University spring concerts have offered only raucousness and unhealthfulness to concert goers, and the administration's notion that disallowing riot-inciting popular bands would effect a remedy begins to make sense.

Eric Janszen

As the two bites I'd earlier taken out of a small block of mescaline work their way into the frontal lobes, the logic of a soft-talent-only policy becomes clear: If only mellow bands are permitted to perform, nobody will go to the concert; therefore, order and salubrity will prevail.

Here in my tank, I am starting to see their point of view.

Suddenly, I am transported to the stadium where the concert is being held. It is a bright spring day, warm breezes trill through giant conifers and tree-ferns, flattening a field of grassy sphenopsids in waves.

A large lizard trudges by me on a hill at the edge of a clearing. Startled by a roar of good-natured barking and clapping, I look to the stadium where a medium-sized crowd of Australopithecus sits watching The Foreign Objects and drinking Budweiser.

Altered fiats

Then I am inside the Student Union. Students bustle down the main corridor, some stopping at the candy counter to buy a Boston Globe or a Hershey bar. It occurs to me that if the candy counter were turned into a shop that sells UMass mugs, tee-shirts and sports pendants, like the University Store, then students wouldn't have to walk all the way downstairs to buy trite souvenirs as presents every time it's their brother's or sister's birthday.

A pterosaur winging its way past the window catches my eye, and when I look back the candy counter is gone. In its place is a slick, plate glass and stained wood structure, out of which Dryopithecus leap clutching football pendants. I stop one of them to ask what a pterosaur is doing flying around the cenozoic era. "Hell," he grunts, "anything can happen in these pliocene times."

Next I am sitting in front of Leach House thinking about Mr. Leach, wondering if he got a job and moved out of his parents' house before he turned thirty, and needing to see a man about a horse. Stepping inside the dormitory, I make for a door marked "restroom." Not sure if it's for men or women, I gently nudge the door open.

There's a flash. Grunts and growls fill the room. A Pliopitheous brushes her teeth with a branch in front of a broken mirror while a male urinates in the corner. Peering around the wall, I see steam billowing from shower stalls stuffed with humping apes. Hah! Just as I thought, I think. These bathrooms should be made single-sex!

But then a truck rumbles by below. I blink, and the vision of apes gives way to the form of an adult, female homo sapien brushing her teeth over a sink while another students talks to her about how his father had majored in physics when he attended the University.

Then I was lying on my basement floor with my head against the isolation tank. A friend was slapping my wet face.

"Eric, are you back, are you with us?"

"Ya, I'm all right," I said, recovering consciousness. "How'd the experiment go? What did I say?"

"You blacked out for a while," he said. "Before that you were yelling something about your 'job' and your 'responsibility to taxpayers and trustees and parents.' You kept hollering about 'responsibility' and 'authority,' and about tearing your clothes off and running with a pack of wild dogs over the Equestrian Club for lunch.

"It was getting pretty wierd, so I pulled you out."

"Ugh," I said.

Budget cuts sought

By GLENN RITT
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Federal Reserve acted yesterday to further tighten the nation's money growth, and its chairman embraced President Reagan's budget-cutting program "with all the ardor I can bring to bear." Later, Reagan ordered his aides to cut $3 billion to $6 billion more from the 1982 budget.

Paul Volcker's endorsement of the presidential package cast aside concerns that the chief executive and the independent central bank might clash over anti-inflation strategy. Instead, Volcker told Congress that any attempt to whittle Reagan's proposals would only worsen the economy.

"The president has made a recommendation for spending cuts that are more massive than anything we have seen before," Volcker told the Senate Banking Committee. "I support that with all the ardor I can bring to bear."

But Volcker did caution that the administration risks raising hopes too high by promising dramatically lower inflation and interest rates soon after Congress enacts the proposals.

"I don't want to encourage overwhelmingly optimistic expectations," he said.

King, cabinet disagree

By JANE ANDERSON
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Massachusetts Gov. Edward J. King's cabinet secretaries yesterday asked the congressional delegation to fight for federal programs for Massachusetts despite King's reported support for Reagan's budget cuts.

King and six cabinet secretaries met with all the Massachusetts representatives and senators except Rep. Edward J. Markey.

The secretaries reported on how Massachusetts will be affected by cutbacks in federal funds for certain programs, and asked the delegation to fight the reductions.

After they spoke, Sen. Paul E. Tsongas, referring to a newspaper story quoting King as saying he strongly supported the Reagan budget, asked King how he accounted for the difference between his secretaries' reports and his own position.

According to several delegation members who asked not to be identified, King was unable to explain why he is generally supporting Reagan's proposal when his cabinet secretaries are against it.

Rep. Silvio O. Conte, ranking minority member of the House Appropriations Committee, said President Reagan told him King strongly supports the Reagan budget.

"It was an utterly amazing event," said a delegation member."I haven't been to anything like that for a long time. We're going to get more than our share of cuts in Massachusetts, the secretaries say they (the cuts) will devastate Massachusetts and King is for the cuts!"

Another delegation member described the tone of the meeting as "the venting of frustration on the part of the delegation. Here's the governor saying he supports the cuts and we're hearing that there are 20 programs that are absolutely essential to Massachusetts."

A third delegation member said, "It seemed to some of us that we were being given a dipsy-doodle. Publicly the governor is saying he supports the budget, but then he's calling us together asking that we fight for programs."

A fourth member said he did not want to embarrass King by criticizing him, but he also was not clear about what the governor's position was.

King has said he favors Reagan's efforts to trim federal spending except in two programs: low income energy assistance and weatherization.

But many other cutbacks, including those in mass transit, coastal zone management, food stamps, Medicaid, and the Comprehensive Employment Training Act, will also have an effect on Massachusetts.

Toxic waste cleanup stalled

By ANDREW SCHNEIDER
Associated Press

CONCORD, N.H. — The cleanup of poisonous and explosive chemicals from 23 toxic waste dumps across the country has been stalled or halted because of a lack of federal money, government officials said yesterday.

The sites, in 11 states, have been called the "most serious toxic health hazards in the country" by the Environmental Protection Agency and federal emergency cleanup money had been used to remove toxic material and contaminated water and soil from the areas.

"There are 23 sites where (emergency) cleanups have been halted or curtailed by a lack of money," said an EPA spokeswoman. "We're told we can resume cleanup at those toxic dumps, when and if Superfund money is released."

The decision on the future of Superfund and EPA's emergency cleanup funds will be guided by the Office of Management and Budget.

"There isn't any decision yet on what will happen," said Dave Gibbons, chief of environmental affairs for OMB. "But I have no reason to believe Superfund is dead or an emergency allocation is out of the question, but many things have to be sorted out."

OMB Director David Stockman was a strong critic of Superfund, the $1.6 billion fund designated to decontaminate many of the 8,500 potential toxic dumps on EPA'S growing list.

Supporters of the legislation, in and out of government, fear Stockman will use his position as OMB director to weaken the legislation.

Gibbons said OMB is well aware of the cleanup halt and is "confident that we will resolve the issue in the near future, but a lot of legal issues must be resolved first."

On Feb. 13, which many regional EPA officials and contractors are calling "Black Friday," telegrams were sent to those responsible for cleaning the 23 sites notifying them that the money had run out. Some operations were eliminated, others were greatly reduced, EPA said.

"It's really painfully simple — there's no more cleanup money available," said Paul Keough off EPA's New England regional office. "We're operating under the assumption that at some point, there will be money made available but this is an era of financial cutbacks and we're doing the best we can with what we have."

EPA's best is not good enough for some local officials, such as Barry Muller, who is heading the cleanup of Rhode Island's largest dump in Coventry.

of Public Utilities and now they're shielding the average consumer with the fuel adjustment clause. And we can't do anything about it," Fonseca said.

Close to 2 p.m., after the hearings had been in session for almost four hours, Rep. Collins announced the House Ways and Means committee had rejected the Governor's $413.1 million budget request and would offer a bill postponing their ascendency to power until 90 days after the new chancellor had been chosen.

The new chancellor will act as an intermediary between the Regents and the legislature and will help to direct the individual campus boards of trustees and campus chancellors. The Regents have been interviewing applicants for the position and are expected to announce their recommendations to Gov. Edward J. King for his approval during the next two weeks.

Also, with the legislation recently filed by the Governor, the Regents would be able to set the salary of the new chancellor themselves.

The salary, under present law is $54,000. The Regents claim comparable states pay similar positions about $70,000 to $75,000.

According to one student who has been active not only in the State House lobbying student interests, but also working with the Regents interviewing applicants for the new chancellor's position, the Regents may indeed lose their unilateral control over the Commonwealth's educational facilities.

"The Regents should not expect to get complete fiscal autonomy with this legislative session," Ronald Keefe, UMass-Amherst student and College Association of United Students for Education (Cause) President, said yesterday.

Keefe said yesterday's rejection of the Regent's budget was a particular indicator of the change that is likely to come in the legislature, the Regents power and the accountability of the educational system.

UMass assistant coach Steve Jefferson couldn't agree more. Over the years, Jefferson had worked with both Legare and Ready, drilling them, refining the raw skill, and he wasn't hiding his emotion.

"I'll miss them," Jefferson said. "They're my kids, what can I say? And there's no better two kids in our division when they play their size — the way they played tonight. Nobody works harder than those two. Nobody."

And, there was the boss. She had worn her maroon suit for the occasion. She stood there in the hallway of the Cage and talked about her two captains.

"It's a tremendous feeling of loss to know that Ginger and Julie played their last game here tonight," said UMass head coach Mary Ann Ozdarski. "But it's also a feeling of accomplishment. When you look at women's basketball at Massachusetts, when you look at the growth, and when you look at these two kids, you can see why we're proud."

The two captains were still down on the floor, taking down the nets while their coach was talking.

"You know," Ozdarski began. "It's the old cliche, but it's true. We'll miss them as basketball players..."

Ozdarski paused and looked around one last time, as if for her two captains.

"But we'll miss them even more as people."

So will we all.

Strike date has been set

By DAVE O'HARA
AP SPORTS WRITER

TAMPA, FLA. AP—Major League baseball players, convinced that club owners' demands for compensation "would cut the free agency system,"voted yesterday to strike May 29 unless the controversial issue can be resolved.

The players association executive board comprised of representatives of all 26 major league clubs voted unanimously in favor of baseball's second regular strike since 1972 during a three-hour meeting with Executive Director Marvin Miller.

"The battle lines are more or less drawn," said Baltimore third baseman Doug DeCinces, the association's American League representative.

"Hopefully, we will have some legitimate negotiations,"DeCinces added. "Today was a procedural step to keep our options open. We're trying to avoid a strike.

"We do not want to strike but we're being forced to."

"I think everybody in the end is going to be hurt by this," National League representative Bob Boone of the Philadelphia Phillies said. "The main issue in this is freedom, freedom granted by the U.S. Constitution, freedom to select employment rights.

Sen. Kennedy raps Reagan's education cuts

Associated Press

BOSTON — Federal budget cuts must be made in funding nuclear power projects, oil industry subsidies and commodities tax shelters instead of in education, Sen. Edward M. Kennedy said yesterday, attacking what called the Reagan administration's "19th Century budget."

"When schools in Boston and every major city are in deep fiscal trouble, we cannot afford deep federal cuts in aid to education," the Massachusetts Democrat said at the annual meeting of the National Association of Independent Schools.

"If this administration can understand inflation when it comes to missiles and submarines, then it should be capable of understanding inflation when it comes to the cost of educating our children."

"It is in such areas that sensible budget reductions can and must be made," Kennedy said, referring to nuclear power, subsidies and shelters.

"We must cut there instead of cutting $2 billion from elementary and secondary education. We must cut there instead of cutting $1.5 billion from lunch programs that serve 14 million school children...

"The erosion of support for education has now reached Washington and the very center of national power. In conscience and by conviction, none of us who care about our schools can be silent.

"They're proposing a 19th Century budget. I favor budget reductions wherever they make economic and human sense..

"Education never has been a special interest. Yet, while aid for schools has been cut and cut sharply in the proposed budget, billions of dollars worth of subsidies will continue for privileged interests that are special in the truest sense of the word."

Kennedy said $4.6 billion in federal subsidies for the oil industry were not cut, and major oil companies "have already reaped tens of billions of dollars in higher profits from the policy of oil price decontrol."

He was interrupted by applause after saying: "If sacrifice is fair that takes from low income families struggling to rise from poverty, if sacrifice is fair that takes from middle income families struggling to educate their children, then I say that fair sacrifice must also take from oil companies whose only struggle is to count their enormous profits."

Nearly 200 people marched around the federal courts building in Cleveland yesterday afternoon protesting the trial of Demjanjuk, accused of being a Nazi camp guard during World War II. Most of the marchers were from the Ukrainian community there, and object to evidence from Soviet sources being used in the trial, now in its third week. AP Laserphoto

Brezhnev supports Castro against "anti-Cuban" claims

Associated Press

MOSCOW — Soviet President Leonid I. Brezhnev met with Cuban President Fidel Castro on yesterday and pledged complete Soviet support in the face of an "anti-Cuban campaign" by Washington — a clear reference to U.S. charges of Cuban aid to Salvadoran leftists.

"In present conditions, when the U.S. imperialists have launched another anti-Cuban campaign, the U.S.S.R., as before, is siding with socialist Cuba," Brezhnev told Castro, the official Soviet news agency Tass reported.

Their meeting, on the fourth day of the 26th Soviet Communist Party Congress, came amid sharp verbal exchanges between Moscow and Washington over alleged Soviet bloc arming of anti-government guerrillas in the Central American nation of El Salvador.

Washington has accused Cuba specifically of being a conduit for weapons, and President Reagan's administration has hinted of possible direct actions against Castro's government unless the flow of arms ceases.

El Salvador was not specifically mentioned in the Tass account, but Brezhnev's emphatic expression of solidarity with Castro suggested it was discussed.

On Wednesday, a Kremlin spokesman denied U.S. allegations that the Soviet Union was helping arm the Salvadoran guerrillas.

"The Soviet Union does not provide El Salvador with arms, has not and will not," spokesman Leonid Zamyatin told reporters covering the party congress.

Mass. State Senate urges against aid to El Salvador

BOSTON — The Massachusetts Senate has urged President Ronald Reagan to withdraw further support for the military junta in troubled El Salvador.

Sen. Jack H. Backman, DBrookline, sponsored the resolution which he said was transmitted to Washington Thursday. Adopted by the Senate Feb. 5, it called for "a cessation of further violence and for establishment of human rights in El Salvador."

The resolution declared that "direct and indirect United States intervention will lead to serious regional warfare, increasing the already acute suffering of the majority of the citizens of that embattled nation."

AP-NBC poll says Americans back Reagan's budget cuts

NEW YORK (AP) — Americans overwhelmingly support most of President Reagan's economic proposals, even though they say his planned spending cuts will hurt the poor and help the wealthy, a new Associated Press-NBC News poll says.

But the public is not particularly optimistic the President's "economic renewal plan" will actually tame inflation or get the nation's economy back on track. Only 31 percent of those polled said it was very likely that the plan would get the economy going again.

Four out of five Americans had heard or read about Reagan's economic proposals unveiled Feb. 18 in an appearance before a joint session of Congress, according to the poll conducted Monday and Tuesday.

Two major elements of Reagan's plan — a $41 billion cut in federal spending and a 10 percent cut in income tax rates for each of three years — got overwhelming backing.

Administration defends sale of fighter planes to Israel

WASHINGTON (AP) — The administration asserted yesterday its proposed $2.18 billion in military and economic assistance to Israel next year is essential to counter "aggressive Soviet expansionist policies" in the Mideast.

"If a just peace between Israel and its neighbors is to be achieved, Israel must enjoy a sense of real security and national confidence," said Morris Draper, deputy assistant secretary of state for Near Eastern and South Asian affairs, in testimony to a House Foreign Affairs subcommittee.

Draper and other officials declined to comment about reports that the administration was inclined to approve selling Israel additional F-15 jets, to offset Israeli concern over sales of the sophisticated craft to Saudi Arabia. They said this issue would be dealt with at a closed briefing later by James F. Buckley, undersecretary of state for security assistance.

Democrats oppose Reagan's across-the-board cut in taxes

WASHINGTON (AP) — Democrats on the sharply divided congressional Joint Economic Committee concluded yesterday that President Reagan's proposed across the board tax cut would worsen inflation, and recommended instead a new credit to offset higher Social Security taxes.

Committee Republicans warmly endorsed the Reagan program and called for immediate action by the Federal Reserve Board to tighten further the money supply, even though that likely would keep interest rates high for the time being.

Hazardous waste suit brought against Canton lab owners

BOSTON (AP) — Admitting the defendants have started corrective action, state officials have filed suit for alleged hazardous waste violations against Tobe Deutschmann Sr. and Tobe Deutschmann Jr., and the Tobe Deutschmann Laboratories Inc. involving three Canton properties.

The defendants were accused yesterday of improper disposal of "PCB's" (polychlorinated biphenyls) which has contaminated the soil and groundwater at Indian Line and Tokarzewke farms and at the firm's laboratories.

The attorney general's statement said that the defendants instituted corrective action when directed by the DEQE.

But it added:

"A lawsuit is necessary to assure that future actions — assessments of the extent of the problem and taking steps to remedy it — are undertaken under DEQE supervision."

Anthony D. Cortese, commissioner of the Department of Environmental Quality Engineering (DEQE), emphasized that Canton's drinking water supply has not been contaminated "and is safe for human consumption."

Faculty to look into academic priorities

By STEVE DALY
Collegian Correspondent

After an angry demand by Presiding Officer David Booth that "this matter is to be acted upon today," the Faculty Senate unanimously approved yesterday the establishment of an Academic Priorites Council.

The council will advise the administration on the growth, stabilization, and reduction of academic programs, as well as matters of long range academic planning and priority.

Booth's comment was in response to the suggestion of a member of the senate to postpone voting on the council until the issue of "retrenchment" could be further studied.

Retrenchment refers to the University's policy when imposing faculty cutbacks.

"Retrenchment is not involved in any way," said Booth.

The council will include faculty members representing all schools and colleges of the University, two undergraduate students, one graduate student, the provost, three chairpersons from other councils of the Faculty Senate, and a representative of the Massachusetts Socist of Professors (the faculty union).

In other business, the Faculty Senate, after much discussion, approved by a 26 to 21 vote a motion that requests the administration to "take all necessary steps to secure the removal of all non emergency vehicles from campus walkways."

The motion forms a long term part of the Campus Landscape Improvement Project, and is designed to bring forth broad support on the campus, said Richard Minear, secretary of the Campus Physical Planning Committee.

The Senate also unanimously approved five international exchange agreements. The agreements are with the University of Linkoping in Sweden; the Swedish Fulbright Commission; Carleton University in Ottawa, Ontario, Peking Normal University; and the International Student Exchange Program at Georgetown University.

A Space and Calender Committee motion to include January 29 as a registration day in the 1981-82 Academic Calender was unanimously passed.

This move satisfies the technical requirements of the Veterans Administration for allowing Veterans Benefits to continue without interruption in January.

The Space and Calender Committee will formulate a definitive policy on Labor Day and a 14 week fall semester. Reports will be forthcoming, said Faculty Senate Secretary Paul Jennings.

The Rules Committee presented to the Senate a special report on the proposed merger of UMass-Boston and Boston State College. According to Sylvia Forman, chairperson of the committee, the report is intended to inform senators about the proposed merger in preparation for next week's special meeting to be held March 5.

The special meeting will deal almost exclusively with the merger proposal, Booth said.

Chancellor Henry Koffler responded to the expressed outrage of Senator R. Clinton Fuller at the national publicity over the coed bathroom issue, by stating that "it is a high priority on my agenda to improve the public image of this university."

Third World women face extra burden

By ANNE KIRBY
Collegian Correspondent

Minority women, by nature of their ethnic group and sex, sometimes face a double burden.

"Third World women are oppressed twice," said Patricia Rissmeyer, Crampton dormitory head of residence in the Southwest Residential Area. It is idealistic to think that women can unite on all issues, she said.

As individuals there are many different needs and interests facing women, she said. Third World women are oppressed by Third World men, white women and white men. "I don't think everyone thinks of that," said Rissmeyer.

Joyce Berkman, a history department professor who teaches a class in women's history said the matter concerning Third World women and white women within feminism is one that requires "patient communication."

It can and does work," she said. One of the problems, she said, is that society pits minorities against one another. There is competition for goods and services.

Berkman said it is crucial that bonds be formed between white and Third World women. She said she would like to see some of these issues discussed in the forums of International Women's Week.

Looking at the situation from a historical perspective, Cheryl Shain, head of residence in Johnson dormitory in Northeast Residential Area said traditionally black women have had a double burden and have had to work twice as hard as white women to be recognized. She said white women should be "extra sensitive" to the needs of minority women.

Although white women have been oppressed they are still white and still part of the racist system, Shain said. Black women have two problems to deal with, they are black and they are women, she said.

Proposed bargaining group to represent UM low-level management employees

By JOSEPH BARETT
Collegian Staff

About 100 low level management employees yesterday met in the Campus Center in an attempt to generate interest in a new campus union.

The union, which would be called the Union of Professional Employees (UPE), would represent between 450 to 600 university employees not already organized.

"We feel extremely vulnerable as we are one of the only large groups of employees in the public education sector unprotected by the bargaining power of a union," said UPE spokeswoman Dale Melcher.

Melcher said that in light of higher education reorganization and Proposition 2½, these employees feel more threatened than ever. "When the University might need to cut, we're the only place that can be cut easily. We're unprotected, unlike the faculty and the clerical workers," Melcher said.

Melcher said that the proposed union represents a wide range of employees. "My guess is that there are close to 500 employees who would benefit from this, although we are a hard group to define," Melcher added that this was because there is a high turnover of professionals here at UMass, and blamed this on the lack of staff development, clear salary structure or aversse for job advancement. Melcher added she had worked for the University for seven years and still made the same salary.

"With a union we could get some kind of job security and the salary structure we feel we deserve," Melcher said. "We need a cost of living salary, not one in which raises are determined solely on merit." Melcher said currently a raise would have to come out of an already budgeted account, making this a virtual impossibility.

> "We feel extremely vulnerable as we are one of the only large groups of employees...unprotected by the bargaining power of a union."
> —UPE Spokeswoman Dale Melcher

Melcher said the goal is to gain a "collective voice" to bargain with, stressing that employees might need this voice to bargain not only with UMass, but with the Commonwealth as well.

"With the Board of Regents, the Commonwealth is who we eventually will have to be able to bargain with, and we're going to need an organization behind the voice," Melcher said. She added that to become a recognized bargaining group they would need support of 30 percent of the people they wish to represent.

"We're trying to get at least 50 percent of the employees to sign with us; we want to know that we have the support when we go to the unionizing stage," Melcher said.

"We were very pleased with today's turnout," Melcher said, "and I think we realize that the time has come for us to unionize."

Speakers rap racism/sexism in the movies

By LISA PEDULLA
Collegian Correspondent

Speaking on race and sex stereotypes in films, a film-maker for Third World Newsreel said, "Institutional racism is the fundamental issue," at a discussion held in 102 Thompson Hall at the University of Massachusetts Wednesday night.

Using the stereotyping of Orientals in films as an example, Christine Choy said, "Films don't create the image of the typical Oriental person." She said in a number of films, such as "Fu Manchu," "Charlie Chan" and "Kung Fu," Oriental actors weren't even used for leading roles.

Joining Choy in the second panel discussion in a series on racism and sexism were Pearl Bowser and Greta Shiller. Bowser, of the Third World News Reel in New York, said the black woman is rarely portrayed as a heroine or winner. Bowser said, "Independent black films are a reflection of the racism and sexism in the cinema."

Shiller, who is currently working with the October Fourteenth Film Festival group, spoke about the current wave of films concerning gay people.

Shiller said, "We shouldn't expect commercial cinema to represent oppressed groups," but we should turn to people to represent their own lives."

As part of her presentation Shiller showed clips from the movie "Greetings from Washington D.C." She is one of four filmmakers working on the film which documents the gay march on Washington D.C. last year.

Professor Jerry Kearns, of the UMass Art department, has put together an exhibit entitled "Racism and Sexism: Same Game Different Name!" at the Fine Arts Center. Accompanying the exhibit is a four part symposium dealing with sex and race stereotypes in Hollywood films.

Kearns said he has been aware of various groups opposed to racism and sexism for some time. He first brought them together for a radio program on WBAI in New York. The exhibit at the Fine Arts Center was organized last summer and made possible with aid from the Graduate Student Senate, the Fine Arts Council, and the Fine Arts Center Committee.

Exhibit combats racism/sexism

By TERRI BROWN
Collegian Correspondent

The Racism/Sexism exhibit being shown through March 20 at the Fine Arts Center Gallery presents angry political and emotional statements regarding sexual and racial exploitation in America.

Sponsored by the University Arts Council, the exhibit is being shown in conjunction with a Racism/Sexism symposium now taking place on campus. Through a wide variety of mediums, including videotape and photography, the presentation attempts to expose ways in which the public is bombarded with harmful stereotypical images. It also shows through articles and other means the struggles which have taken place to remove these influences.

Because all the topics in this exhibit are so important to the implementation of equality in America, it is worthwhile to see it. Unfortunately, a very confused presentation of material detracts from the impact which could be made. Also, there is too heavy an emphasis on the use of articles as displays. There is a tremendous potential though, which shines through some of the work.

Much of the exhibit focuses on the demonstrations against the movie, Fort Apache. It is criticized for giving a negative impression of Puerto Ricans and blacks. Other issues covered are pornography and violence, as well as government responsibility in perpetuating exploitative practices.

Jewish writers. Myra Shelov of the Encyclopedia Judaica said, are beginning to raise their heads within the women's movement. She said she feels there is a need to educate people about Jewish culture and history to combat anti-semitism. Anti-semitism is on the rise both nationally and internationally, she said, and exists within the feminist movement as well.

The Jewish culture needs recognition,

Five people, even Jews, are aware of the role Jewish women played in the resistance movements, she said.

During the labor movement of the 30's and 40's Jewish women were very active, she said. Chela Sandoz, the woman who put forward the proposal that March 8 be declared International Women's Day was a Jewish socialist. There have been attacks on Jewish women from the right, she said referring to a recent article written about the right in "Ms.," a Jewish Feminist magazine.

Lack of support endangers D.C.'s kosher meal plan

By PAUL GUEST
Collegian Correspondent

The kosher meal plan at the Hampden Dining Commons may eventually be phased out if there is not enough student support.

"If there aren't enough students, the program would no longer be worthwhile," said Marie Coppedoro, director of Food Services.

The kosher menu at the Hampden D.C. consists of conventional meats such as beef, turkey and chicken, but must be made kosher. To become kosher the food and utensils must be handled under the strict dietary direction of a rabbi, said Coppedoro.

The kosher menu serves the dietary regimen of the orthodox Jews. To be regarded as kosher, the meats and utensils must be boiled. If they come in contact with a dairy product of any sort, they then must go through the process of becoming kosher again, she said.

Every products are totally removed from meats in the kosher diet and are under strict regulations set up by the Jewish community.

The difficulty with the program comes from the cutts of dietary products to students involved. Presently there are about 30 students participating in the program.

"What usually happens is that we'll have about 30 students start out in the program, but then a week later they go back to eating in the regular dining commons," said Coppedoro.

Coppedoro wants everyone to know that this kosher menu is not only for the Jewish people, but for anyone who wishes to participate.

The only revenue received comes from the student rebate only with no special funding from the University. The kosher meal plan runs about $47.50 more than what the normal rebate already cost. For 10 meals a week it goes for $413.50, 14 meals a week $461.50, and for a 19/3 meal plan, $489.50.

YWLL members salute Black History Month

By KAREN MARIE THOMAS
Black Affairs Staff

"A week ago, the policy set forward by Reagan's State of the Union address will lead to the complete domination of the most agressive, racist monopoly in this country," said James Steele, national chairperson of the Young Workers Liberation League last night to an audience of 50 in Thompson Hall.

Steele and fellow YWLL and poet Antar Sudan Katara Mberi joined together in celebration of Black History Month.

Mberi began the evening programming with a dramatic reading of Richard Wright's "Black Hands".

According to Steele, the Reagan Administration's massive cut backs will only serve to recover mass profits for large corporations.

"The hardest hit by his cut backs will be blacks, chicanos hispanics and native Americans. School is out for you," he said.

Steele has served as National Chairperson for the YWLL since 1974. Also a member of the Political Bureau of the Central Committee of the Communist Party, U.S.A., Steele has actively protested against the Vietnam War, the denial of equality and the incarceration of Angela Davis.

Quoting Paul Robeson, Steele said "It is unthinkable that you should travel thousand of miles to fight their friends for their enemies.'

"The problem is not over there, it is right here. Cuba is not cutting off lunch programs, Salvador is not cutting back food stamps.

Steele said that by 1986 the annual military budget will have skyrocketed to [illegible]

"If such a policy is implemented, it will inevitable lead to the military draft," he said.

Steele asked that the youth of America join together in the campaign of unity.

"I believe unity is impossible without a struggle for equality," he said. "It's a cannot be for equality at home and stand against equality in the world."

Following Steele's presentation, Mberi read several selections of poetry. Mberi will host a basic poetry and poetry reading session this afternoon in the Hampden Dining Commons.

Future outlook bleak

February is Black History Month, a time for the celebration and commemoration of the achievements of black Americans. But as of February 1981, the situation for black Americans is anything but good, says Professor Ernest Allen, chairman of the W.E.B. DuBois Department of Afro-American Studies at the University of Massachusetts in Amherst.

"The situation in the 1980s for blacks looks extremely bleak," Allen said. "There is the new wave of conservatism that appears to have swept the country. What is frightening to black Americans is the vigor with which the present administration is moving to cut social services and to rely on the private sector to provide them. Historically, the sector, at least where blacks are concerned, has not been able to provide enough jobs and we end up a substantial part of the army of the unemployed."

Allen is not optimistic that anything much will be done to help blacks through this time of economic hardship and high employment.

"If property rights are put above human rights, as seems to be the current trend both in the domestic and international policy in the Reagan administration, things will be very bad," he said. "But black people are not going to take this sitting down and there will be a struggle. The critical things is that the money cut from social services will have to be put back into police forces, because it is very predictable what will happen. The crime rate is going to go up, because people are not going to go hungry and the jobs do not exist. It's going to be a real mess."

Since life for black Americans is now looking so bleak, Allen said, some black groups want to "politicize" the celebration of Black History Month and make it black liberation month instead. Historically, though, Black History Month (which began to be celebrated as Negro History Week in 1926) has been intended to call national attention to the part blacks have played in American life.

Negro History Week was originated by the prominent black historian Carter Woodson. Woodson was the son of former slaves, who worked his way from coal mining into Harvard University. He formed the Association for the Study of Negro Life and History, which in turn generated numerous publications concerning black life and history.

By the 1920s Woodson began his efforts in 1926, black life and history began to be taken as a serious area of study for historians. Blacks and their contributions found more of a place in history books and academic curricula.

"Both whites and blacks have become involved and interested in Black History Month. One reason is that looking at American history from the underside gives quite a different perspective on it," Allen said. "If you look at the Civil War from the black perspective, it's not just a 'war between the states or an effort to preserve the union, but one intimately involved with the liberation of black folk. The black view of that is different, too. Many black Americans believe they are being held hostage in American society and they wonder when the citizens are going to come for them."

Education about the life of blacks in America may help reduce racial tensions, Allen said, but he is not really optimistic that it will have much effect.

"Education alone cannot deal with the kinds of questions we have here, fundamental questions of power, or the lack of power of black Americans. If those with power are intent on holding it, all the education in the world won't make any difference."

Task force investigates Atlanta death

ATLANTA, (AP) — A black boy found dead in December was added today to the list of slayings and disappearances being investigated by a special police task force, raising the total number of cases to 27.

Public Safety Commissioner Lee Brown said he added the name of 14-year-old Patrick Rogers to the list "after consultation with Cobb County Public Safety Director Robert Hightower," in addition to 26 deaths, the task force is investigating the disappearances of two black boys.

Cobb police said earlier this month that Jay had turned the bike in the Rogers case

Cobb police said earlier this month that Jay had turned the bike in the Rogers case over to the Atlanta task force.

"We don't have any evidence to say he is one of those, but he did live in the right area on the south side of Atlanta, and he's the right age," Cobb Police Capt. Dean Jones said in the case.

Rogers, who lived in southwest Atlanta, was found Dec. 7 in the Chattahoochee River in Cobb County, northwest of the city and outside the Atlanta police jurisdiction.

A T. Hill, chief of detectives in Cobb County, said Rogers died of blow to the head, "enough at this point, we really can't say whether it was a blow by a person or due to a fall or what."

College paper's first woman

New chairman enjoys her job

By ROBIN MANDEL
Collegian Correspondent

Last December, for the first time in 111 years, a woman has been elected chairman of the Amherst College newspaper, The Amherst Student.

Rosanne Haggerty, a member of the third Amherst class to include women, said, "I don't feel disadvantaged being a woman here. The women in the two classes ahead of me were under greater tension than I am because they were part of the transition period."

Haggerty said she doesn't view her job as any sort of significant step for womankind and doesn't carry out her job just in the interest of women.

"I enjoy my work and the challenge of it but I'm not here to prove anything to women. The staff is having fun and I'm trying to make the newspaper a pleasant and enjoyable working experience so that no one minds coming down here," she said.

Haggerty, a junior American Studies major at Amherst College and originally from West Hartford, Conn., was among 30 applicants who applied for the chairmanship.

The applicants had to show the Senior Editorial board their previous accomplishments on the paper, be extensively interviewed and pretend to be chairman for the day. Then, the editorial board elected a new staff, appointing Haggerty as chairman, in December, 1980.

"The Amherst Student, which comes out on Mondays and Thursdays, has undergone quite a few changes since Haggerty took over, she said. There are more in-depth features and for the first time, Haggerty said, there are Third World editors on the staff to contribute a more interesting range of stories for readers.

Haggerty said, "My work isn't as difficult as I had expected it to be. I reread and re-edit articles, develop new approaches to various things and work with the department editors to formulate new ideas for the paper. We all work together and are only responsible for our own positions."

In the past, Haggerty wrote for the paper, was a staff editor and also news editor. Some of her other positions include editor of the Amherst feature magazine, Views, and Editor-In-Chief of The Guide to Fellowships and Internships booklet, published by Amherst College students last year.

After graduating, Haggerty said she will enter the field of journalism and later attend graduate school.

Peace Corps to mark anniversary

By MARK L. CURELOP
Collegian Staff

Today's corps needs scientists with agricultural and other skills

As the Peace Corps approaches its twentieth anniversary, University of Massachusetts recruiters report that UMass has turned out more volunteers than any institution in the country.

One reason is that a good many students are looking for work overseas, said Gilbert Mottla of the Center for Agricultural Studies.

"And to be perfectly frank, you can't get jobs with a B.A. degree or B.S. Peace Corps experience is a stepping stone in a career. You make contacts and gain experience," he said.

Mary E. Taylor, Peace Corps Coordinator for the School of Food, Science and Natural Resources, said that the Corps is looking for students with backgrounds in agriculture, fishery, forestry, nutrition and food science.

"These are big areas for people. Science concentrates in these areas because developing nations are looking for people with specific skills," she said.

The Peace Corps program begins with a basic information meeting, Taylor said. Applications are then processed in Washington, D.C.

"For every one position there are three applicants. It is competitive and the Peace Corps wants people who can pass on skills. For example, not a microbiologist who's never been out of the lab," she said.

Once a prospective candidate accepts a position a three stage training program follows, making "the generalist a specialist," Taylor said.

The training involves applying the learned technology to actual application in a developing nation and its culture, and to prevent culture shock while on assignment.

At the end of the training program, trainees are often given a site assignment without Peace Corps supervision.

"Volunteers usually say they get a lot more out than they put in, in terms of personal growth, understanding and satisfaction," Taylor said.

Though the Peace Corps is a volunteer organization, the United States government pays for a monthly living allowance, she said.

"It depends on the currency of the nation. If you're in an isolated area it's easier to budget because there's nothing to spend it on, but if you're in an urban area it's very easy to spend," she said.

An escrow account of $125 per month is also set up for each candidate. One-third of the money is given upon departure and the other two-thirds upon return to the U.S.

"It's to help the people get set up when they're returning," Taylor said.

The Peace Corp office can be found in Draper Hall Room 12.

Average volunteer has changed since inception

By MARK L. CURELOP
Collegian Staff

Twenty years ago tomorrow, President John F. Kennedy signed the executive order establishing the Peace Corps, intending it to be a group of young men and women to serve as "ambassadors of peace."

Though Kennedy is considered to be the founding father of the Peace Corps, it was Senator Hubert H. Humphrey who in 1957 first called for a "program of national service in an international endeavor" before Washington had even considered such a program.

Kennedy established the Peace Corps Act in 1961, naming Sargent Shriver as chairman of a committee to look into the feasibility of such a program.

Shriver's committee formed three goals of the Peace Corps: to promote world peace and friendship by making available to interested countries Americans willing to serve overseas; to help promote a better understanding of the American people on the part of people served; and to promote a better understanding of other people on the part of the American people.

The first Peace Corps volunteers arrived in Ghana to provide technical services in August, 1961. Today there are 80 thousand Americans serving in 85 developing nations.

According to Agenda, a magazine published by the Agency for International Development, the average Peace Corps volunteer has changed in small ways since 1961.

During the 1960's the volunteer was "young and idealistic," according to the publication, with two thirds of the volunteers teaching English as a second language.

The 1970s began a technical and vocational training period, according to the article. Developing nations provided their own teachers while Peace Corps volunteers acted as consultants to help establish improved agricultural programs.

Health care, reforestation and non-traditional education are priorities for the 1980s.

Though most volunteers were liberal arts majors in the 1960s and 1970s, the Corps are now looking for people with science backgrounds to implement their new goals.

Former Secretary of State Edmund Muskie said in a address at Ann Arbor, Michigan in October of 1980, that "I have rarely spoken to a returned Peace Corps volunteer who did not believe that he or she, in some way had made a contribution — however more modest than their original expectation. And that remains true to today's Peace Corps."

Hofer, UMass English professor and associate Dean of Humanities and Fine Arts, called Oxford "the most civilized four square miles in the world."

"I think it gives the best concentrated opportunity I know for a many splendored occasion," Hofer said.

Studying one thing at a time, totally absorbed in the concentrated study of an artist's work, is how Martha Trudeau, grnduate English student who participated in the program last summer, described studies at Oxford. She cited the direct access to original manuscripts, paintings, sketches and artifacts as the greatest advantage to the program.

Hofer suggests to prospective participants, "if you go that far you should study hard and play hard."

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Out of Control

Three fingers of death

I used to be a camp counselor. The camp was a sprawling wilderness with a field, a lake and, of course, the essential farmhouse. A heady fragrance of pine and sun-baked grass always lingered on the breeze, to welcome the thousand or so children who would spend a piece of their summer there.

The camp has changed over the years, but a couple of things stay the same — like the children, the good food, the monster stories.

In those days, I used to gather statistics just out of curiosity. About one-fourth of the campers could row a boat. Another fourth were bedwetters. Half of the campers could swim. One-third liked to start fights, another third liked to watch, and still another third learned how to run. Roughly one third of the camp population was Black. The list could go on and on, but one thing I noticed was a sure statistic: just about 99 percent of the campers feared Three Fingered Willie.

Steve Masse

This shabby distortion of humanity lost a hand and a couple of fingers in an axe fight, according to legend. He would come by night to raid cabins and steal campers away into the darkness. Wise storytellers would of course kill off Three Fingered Willie in the end, to give a flimsy peace of mind to the campers.

I might have been a counselor, but after such stories, even I had my fears. What if some nut really did raid the camp at night? There were no locks on the cabin doors, the whole slumbering bunch of us were vulnerable. Sure, I was confident in the long history of safety at the camp — but there was always that chance...

The monster story turned real when they started digging up real children in Atlanta. Eighteen black kids killed. One murder at the camp would have the place closed — but we have no way to close Atlanta. Just because Three Fingered Willie is far away in Atlanta doesn't make him any less threatening to us here in New England.

In the monster story, there is never any reason behind Three Fingered Willie's slayings — he is strictly monster, lacking in soul. He kills because he can, because victims are available. One strange fact about the campfire tale is that Three Fingered Willie never commits suicide, no matter what version is told. He is either buried in his collapsing haunting house, or set on fire, or shot, or struck by lightning. There is a man in Atlanta who committed suicide — he was wanted for questioning as a witness in one of the child murder cases — could he be Atlanta's Three Fingered Willie? Somehow we hope so, but at the same time, such false hope could cost more children their lives. Atlanta is under terrorist seige, and there is no guarantee that there is (was) only one Three Fingered Willie. Nor is there any guarantee that Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Chicago, or anywhere else is immune to this syndrome. What's to stop it? Murder doesn't always require a need or a reason to occur. It just needs accessible victims.

The Atlanta killer is a monster, his heart is a cesspool of hatred and confusion, his brain is short-circuited. There is a peculiar notion that because killers need mental help they therefore deserve it — at the victims' and the taxpayers' expense. There are only two cures that are known to be effective when applied to the individual killer. One is to lock up the monster, weld his cage shut and let him live with himself for the remainder of his days. The other, even more effective, is a merciful bullet in the head.

Three Fingered Willie belongs in campfire tales, not in the streets among our vulnerable kids.

Cullen confuses problems' order

In Monday's Collegian Kevin Cullen's column "So what's all the fuss about anyway?" displays an attitude which leads to apathy.

By scorning reform actions at the University (the mini-store boycott) Cullen postures as a holier-than-thou "real issue" commentator. He lists issue after issue, without any analysis or suggested course of action to improve those problems, and lists many issues which are removed from the University and difficult to influence, including many that are enormously complex and would take decades to work out. Cullen superficially injects serious large problems as a reason to ignore a local problem. He should understand that a great many large problems of this world are composed of little local issues adding to large problems.

Often, the most effective way of dealing with large issues is to get going and clean up your own backyard, rather than ignoring the local issue for the sake of vague panaceas. The struggle with indifference, arrogance, or anti-democratic policies, as the mini-store issue represents, is important to help build a more responsive institution, and a more aware and committed community.

Conte down on greed, not engineers

Please allow me to praise Bob Conte for his consistently thought-provoking and humorous columns and to respond to Peter Brown's letter (Collegian of 2/24) which criticized Bob's column of 2/19. Pete missed most every point I think Bob made.

The piece took the form of a monologue in Bob's head. He showed concern for the vocational value of the ComStu major (I know what he's thinking — I'm FoStu). The beginning of the piece paints a tongue-in-cheek stereotype of a materialistic engineer who lacks verbal skills. Bob's column ends in self-criticism, as Bob displays more material preoccupations than he attributed to engineers. If Peter had read Bob's column with more care and had understood what Bob was saying, he might not have gotten so flustered.

What gets me is the irony of Pete's letter. He seems to be Bob's stereotypical engineer.

Pete's English is bad. His second sentence lacks a parallel construction: "I am an engineering student and was extremely annoyed..." Verbal awkwardness is Peter's style throughout the letter. If, as Peter says, technical writing is "highly emphasized" in ME, he has surely been flunking classes.

Peter embraces the materialism that Bob laughs at. For him, engineering is a road to money: "If you want money in this life you need to have something valuable to offer...I wouldn't consider a single guy with a secretarial pool and $1800 a month to party with a great suicide risk...Maybe you (Bob) will meet a nice tall member of the Society of Women engineers and your money problems will be solved."

Bob didn't criticize engineering, Peter, he criticized greed.

Objectivity is above publicity

Last week's front page article concerning the withdrawal of the Third World Women's Task Force from the planning of International Women's Week (Collegian 2/23) was not intended to be "divisive," as the authors of a letter appearing in Thursday's Collegian suggest. The article, an account of a meeting held two weeks ago, had a place in the newspaper and needed to be written.

The Women's News Department of the Collegian is not merely a publicity vehicle for women's groups on campus. Its objective is to report the news of the women's community in a unbiased fashion. The department came into existence because news of the women's community was often forgotten or buried in the shadow of the other so-called "hard" news.

As with any newspaper, the Collegian is responsible for reporting the news of the people it serves. The decision to publish a given article is the editor's and not the particular reporter's. That the Third World Women's Task Force feels "underrepresented" in this year's celebration of International Women's Week is important news in the women's community. No doubt many Third World women would be interested in knowing about it.

Women's week to begin

Amherst College will begin its celebration of International Women's Week with a lecture by Charlayne Hunter-Gault, interviewer for the MacNeil Lehrer Report, Sunday, March 1 at 7:30 p.m. in the Converse Hall Assembly Room.

"Women in the Media"is the theme of a series of lectures, discussions, panels, and films sponsored by the college throughout the upcoming week. Most events are open to the public and free.

Resident Assistants sought

Information sessions will be held during the next two weeks for people interested in applying for positions as Resident Assistant in the Southwest Residential Area.

Anyone interested in applying must attend a session or contact the Head of Residence of the dorm applying to if unable to attend.

The sessions will be held:

—March 4 at 7 p.m., fifth floor Coolidge for positions in Kennedy, Coolidge, John Quincy Adams, Thoreau, Melville, James and Emerson dormitories.

—March 5 at 7 p.m., fifth floor Washington for positions in MacKimmie, Patterson, Crampton, Washington, John Adams, Pierpont, Moore, and Cance dormitories.

—March 10 at 9 p.m., Melville lounge, for a third world information session.

—March 11 at 9 p.m., Thoreau lounge, for a make-up session for all applicants.

Frat to hold dance marathon

The Pi Kappa Alpha fraternity will be sponsoring a 29-hour dance marathon this weekend, beginning at 6 p.m. Friday in the Student Union Ballroom.

All proceeds from the event will go to benefit multiple sclerosis, not muscular dystrophy as incorrectly reported in yesterday's Collegian.

The Paper Dolls, local band, will provide entertainment.

interested persons can register at the dance marathon table in front of the Hatch in the Student Union Building.

Rabbi will speak on death

Dr. Earl Grollman, internationally known for his work concerning dying, death, and bereavement, will speak March 2, at 7:30 p.m. in Campus Center 174-176. Grollman, a pioneer in family crisis intervention, has written numerous books including "Living — When a Loved One Has Died", "Explaining Death to Children", and "Caring for Your Aged Parents".

For more than twenty-five years he has been rabbi at Beth El Temple in Belmont, Massachusetts, and is past president of the Mass. Board of Rabbis. Rabbi Grollman is a member of the Bereavement Team of the Community School of Psychiatry at Harvard University, and he is a member of the Professional Advisory Board of the Foundation of Thanatology at Columbia-Presbyterian Medical Center in New York.

An AM/FM cassette radio and speakers valued at $200 was stolen from a 1972 Ford Mustang parked in lot 22 yesterday at 1:30 p.m., University of Massachusetts police said. There are no suspects in the case.

In another incident involving a motor vehicle, a vent window was taken from a 1972 Volvo parked in lot 64 yesterday at 10:27 a.m., police said. The window is valued at $50. There are no suspects in the incident.

The rear window of a Dodge station wagon was reported smashed yesterday at 12:09 a.m. The vehicle was parked in lot 22. The window is valued at $200 police said.

The rear spoiler of a 1980 Chevrolet was reported cracked and broken yesterday. The car was parked in lot 50. Police said there are no suspects in the incident.

UMass police confiscated a pair of nunchaku sticks (martial arts weapons) while responding to a loud stereo complaint on the third floor of Coolidge Residence Hall in the Southwest Residential Area.

Despite heavy rains and many technical problems, over 60 people turned out Wednesday night for the discussion. Kearns said he was disappointed at the turnout. Most nights the hall was 85 percent filled, he said.

Next week art critics Lucy Lippard and Joan Braderman will speak. Speakers from the committee against "Fort Apache," Women Against Pornography, and the Gay and Lesbian Filmmakers Association will appear on March 11.

Consumer tips by MassPIRG

Car buyers must be cautious

If you are about to buy a new or used car from a dealer, you should know a few things about a dealer's obligations and your rights as a buyer. The added knowledge will spare you unnecessary frustrations, stimulate your bargaining powers, and maybe even save you a few dollars.

You should be very cautious about putting down a large sum of money on deposit for a car. In some cases, you might never see it again if you later decide to cancel the contract.

A dealer may ask for a deposit at the time you enter into the sales contract. This is legal, but the following written conditions in your contract must be met before the dealer can keep your deposit or trade-in should you decide to cancel:

a) the contract clause contains a specific dollar amount;

b) the contract clause is clearly and conspicuously disclosed on the written agreement (in 10 point type or its equivalent)...and;

c) you agree to the clause by initialling it after the dealer has pointed it out to you for your understanding.

A full refund or return of your trade in is yours if you cancel the contract before the dealer accepts it (e.g., the sale was made by a sales representative subject to dealer approval).

You also have a full refund coming in the following cases:

a) the contract is to take effect only if you are able to obtain financing, and you are unable to do so;

b) if the dealer did not accept the contract;

c) if the car is not delivered within the time stated in the contract. When not specified, eight weeks...unless the delay is beyond the dealer's control, e.g., a dock strike preventing arrival of an import).

Even when a dealer has complied with all the foregoing in keeping a deposit, the law permits such forfeitures only when they bear a "reasonable" relationship to the damages caused the dealer by your cancellation.

Always get an exact copy of the sales contract.

A used car must carry on the left front window an explanation of "Refund Rights", which are:

1) you have 7 days from date of purchase to get the car inspected;

2) if within 7 days of purchase, the car is inspected at an authorized station and the estimated cost of repair exceeds the purchase price by more than 10 percent, you can cancel the contract and return the car for full refund;

English Department offers summer study at Oxford

By SCOTT MORITZ
Collegian Correspondent

Students who would like to spend a summer getting to know Geoffrey Chaucer and D.H. Lawrence, or immersing themselves in British art and literature, have that opportunity through the University of Massachusetts English Department's "Oxford Summer Seminar."

The seminar provides graduates and undergraduates the opportunity to study English literature and related disciplines with a British faculty at Oxford University's Trinity College under Oxford's system of tutorials and small seminars, said Ernest Hofer, founder and director of the program.

Oxford Night will be held next Tuesday at 7:30 p.m., in room 456 in Bartlett Hall. Information about the program, application procedures and the availability of scholarships for qualified students will be discussed, said Hofer.

The cost of the seminar is $1780.00.

Any Five College student with an average of B or above in their major field of study, and who has taken at least 15 hours of English or humanities study is eligible to apply. Six $500.00 scholarships are available exclusively for University of Massachusetts participants.

Forty-two percent of the 120 participants come from the Five College area,

Close the door on "Halfway Through the Door"

Halfway Through the Door (Bantam)
By Alan Arkin

By DONALD J. IVAS
Collegian Correspondent

If you have a shoulder Alan Arkin can cry on, ready his new book, Halfway Through The Door. Although best-known for his film acting, he has written two books in addition to this one. My reaction to Halfway Through The Door is that Arkin should stay with acting.

Poor Alan sobs through his book like a lost puppy searching for sympathy and understanding between every punctuation mark. The main body of the book deals with one man's trials and tribulations with the universal problems of life: friendships, careers, security, love, need of, direction, communication and on and on. Ask anyone on campus how their life is going during finals week and the violins break out and tears flow like honey. Poor Al's life for the last eight years or so has been one continuous finals week.

Sympathy to me is an inexpensive commodity; I am willing to dish it out at the drop of a dime as well as receive it. But this book reveals no plot and not story; Nothing but depression emanates from every chapter. For the last ten years Arkin has been on a journey to the self under the guide of an unknown actor, identified only as John, the guru. John's ashram, or spiritual school, was described by Arkin as a warm environment that was "too peaceful." Arkin's affluence allowed him to have John accompany him on all his travels while he was shooting movies. It's hard to lend pity and understanding to someone who as Arkin says in the book, has "a beautiful marriage, my career was thriving, I had in fact accomplished everything I had set out to do."

A majority of the pages are filled with elongated descriptions of Arkin's process of learning and accepting meditation as a simple form of relaxation. He spoke of vibrating and leaving his body and returning to a scheme during the French Revolution where he had lived in a former life. In one instance he described a casual deja vu, something we all have experience. Arkin says, "it was thrilling to me because it represented an event that I had longed for, the beginning of some sort of psychic power."

This longing for power balances his constant talk of his own inadequacy. It's as if he were talking to himself in the mirror while shaving, consoling himself. Don't worry Al baby, we all have hang-ups. Arkin's main weakness is his preoccupation with himself. Throughout the entire and luckily short book, the sentences begin with "I" or "my guru." Just who this guru is we really never find out. According to Arkin, his guru encompasses all, and I wouldn't buy that even if I had half of Arkin's money.

It is said that a man in his mid-forties would call words such as heart, light, spirit, and love poetic similies and magical placebos for weaklings. Through miraculous discovery with the aid of a bit-part actor turned guru, he then comes forth with the statement, "I had always believed deeply in the need for brotherhood. For peace. For kindness and mutual receptivity. Here it was. As Guru would say, I was simply ready to experience it."

Jesus! Alan, where have you been? So you have found out the world isn't one big ice cream sundae and everyone doesn't love everyone else. Big discovery, but I think most of us already know that there is suffering on this cosmic globe of ours.

A person's realization of himself and the world around him is comforting. Arkin is like a delighted child just now discovering that there is a method to all this madness. He realizes you don't have to look much farther than within to understand that happiness is something that is not on the market nor something anyone (even a guru) can make happen for you. I'm sure everyone could read Mr. Arkin's book, relate to his frustrations, and in the end give him a hip hip-hooray for finally coming to terms with himself and the world around him. But Arkin doesn't need the pat on the back; Halfway Through The Door should be all the way out the door.

"Let's Go: USA" misses much of the country

Let's Go: USA (Dutton)
By Harvard Student Agencies

by ROGER ATWOOD
Collegian Correspondent

One of the most respected and popular travel guide series is produced entirely by college undergraduates. It's true every few years, a group of Harvard students comes out with a new "Let's Go:" guide to some area of the world popular with young, budget minded tourists. These are the guides that have become veritable bibles for back-packing Americans in Europe.

Last month, the Harvard group turned its gaze homeward, and published "Let's Go: USA." The guide dutifully provides useful information for young travelers who are not rich: hostel addresses, summer festival dates, drinking ages of the various states, and advice on hitchhiking.

Practical it is, and the writing is clean and colorful. But "Let's Go" shows signs of a hasty publication. This is a shame in light of the prose's strength.

What the guide does include is certainly well-written. Frank, often fascinating discussions of various tourist spots will provide fine leisure reading even if you won't be going past Hartford.

For example, "after they painted the Appalachians, American landscape painters went west to seek the mixture of terror and pleasure which they called 'the sublime.' They found it in the Rocky Mountains.... It still happens. Expect to be moved, despite all you've seen before." You don't have to be heading west to enjoy such a light but rewarding text.

The "Let's Go" writers have a particular talent for describing tourist spots with fresh, perceptive metaphors. Boston's Kenmore Square is "a lot like Dr. Jeckyll and Mr. Hyde. By day, it's a rather dull hangout for B.U. students, but when the sun goes down, Kenmore Square becomes a world-of flashing light and throbbing music." How true! And how charming a simile.

Yes, the Harvard group provides first rate travel writing in "Let's Go," but the guide is woefully incomplete. It all but ignores 17 states, including Vermont, West Virginia, and the state that attracts the most tourists of all, Nevada. To millions of Northerners, a travel guide that neglects Vermont is all but worthless. Such cities as Baltimore, Milwaukee, and Cleveland go completely unmentioned, as do such attractions as Lake Tahoe and Hawaii.

The editors concede these conspicuous omissions in a boxed paragraph entitled, "Where's My Hometown?" Travelers considering Maryland, Alabama, Rhode Island, and 14 other states will have to wait for future editions, the editors say, because "deadlines did not leave us time to adequately research them." The paragraph does not explain why the editors didn't simply extend their deadlines.

The omissions are not the only signs of premature publication. The book is full of copy errors, and the maps are sketchy and sophomoric.

Praise be to the writers — they have done fine jobs. But why this rush to publish? Were the editors anxious to get the book on the shelves before the summer travel season? If so, they had a few more months, at least. As it stands now, it seems deceiving to call a book that does not cover Vermont, the Badlands, or Las Vegas a "guide to the USA."

I advise potential buyers to look through the table of contents, and make sure the areas they intend to visit are covered in the guide. If not, buy another guide, or wait for the next edition of "Let's Go." If those areas are covered, then by all means, snap up a copy and take it along.

Very few beer drinkers can pass this test. Can you?

If you can taste which beer is which, you know beer every which way.

Three major premium beers have three different tastes. But if you can taste that Bud is Bud, Miller is Miller, and Schlitz is Schlitz – blindfolded – you are probably in the top 10% of expert beer tasters. Like to test your taste? Then, on with your blindfold.

The Master Brewer decides.
The Master Brewer determines how a beer will taste. Brewers are constantly adjusting, experimenting, improving their beers. For example, Schlitz. Three years ago a Master Brewer came over to head up Schlitz. For 40 years Frank Sellinger had brewed some of the best beers in America. And he came to Schlitz to make his best beer ever.

The best beer is #

	Refreshing	Faintly sweet	Full bodied	Smooth	Mellow	Mild	Full flavored

	Flat	Too bitter	Watery	Biting	Too strong	Overly carbonated	Bland

Place beers' numbers on each scale from 1 to 10
Beer #1 is _____
Beer #2 is _____
Beer #3 is _____

The perfect beer is the beer that tastes perfect—to you.
Have a friend pour all three beers into identical glasses and label them 1, 2 and 3. Now you taste and identify each beer. Whether you guess all three brands right, or all three wrong, you'll know which tastes best to you. Don't be surprised if it's not your brand. To get a better picture of each beer's taste, rate its flavor characteristics from 1 to 10 on the scale at the right.

What makes beers taste different?
Hops are a major factor. Too much hops can make a beer bitter. Too little leaves it bland. Barley malt is important, too. It gives a beer "body" and adds a mellowness. The balance of the two is what makes a beer taste smooth.

The last word is yours.
To Frank's taste, today's Schlitz is the smoothest beer you can buy. But taste for yourself. Your decision is what counts.

things differently because of the lights." He added that the team won't see serious live pitching until the Spring trip to San Diego next month.

"I work on control," pitcher Vin Todd said "just putting the ball where I want it."

Bergquist however, said he "likes the progression" of inside workouts. Like a bear coming out of hibernation, the ball player should start slow and build up, avoiding muscle pulls and thrown-out arms.

"I'm glad to have the space," Bergquist said. "It's fine for initial workouts to stress fundamentals. Team wise, its good just to be together."

stifle his laughter.

UMass came out to warm up and the competition was still going on their end of the court. They were forced to stand around until :55 was left in their designated warmup period. Pittsburgh had a full five minutes. That's why they outscored the Minutemen 55-21 in the second half, they had more warmup time.

Jim Mosier was visibly miffed. Coach Wilson should file a protest with Eastern Eight officials.

While this event didn't exactly steal the show the other night, it was interesting to watch the feigned hoopla at halftime. Maybe next year some unsuspecting company can sponsor a Tag Team wrestling match next year at the Cage and the year after that.....

Four-time NE champ?

UMass heavyweight wrestler John Allen will be going for his fourth New England championship and 190 pound Bill McQuaide and 158 pound Mike Carroll will each be looking for his second consecutive title at Boston University's Case Center this weekend.

UMass head coach Dave Amato expects many wrestlers on his team to be seeded in the New Englands. Nine minuteman grapplers placed high in last year's tournament. (Three first places, one second, two thirds and three fourths)

The University of Rhode Island is the defending New Englands team champ and UMass came in a close second in last year's tournament.

"We have the capability to beat URI," Amato said, "to beat them we have to wrestle well."

In some of the finals, the matmen will, in all likelihood, be facing the same URI opponents that just recently took seven of ten matches at Boyden.

"I think guys like McQuaide and Ras (126 pound Dana Rasmussen) can turn the score around," Amato said.

Allen's competition will come from URI's Evans Brantley who tied Allen 2-2 last week at Boyden. The senior co-captain has won the New England tourney every year during his college career and will be going for a perfect record.

The tournament starts Friday in Boston. Consolation round finals will be held at 3 p.m. on Sunday and championship finals are at 7 p.m.

Gymnasts try for 2nd title

By MARY SZETELA
Collegian Staff

When you say a state championship, you've almost said it all.

Defending women's gymnastic state champion, UMass, would like to keep it that way, but a few obstacles, such as Northeastern University, Salem State and the Massachusetts Institute of Technology are in their path.

Originally, UMass was scheduled to compete against Michigan State, a team which would have given the Minutewomen fine competition, but the meet was cancelled and UMass will travel to MIT in Boston Saturday to compete in the state championship against all three teams.

Although UMass defeated Northeastern earlier in the season, UMass Coach Virginia Evans believes Northeastern (Division II) will give the Minutewomen the most trouble.

Sports

Outside or...in

They have to play on a wooden surface in a low ceiling expanse that is either hot as hell or underheated.

Bothersome, milky white light pours in through small, opaque windows.

They have to deal with the growls of those guys who were kicked off the floor in the middle of an afternoon pick up basketball game.

All in all, its a heck of a place to start Spring training.

Annual ritual began this month at Boyden Gymnasium, where the men's lacrosse and baseball teams began gearing for the 1981 campaign.

If conditioning and basic skills are the essence of February workouts, it is an inside out sight, the promise of going out of doors, that keeps the athletes in the game mentally at Boyden, where watching the Gorillas and the Batters becomes a study in agility.

Last week's warming trend gave the athletes an unexpected whiff of the outside air. The baseball team was throwing on the tennis courts below Boyden. Lacrosse coach Dick Garber, who is notorious for getting his men outside as early as possible, was running full practices on the athletic fields.

But as the weather returned to its normal February rain and cold, both squads moved back inside back to the artificial confines and the space limitations of Boyden.

"When you think about it," Garber said, "the Spring sports (here) are the only ones that don't start practice in their natural environment."

"Inside it can get so damn boring. You hope you're ready, but you can't go over the strategic things until there is a break in the weather."

"It's realistic on my part that if you are going to run outside, that's the best place to practice. Years ago we used to work out on the road to the sewer plant because it was always plowed."

Boyden Gym became a Spring training ground five years ago. Three weeks of workouts before the end of the basketball season and the subsequent move to Curry Hicks Cage can prove invaluable.

Three times a week the laxmen run, and run hard, with full equipmen. The lacrosse workout is a unit workout, checking and passing up and down the floor. The baseball side of the wooden surface is filled with apparatae: nets, a jugs pitching machine, bats and batting tees, the elements of a slower paced, often monotonous workout.

Yet despite their different approaches to Spring, the shape of the lacrosse and baseball athlete are remarkably similar. Size is not nearly as important as speed and strength. For example, Jim Weller, the leading lacrosse scorer in 1980, weighs in the 160 pound range, Garber said.

Even if working out inside is a deterent, all athletes know it is necessary.

"The players understand the importance of conditioning and want it," Garber said. "The first lacrosse athletes were guys who couldn't play football, basketball or baseball. The last 10 years we have gotten good athletes and the level of competition has gone up."

"If you are in good shape you are 75 percent there," lax defenseman Ray Cozzi said. "But its frustrating, everyone is dying to get outside. But you have to be there (Boyden) so you might as well make the best of it."

"You are supposed to be in shape before workouts start," infielder Warren McCreddie said. "You have to expect that you're playing on a level now that if you have to run, you run."

Of the two teams, Boyden provides more detriments to the baseball squad. While the lax players can actually go through the motions of all the aspects of the game, (shooting, passing, stickwork) fielding and hitting live pitching are just about out of the question until the baseball team moves outside for good. Even in the Cage, the ball travels differently in the musty, calm atmosphere than in outside breezes.

"When you work out inside you are basically on your own," outfielder Mark Litano said. "You can throw but you see

The UMass men's basketball team lost the final game of the season 94-66 to the University of New Hampshire last night in Durham.

Hoopwomen at BU, hoping for playoff spot

By KEVIN CULLEN
Collegian Staff

It has come down to a one-game season.

The University of Massachusetts women's basketball team travels to Boston University tonight for their final regular season game with their hopes for an Eastern regional playoff berth hanging in the balance.

UMass (14-12) lost a chance to virtually ensure a playoff spot Wednesday night when a last-second basket gave Rhode Island a 66-65 win at the Cage.

"I don't know anymore than anyone else," UMass head coach Mary Ann Ozdarski said yesterday. "I won't know until Sunday night, when the selections (for playoff spots) are made."

The selection committee from Region 1-A, in which UMass plays, consisting of St. John's Don Perrelli, Cecil DeMarco of New Hampshire and Dartmouth's Chris Weligus, will announce the playoff spots sometime Sunday night.

What is nearly certain is that, if UMass wins tonight, a playoff spot is almost assured.

In BU, UMass finds themselves taking on the number one ranked team in New England, led by Wade Trophy candidate Debbie Miller.

Miller, averaging around 21 points and over 15 rebounds per game, is one of the premier players in the nation and, when the feeling strikes her, can literally dominate a game. Miller has, however, a reputation for playing just simply poor ball games at times, as evidenced by two lackluster performances against Syracuse and St. John's this season.

Besides Miller, the 16-8 Terriers have Debbie Meneese, who has been averaging 12 points per game, and ballhandling guard Barbara Barr, who's been averaging 10 points. Val DePaolo, who last season was the fourth leading UMass scorer, transferred to BU this year and is second in steals and assists for the Terriers.

Ozdarski and assistant coach Steve Jefferson will counter with their own Wade Trophy candidate, one Ms. Julie Ready who, for the first time in weeks, displayed her offensive skills with a 27-point performance in the URI loss. Ready who has been hampered by a foot problem of late, will be playing in her final regular season game for UMass, as will her fellow senior co-captain Ginger Legare, who tossed in 20 points Wednesday night.

And so it has come down to this: a win will mean, in all probability, that the season goes on; a loss will mean waiting by the telephone for a call that very well may not come.

Gymmen face Temple

ELIZABETH McGOWAN
Collegian Staff

They are finally home. After five consecutive away meets, the University of Massachusetts men's gymnastics team will see action at home when they face Temple University tomorrow at 8 p.m. in Boyden Auxiliary Gym. The minutemen's record now stands at 7-2.

UMass coach Roy Johnson is looking for tough competition from the Temple team. "It should be a close meet, maybe coming down to the last event. Everybody is healthy and I'll be going with my best team."

According to the National Coaches Statistical Report, Temple is ranked 27th in National Division I competition, while UMass is ranked 34th in the same division. Temple has a fifth place rank in the East.

"Temple was weak last year due to injuries, but this year they are healthy and have an impressive record, with only one loss. Temple averages about 254 points a meet and we'll have to do better than our best (252.75) to win," Johnson said.

Johnson's strategy for the gymmen will be to win the first event, the floor exercises. "The pommel horse event could go either way and the following four events could be close," Johnson said.

Temple's Scott Bram, ranked first in the East on the still rings should offer competition for top UMass ring performer, John Megonagle.

Creeping schlockism

Schlock.

First we had "The Exorcist". Then there was "Carrie". Now it's "Blood Beach", "My Bloody Valentine," "Don't Go In the Basement", "He Knows You're Alone", "Don't Answer the Phone", the next one out will probably be "Don't Eat Bloody Snow".

Creeping Schlockism. It's getting worse than the red tide.

First there was a 16-man athletic competition that was structured loosely on the Olympics and included professional sports celebrities. It was shown on ABC and dubbed, The Superstars. Now there are over 60 participants in the men's division let alone in the new women's division. It has gotten so big (?) that the

Stephen Freker

New England Patriots tight end Russ Francis was recently quoted in an interview stating that if he won the Superstars competition, it would be one of the highlights of his sports career.

Trash sports abound on Saturday and Sunday afternoons on the tube. Now there's Superteams consisting of a rematch of the preceding year's combatants in the World Series and Super Bowl (one more Super and it will be Super city, by the way). There's Battle of the Network Stars and Celebrity Tennis, Celebrity Bowling. When will it end?

Well, don't look now. But it's here. It's only a taste of it, but the schlock has landed in Amherst. You don't have to run and hide. Actually, this species is quite harmless if you just ignore it. You won't come into contact with it unless you go out of your way to indulge. But where can you find it?

It's the end of a long day. You've skipped that last class of the day and got an extension on that last paper. You've earned it. There's only one thing that can satisfy you now. Now comes Miller time. Well, the Miller One-on-One basketball tournament to be exact.

"College students who usually sit in the stands and dream of being a professional basketball player like Kareem Abdul-Jabbar or Pete Maravich have a chance to bring their fantasies to life.....when the Miller Brewing Company brings their One-on-One Basketball Tournament to (specify school)." (Printed in the University of South Florida Oracle Feb. 11, 1979 by John Turchin, sports writer)

You might have wondered how the mens basketball team drew its largest crowd of the season to Curry Hicks Cage Tuesday night. They all wanted to see the hoopmen upset the Pittsburgh Panthers in their last home game of the year, right? Of course not. Everyone was there to see the finals in the Miller Brewing Company One on One Basketball Tournament, in the men's division. The women's division games in the Miller Brewing Company One on One basketball Tournament have not been played yet.

The finals of the competition were held at halftime of the UMass-Pitt game Tuesday night. The announcement of the rules to the event took almost as long as the games themselves. Of course, in the true spirit of programs such as these, there were two divisions within the division itself, under six feet and over six feet.

You can't take anything away from the participants in this final round, they looked like they were really into the competition. They really had the crowd on the edge of their seats. Well, those who hadn't already left to get a hot dog and a Coke or those who were bent over on the edge of their seats to retie their Timberlands.

The competitors were enthused about this contest. One of the finalists was asked how he felt out there.

"I felt like it was junior hockey. Mini one-on-one all over again."

When the second round final was over, the winner and the runnerup were so enthusiastic in their post-game hand slaps, that they missed on the upswing.

When Pittsburgh came out to warm up before the second half and they saw that the tournament (?) was still going on, you could almost hear the snickers. Panther forward Sam Clancy was observed trying to stuff a basketball into his mouth to

Greek parties affected

Alcohol crackdown looms

By MARK L. CURELOP
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts officials have told Greek Area residents that enforcement of the alcohol beverage policy will be stricter for the remainder of the semester.

"We are enforcing everything we passed," Leslie Chambers, Greek Area Director said.

"The Greek Area falls under the same rules and guidelines as the dorms and other Recognized Student Organizations (RSO). If a fraternity is selling alcohol they're breaking the law and we're enforcing laws that interface with the university and the community," she said.

Chambers said the Greek area government has been recently reorganized and a new judicial system modeled after the Student Government Association has been implemented.

The university regulations and policies booklet states, "No person, group or organization may sell alcoholic beverages except pursuant to a license granted by the Commonwealth through the local government licensing authority."

For that reason, Phi Sigma Kappa fraternity will not be having open parties, said Vice President David Connelly.

"Our closed parties are hard enough to keep closed. At exchanges (fraternity/sorority parties) we don't sell alcohol so there shouldn't be any problems in that area," Connelly said.

Inter-Fraternity Council President Brian O'Connor said that the new enforcement of policy will strengthen the Greek Area.

"A problem has been the participation of non-Greeks partaking in the Greek Area. This has been counter productive to the area," O'Connor said.

The damage in the house can be extensive. A lot of the damage has been done by non-Greeks," he said.

UMass Dean of Students William Field said that no one can sell liquor without a license.

"And the Greeks do not have a license to sell alcohol," Field said.

"If the party is private, then it is private, but once it become big and noisy, the party becomes public," he said.

"The Greeks care about their houses, but sometimes at the larger parties they keep taking in massive amounts of people," O'Connor said.

Amherst Police Department Sergeant Richard Buckley said he was not aware of any problems within the Greek Area.

Beta Kappa Phi President Michael Widrow said, "We see a trend evolving as the administration tries to get more control over the situation."

However, some fraternities depend upon the bars for financial reasons.

"We depend on parties for fundraisers," said Bill Silva of Pi Kappa Alpha.

New Trustees enthusiastic

By DONNA MAGRATH
Collegian Correspondent

Members of the University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees are anxious to step into their new roles after receiving the oath of office, administered by Governor Edward J. King on Saturday.

The eight members of the UMass board were sworn in along with the other 215 newly appointed trustees at ceremonies held at Framingham State College.

"I'm looking forward with great hopes and expectations for the universities (at Amherst, Boston and Worcester) in the next couple of years under the new reorganization plan," said Thomas P. Costin Jr. in a telephone interview last week.

Costin, 54, of Nahant, postmaster for the Lynn Postal District, said he was "very honored and pleased to be appointed by the Governor as a trustee." "The educational system in Massachusetts has been hodgepodge and it is good to integrate them (the three campuses) under one master educational plan with the Regents," he added.

The 223 members of the Board of Trustees for the Commonwealth's three universities, 10 state colleges and 15 community colleges, are responsible for implementing all policies necessary for the administrative management of personnel, staff services and the general business of their respective institutions.

Frederick S. Troy, 71, of Boston, former professor of English at UMass-Amherst and the elected alumni trustee from UMass, said, "My chief priority, and I suspect it will be of the new board as well, although I have still to meet some of the new members, is to keep the system together as a state wide University of Massachusetts."

A third newly appointed UMass trustee, Nancy J. Caruso, 51, professor and coordinator at Northeastern University's Department of Cooperative Education, said she was flattered and pleased to have been appointed a trustee. "I feel I have something to contribute to the board since I have been in education for 25 years," she said.

"While Massachusetts has probably one of the finest university systems in the country sometimes it doesn't get its proper respect from the general public and hopefully we can improve that image," Caruso said.

She said she is looking forward to sitting down with the other UMass trustees and going over programs to look for possible areas that need improvement or changes.

The other five UMass trustees are:

—Einar Paul Robsham, 52, of Wayland. He is self-employed in the real estate, management and construction business.

—George R. Baldwin, 38, of Weston. He is senior vice president and director of the insurance firm of Kaler, Carney, Liffler and Company in Boston.

—Andrew C. Knowles, 44, of Bolton. He is vice president of the technical group at Digital Equipment in Marlboro, and is a UMass alumnus.

—Robert H. Quinn, 53, of Milton. He is the former Attorney general of Massachusetts, and a member of the Boston law firm of Quinn and Morris.

—Horace Linwood Tower III of Westfield. He is president and chief executive officer of Stanley Home Products, Inc. in Westfield.

Robsham, Baldwin, Knowles and Troy were all former UMass trustees.

Higher ed. board may take control

By SAMUEL CHALFEN and DEBORAH ASHBRAND
Collegian Staff

The Board of Regents will today take control of the 28 institutions of public higher education—unless the state legislature postpones the shift of power and limits their spending capacity.

The Board of Regents under current law, will assume control of the Commonwealth's three universities, 10 state colleges and 15 community colleges.

However, last week Chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee John J. Finnegan, D-Boston, not only rejected the Regent's bid for greater spending power, but also introduced a bill which would postpone the implementation of the Regent's fiscal powers until 90 days after a chancellor for the higher education system is appointed.

The legislation, if adopted by state law makers, would give the chancellor time to establish his office (only men have been interviewed), and would allow time for more limitations to be defined for the Regents' fiscal autonomy, Ronald Keefe, president of the Collegiate Association of United Students for Education (CAUSE) said.

In other pending legislation student representation on the Board of Regents and the Board of Trustees will be established.

Although the former chairwoman of the state Joint Education Committee is opposed to students sitting on the Board of Regents, other lawmakers favor the move.

"I have some reservations on that; I think there may be a problem," state Sen. Mary Fonseca, D-Fall River, said on Saturday about the proposed student Regent.

State Sen. John W. Olver, D-Amherst, has filed legislation to insure a student seat on the board, although Regents members have said they do not favor student representation on the board.

Student lobbyists, including Keefe, Kenneth Moore, Richard LaVoice and Kathy Fraser of UMass-Amherst have submitted bills which will establish student Regent members.

Under present reorganization law no student representatives will sit on the new trustee boards.

However, Governor Edward J. King has filed legislation to expand the trustee membership from eight to eighteen representatives, including one student. The student would be elected by the student governing boards and appointed by the governor.

Chancellor to be

A search committee organized to screen applicants for the position of chancellor for Massachusetts' public higher education is expected to announce its decision on a candidate for the post later this week.

The committee has narrowed its decision from the original field of 90 applicants down to Thomas Ehrlich, a guest scholar at the Brookings Institute in Washington D.C. and Clayton I. Sommers, Pennsylvania commissioner of higher education, according to the Boston Globe.

Albert H. Bowker, former U.S. assistant secretary for higher education, was also selected as a final candidate but unexpectedly withdrew from the field late last week.

Former Massachusetts Secretary of State Paul Guzzi has served as chief administrative officer for the Board of Regents while the search committee has worked to fill the $54,000-a-year post.

The committee's recommendations for a candidate were expected to have been announced by December 1, 1980.

Under current law a 90-day period exists to give the new chancellor time to prepare a staff and assist in the preparation of the upcoming higher education budget.

The chancellor will work with the Board of Regents directing local Board of Trustees, and act as a liason to the state legislature.

FBI rules are at issue

Associated Press

WASHINGTON—Despite pressure from some conservatives, FBI Director William H. Webster says the bureau neither needs nor wants authority to investigate U.S. political groups that haven't committed or even plotted a crime.

At issue are guidelines for opening FBI domestic security and terrorist investigations. The guidelines contain a "criminal standard," requiring reasonable evidence that a group is about to commit a crime before an investigation is launched.

The restrictions were spawned by disclosures that in the 1960s the FBI watched and even tried to disrupt civil rights and antiwar groups which were simply exercising their constitutional right to dissent.

Imposed in 1976 by a Republican administration, the rules were reaffirmed last year by Webster and a Democratic attorney general. Partly as a result, the FBI's pending domestic security investigations dropped from more than 21,000 in 1973 to 102 in 1978.

But some conservatives, including some newly powerful Senate Republicans, fear the rules have handcuffed the FBI and left the nation vulnerable to subversion.

The Senate has set up a new internal security and terrorism subcommittee chaired by Alabama Republican Jeremiah Denton, who says a recent Heritage Foundation report raised his concern over the guidelines. The conservative think tank called for eliminating the criminal standard from the guidelines.

"It's a Catch-22,' said one conservative congressional staff member, who asked not to be named. "How can you know when a group begins planning a crime if you can't put an informant inside until they start?"

But Webster and his top aides think the criminal standard has proved workable.

"The standard that we use for entering an investigation is a pretty good one," Webster said in an interview on his third anniversary as director.

Fighting up in El Salvador

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador — Government soldiers backed by jet fighters battled anti-junta guerrillas at two towns in El Salvador's eastern province of San Vicente, according to peasants streaming into the capital Sunday from the embattled province.

The refugees said troops loyal to the civilian-military junta, backed by the air power, repelled guerrilla assaults launched late Saturday, but some witnesses reported "sporadic and heavy gunfire" yesterday around San Lorenzo and Santo Domingo.

The battle for control of San Lorenzo, about 30 miles east of here, has been raging for three days, according to those who fled.

The reports could not be independently confirmed but a military spokesman described fighting there as "an army clean up operation."

The spokesman refused to comment on reports that Salvadoran army helicopters shuttled between San Vicente and the capital, ferrying wounded soldiers to military hospitals here.

Helms claims aid already cut

WASHINGTON — The Reagan administration already has cut off U.S. aid to Nicaragua because of that nation's role in the relay of arms to El Salvador's leftist insurgents, Sen. Jesse Helms said yesterday.

"They have cut it off," the North Carolina Republican said on NBC's "Meet the Press" when asked whether such a severance was likely in light of administration contentions that military hardware from various communist nations is being channeled through Nicaragua to the Salvadoran guerrillas.

While $50 million in aid to Nicaragua's recently installed Sandinista government is "in the pipeline," Helms said, "I have a note here from the State Department that says the rest of that is going to be withheld."

Helms added that he didn't know "if they've announced it yet."

State Department spokeswoman Sue Pittman confirmed the essence of Helms' remarks

Administration defends cuts

WASHINGTON — President Reagan's chief economic adviser said yesterday the administration still intends to protect the poor while it cuts the federal budget, but it also will re- :fine just who is "truly needy."

Murray Weidenbaum, chairman of the Council of Economic Advisers, also told the National League of Cities that the cuts are coming, and those able to pay their own way are going to lose government aid.

Weidenbaum told the city leaders that they are going to have to sacrifice until it hurts for the greater good of the nation and economic recovery.

Reagan was scheduled to defend his own programs in a speech to the league on Monday.

Bombings end 3-hour ceasefire

MADRID, Spain — Militant Basques wounded three police officers in a bombing and machine gun attack in northern Spain yesterday, authorities said, hours after announcement of a separatists' cease-fire had raised hopes for Spain's stability in the wake of an attempted military coup.

A woman passerby was slightly injured, police said.

"ETA military (the radical wing) has given its answer," said a police spokesman after the attacks in the Bilbao suburb of Portugalete.

There was no immediate claim of responsibility for the attack.

The moderate wing of the ETA separatists held a clandestine news conference hours before and were quoted as saying that because of last week's attempt at a right-wing coup they were ordering commandos to cease violence and allow politicians to seek a solution to the Basque issue.

Authorities said two bombs exploded 150 yards apart, loosing a rain of nails and metal fragments on a police car and that the terrorists, also in a car, opened fire with submachine guns before they sped off in a hail of return fire.

One policeman was rushed into surger and listed in grave condition.

Hunger striker

BELFAST, Northern Ireland (AP) — Bobby Sands, 26-year-old IRA guerrilla at the Maze prison outside Belfast, began a hunger strike "to the death" yesterday renewing tension with the British government over the issue of political status for IRA prisoners.

The Northern Ireland Office said Sands, who is serving 14 years for possession of firearms, refused breakfast Sunday.

Sinn Fein, the Irish Republican Army's political wing, said Sands has vowed never to eat again unless the government gives "political prisoner" status to the imprisoned guerrillas in this British province.

Northern Ireland Secretary Humphrey Atkins said the government would make no concessions to Sands and that if he and any other prisoners stick to their hunger strike, "then they will die."

UM wrestlers go for titles

By DONNA SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

BOSTON—A takedown with one second remaining helped URI heavy weight Evans Brantley frustrate UMass's John Allen in his quest for his fourth New England championship. Allen was one of seven Massachusetts wrestlers to go to the finals of the New England University wrestling championship meet at Boston University's Case Athletic Center last night.

Brantley defeated Allen seven to 10 after Allen had taken a lead in the first period and held it until the third. Brnaley scored a two point takedown mid-way through the third period to tie the score at four all. A nearfall with a minute left in the match and a fatal takedown gave Brantley his upset over Allen.

Mike Carroll defended his title in a 158 pound class, scoring a takedown and an escape over Connecticut's Gralyn Harris for a four to two win in the finals. Carroll took a lead which Harris tied in the second period with two consecutive escapes. Early in the third period, Carroll took the lead with an escape, and a minute riding time gave him the four to two win.

UMass placed second as a team with 79 and one quarter points, and one win, six second places and one third place. The Minutemen ran away with the awards last night; Carroll was once again named outstanding wrestler of the tournament as voted by the coaches. Carroll, now a two time champ, and on his way to Princeton for the nationals, received the honor at last years' New England also.

Rich Cshirizzi, UMass's 118-pounder who placed third in this weekend's tourney, received the John Serra, Sr. trophy for the fastest takedown (39 seconds). He also received the Manuel Gorriaran trophy for the most falls in the least time.

Allen, received the Mr. Homer Barr (former Massachusetts head coach) trophy awarded to the senior who has scored the most career points.

Probably, the most exciting and the most exciting and the most heartbreaking loss for the minutemen was 190 pound Billy McQuaide's 11 to six loss to Rhode Island's Tom Giles. McQuaide, who was defending champ, was badly behind zero to seven at the beginning of the second period. McQuaide racked up six points while including a two point take down while holding Giles at seven, to come within one point with less than a minute left in the match.

McQuaide could not score again and Giles took away the title.

The Shittons
Blue Wall Feb. 28, 1981

By JOHN BROBST

Imagine Laverne and Shirley in bouffant wigs and Dallas Cowboy cheerleading outfits. Add four motorcycle madmen with slicked back hair and "Mother" tatooed on their arms. Get them a job playing the 1959 Akron High School Homecoming dance and you've got the Shittons.

Judy and Georgelina Shitton, singers and general troublemakers, stole the hearts of Saturday's Blue Wall crowd with their delightful spoofs of early rock hits like "Rock Around The Clock", "At The Hop", "Too Many Fish In The Sea", and "Do The Twist".

"A lot of people think we're new wave because we're unsual," Judy Shitton said. But Judy's band has looked like a cartoon for eleven years. If their Blue Wall performance is any indication, they'll be around for at least eleven more.

The Shittons' cornball antics were what made the show. The band hurled one-liners at each other all night, like "Georgelina goes out with so many sailors, her hips go out with the tide." During "Runaway", Judy donned a rainbonnet to sing "I'm a walking in the rain..." Little things like that, on the average of once a minute, made them a worthwhile act to catch.

The Shittons don't try to make a statement. They are just plain great entertainment. Catch them next time around.

Bromberg packs ballroom

David Bromberg
Student Union Ballroom, Feb. 27, 1981

By SUSAN BARON
Collegian Staff

The Student Union Ballroom was filled to capacity Friday evening with the acoustic tunes of David Bromberg and the sounds of knee-slappin' and foot-stompin'.

A respectfuly anxious crowd of over 1000 awaited Bromberg from 9 to 10 o'clock. Meanwhile, the Valley Partners (Bob Green and Debby Fish) played bluegrass which was so apropos for Bromberg's approaching appearance.

David Bromberg last performed in Amherst three years ago. Anyone lucky enough to see him this weekend was witnessing one of his first performances since last summer's Long Island concert. Bromberg stopped touring with his band after than concert in order to learn how to make violins.

This Friday, Bromberg was accompanied by a fabulous fiddler named Jeff Wisor. It was an evening of fiddling, guitar picking, ukulele plucking and, ah yes, that unique Bromberg singing-or should I say non-singing.

Bromberg's voice and verbal agility was as good as ever. His way of melodizing words and emotions with such control and quickness can't be beat. What Bromberg can't say in words he lets his guitar or fiddle say. And they truly do talk for him.

During Bromberg's two hour show he played a few fantastic fiddle tunes with Jeff Wisor, several solos on the guitar and even one song acappella for fun. The Valley Partners joined in with Bromberg and Jeff Wisor for some tunes also.

Many of the concert numbers were characterized by tradeoff instrumentals between Bromberg and Wisor. As the spotlight hit Bromberg's fast fingers on the fret of the guitar, Wisor would soon take over with his fiddle. These numbers were very effective in getting the audience involved and riled up.

A Scottish tune called "My House," "Statesboro Blues," "Don't Let Your Deal Go Down," "I like to Sleep Late in the Morning," and a duet with the Valley Partners called "Dark Hollow" were among the highlights of the show.

The first set was actually quite different from any concerts Bromberg has done with his band. It consisted of traditional country bluegrass.

Bromberg returned for three encores, including "Mr. Bojangles" and "Travelling Man" favorites for every Bromberg fan.

Audience participation - singing, clapping and even dancing in the aisles - completed the warm, country-style atmosphere offered by Bromberg.

From blues chords to country tunes; from talking through songs to a serious attempt to sound sweetly melodic, Bromberg left all with a smile on their face, ready to hit a square dance.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Talking to Ralph

This is for all of us

Kevin Cullen

Amy Sklivas got a call from her mother a couple of weeks ago, and now she is worried. Sklivas is worried because there are forces working against the prospects of here finishing her college education.

The forces are in Washington, D.C., and they are trying to take away Amy Sklivas' help loans.

"If they (the Reagan Administration) cut the help loans," says Sklivas, a freshman at the University of Massachusetts, "there's a good chance I might not finish in four years here."

Amy Sklivas is not pleading poverty. She's the first one to tell you that she isn't poor. But, as she says, she is not rich. And she is realistic

"I don't really think I'd have to forget about my education altogether," says Sklivas, who lives in Field dormitory up on Orchard Hill. "I mean, my parents would make the extra effort. I'd work. I'd get through somehow."

But should it have to be this way? That's all Sklivas and the rest of college students from middle income families want to know.

Amy's father, Demetrios (or Jimmy, in English) grew up in Greece and immigrated to the United States when he was 20. He's a self-made guy, a guy who followed the old immigrant work ethic. An apprentice in Greece, Jimmy Sklivas came to America and, after a few years, opened his own business as a self taught dental technician. Jimmy and Constantina (or Connie) Sklivas were married and raised three kids in Peabody.

Unlike her foreign-born and roughly educated husband, Connie Sklivas grew up in Lynn and graduated from UMass at Amherst in 1956, became a dietician and, along with her husband, instilled a desire to learn in her children.

"They were good about it," Amy Sklivas recalls. "They urged us to achieve, but they didn't pound it into our heads."

An education was what Jimmy Sklivas never had, and wanted most for his own kids to have. So, when the oldest son, Steve, decided he wanted to go to Tufts and become a dentist, Dad Sklivas was all smiles. The cost, which has gone from the $8000 to the $9000 range in four years, was unimportant. Dad would help out, as would a Guaranteed Student Loan, or the help loan, as it's more commonly known. Steve Sklivas has changed his major to economics, much to the chagrin of his father, and has taken out four help loans.

When the second son, Peter, said he wanted to go out to Northwestern in Chicago, the Sklivas parents, who were divorced in 1975, gave their blessings, and financial support.

"My parents, even though they were divorced, still discuss our educations together," Amy Sklivas says. "They knew Peter's going to Northwestern would be a strain, but with help loans, things looked like they would work out."

While her brothers' educations had been taken care of, Amy Sklivas had long been preparing for her own. At 14, she began working at small jobs, delivering newspapers and fliers during the school year, lifeguarding during the summer. She opened a savings account at a Peabody bank and set her sights on college.

"My parents wanted me to go to Ivy League schools, the better name schools," Sklivas says, 'But, they had already helped pay for my brothers, and I wanted to put myself through school, so I started looking at the state universities. I looked at UMass, and I decided it was a good school."

Connie Sklivas supported her daughter's decision, as did her ex-husband, though he did so with a bit less enthusiasm.

So, Amy Sklivas went to her local bank, took out her savings, took out a Guaranteed Student Loan, and came to UMass. She has been happy so far, and will probably pursue a degree in economics, like her brother Steve who has had to pay twice as much.

But, two weeks ago, Amy Sklivas got a call from her mother.

"I talk to her a lot on the phone," Amy Sklivas began. "Well, she mentioned that I got a letter from the Massachusetts Board of Higher Education, saying that Reagan wants to cut the help loans.

"The letter stressed to write to congressmen about how you, as a student, feel about losing your loans, about what would happen if the loans are cut, and to mention if you already work."

Amy Sklivas wrote a letter to Reagan. She wrote another letter to House Speaker Tip O'Neill. She went down to Goodell and a reference librarian helped her find her local congressman's address. She wrote another letter.

On this campus, 87 percent of students who appied in the 1980-81 academic year are eligible for financial aid. In 1978-79, $5.3 million of help loans were processed at UMass; the figure for this year is $20 million.

This is serious.

"This isn't just for me," Amy Sklivas said, "This is for all of us."

Letters

Environment will suffer

In 1969, the Council for Environmental Quality (CEQ) was established as an advisory board reporting directly to the President. The CEQ furnishes at least once a year a report on the state and condition of the environment.

The policymakers of President Reagan's Administration are now considering the elimination of the CEQ. The recommendation is expected to be a withholding of appropriations for this year followed by the complete elimination of the CEQ under the President's reorganization plan.

The reason for the disbanding of the CEQ is that the present administration feels that its function could be performed equally well through another agency. We, as representatives of the UMass Student Chapter of the Wildlife Society, feel that this loss would be unfortunate for the American people because the CEQ presents an overall view of the environmental issues and does not represent the individual views of particular agencies that could take over its function. Also, the CEQ is a direct link to the President. Even though President Reagan will not use this agency to its full capacity, it should be retained so that future Presidents with better environmental insights may have the opportunity to do so.

Please take action now and write to your Senators c/o of the U.S. Senate, Washington, D.C. 20001, and Representatives c/o The House of Representatives, Washington, D.C. 20001. Help keep the CEQ on an equal basis with other Cabinet posts.

If you can't do better, be quiet

I would like to take this opportunity to address a portion of the University population that I find particularly irritating.

Though I will not disagree with anyone concerning the fact that the UMass men's basketball team had a very poor season, I must express my disgust for certain "fans" that always seemed to pop up at home games.

To feel that the team is not playing well is one thing. I feel that it is a totally different matter to heckle individual players while the game is going on.

Specifically, I am referring to the way certain people took pleasure in taunting Jim Mosier. These "fans" were pretty quick to make fun of Mosier and his teammates from the safety of their seats in the stands, but if they are such fantastic authorities on basketball, why aren't they in uniform?

I usually found out the answer to my own question when I turned to look at these "fans" (who for the most part interrupted my viewing of the game). Most of the tormentors were either short, fat, goofy or any combination of the above.

When I was younger, I was told that I shouldn't criticize if I couldn't do better myself. I think that advice should apply to sports fans, too.

Needless inflammatory rhetoric

Last Friday I had the misfortune to wander into the SUB lobby where a very shrill "demonstration" was taking place. From what I could gather while watching a few frantic dramatizations, the protest was about the imminent formation of a "fascist police state" in America.

The usual buzzwords were employed—oppression, racism, police brutality (my personal favorite) and so on, ad nauseam. It was one more tiring example of the radical elements making a collective ass of themselves through the use of needlessly inflammatory rhetoric and by complete ignorance of fact.

Hilariously, none of the demonstrators seemed to realize that the United States is one of less than 30 nations on earth where such spectacles are permitted to be staged in public. Far from being a police state, America is virtually unique in its tolerance of dissent. If they want to protest totalitarianism, fascism, and social repression, they should take their signs and chants down Kalinin Prospect in Moscow, where police-state repression really does exist, and where their message needs to be heard. Of course, in Moscow they'd last about a minute and a half; but in the Student Union, or on the Amherst common, or in front of the White House, they are welcome to rant all afternoon about whatever's on their minds. And the sad thing is that they refuse to believe it.

While I sympathize with the student who complained about Reagan's educational cuts (I'll have to deal with them too), he said something that disturbed me greatly. It was stated in his letter that education is a right, not a privilege. Education is neither a right nor a privilege; it is nothing more than a commodity.

An education is not a prerequisite for a happy, fulfilling life. It is snobbish to imply that people without a college education somehow lack the intelligence or capacities to lead an important, contributive life. The mere thought that a college education is a right implies that, like food, or life itself, you need it to survive. This is not so. Also, you must look at the immorality of coercing everyone in this country to pay for the education of those who choose one. I will be willing to contribute freely to people's education when I start making money, and, as history shows, so would other individuals and businesses if tax burdens were eased.

Please, let's get away from these collectivist ideas, which only serve to divide the people of this country.

THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS AT AMHERST

Beckett's piece leaves no peace

Endgame
Fine Arts Center, University Ensemble Theatre
Feb. 25-28, 1981

By KEVIN DOUGHERTY
Collegian Correspondent

Samuel Beckett's Endgame was an existentialist's delight. This philosophical play which was performed before sell-out audiences at the Curtain Theater this past weekend, dealt with the idea of being stuck in a rut from which it is virtually impossible to remove one's self. The audience was presented with a microcosm of four people who had resigned themselves to an underground house. One could not decide whether the characters were there out of choice or necessity. Nonetheless, they were totally secluded from the outside world, which was described by one of the characters as being "corpse-like."

The essence of the play asked the question why one finds anything really important. The suggestion of this essence is echoed by Hamm who says, "You're on the earth, there's no excuse for that." Although such a thought is quite depressing, no one cried. The characters and the audience alike laughed. The laughter was usually not the kind which conveys happiness, but rather it was laughter at ourselves.

Technically, the play was commendable. The scenic, costume and make up designers and their crews deserve praise for their creation of a seemingly authentic patina. The technical aspects added to the aged, unanimated atmosphere.

The animation was the task of the actors, and despite the limited action, they brought the stage to life. The only real action was carried out by Clov (Alan Arenius), who had an athletically demanding role. Clov's frantic movement about the stage made up for the lack thereof in the other characters. The other three characters were confined to either trash barrels or a wheel chair, yet they were animated enough to fascinate the audience. Dennis Wemm's mannerisms as Hamm were fantastic, which is especially amazing considering the fact that his eyes were covered.

During the course of the play, Hamm's mother and father occasionally surfaced from their trash cans, and they lightened the plot somewhat with a touch of humor. Jay DiPuchhio and Dee Waterman as the parents had superb facial expressions, and they too worked well together. In fact, all the members of the cast complimented one another.

Collegian wins high rating

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian was given a first class rating by the Associated College Press for the Fall 1980 semester.

The paper, which has a readership of more than 20,000, received marks of distinction for coverage and content, writing and editing and opinion content. The award is the second highest given. More than 350 college newspapers were critiqued by the National Critical service of the ACP.

The judges said the Collegian's scope of sources showed an "excellent range of sources and topics," and praised the paper for devoting space to coverage of minority events and concerns.

The 31 page critique also suggested the paper expand on feature writing and indepth stories.

The critique also cited opinion feature writing as one of the strengths of the papers, saying it was "excellent thought and writing."

Tandem Is Coming On-Line

Tandem is the first computer company dedicated solely to the rapidly growing market of on-line transaction processing. In the last five years we've developed a computer system that is uniquely fault-tolerant. The Tandem NonStop™ system is the first commercially available system that operates without failure, without destroying data, and without changing software, even when expanding to a distributed data processing network.

Tandem representatives will be conducting scheduled interviews on campus, Wednesday, March 18th. To arrange for an interview, please sign up through the Placement Office.

Tandem offers an informal, creative environment for self-directed individuals who desire challenge. Our exceptional work environment includes new recreational facilities within our modern corporate headquarters complex, located in Cupertino, California. Beyond a full range of insured medical benefits, there is a stock purchase plan, continuing educational assistance and a 6 week paid sabbatical after 4 years in addition to normal vacations.

If you're an Electrical Engineer or a Computer Science major about to receive a Bachelor's or a Master's degree, consider the opportunities that our phenomenal growth, profitability and approach to research and development offers you. YOUR LAST 2 YEARS OF COLLEGE COULD BE YOUR FIRST 2 YEARS OF MANAGEMENT.

The Army ROTC 2-year program trains you to become an officer for a modern organization — today's Army — which also includes the Army Reserve and Army National Guard.

An officer who is not only a leader of men, but a manager of money and materials as well.

That's why one of the things you'll learn in our 2-year program is management training skills.

Your training will start, the summer after your sophomore year, at a six-week Army ROTC Basic Camp.

You'll earn over $400 for attending Basic Camp. And up to $1,000 for each of your last 2 years of Army ROTC.

But the biggest reward comes on graduation day. That's when you receive both a degree in your chosen major and a commission. And join the Army management team.

BU's Miller, poor referees, deflate UM

By KEVIN CULLEN
Collegian Staff

BOSTON—Boz Scaggs' words from "It's Over" coming from a cassette tape player on the bus down to Boston this weekend perhaps proved more prophetic than anyone on the University of Massachusetts women's basketball team would care to admit.

Playing in their final regular season game this season, UMass ran into Boston University's Debbie Miller and some pretty poor officiating Friday night as the Terriers went on to post a convincing 84-57 victory at BU's Case Center.

Miller put on a sterling two way clinic on how to play the game of basketball, scoring 33 points while grabbing 14 rebounds to go along with five assists, four blocks and six steals. It was, in fact, perhaps the most outstanding individual effort in women's basketball in New England this year.

While not discounting Miller's performance, UMass head coach Mary Ann Ozdarski was blunt in her assessment of the game:

"I don't often complain," Ozdarski said. "But tonight we had to play seven people (meaning the BU team and the two officials). There is just no way you can play basketball with the kind of officiating we saw tonight."

Ozdarski had a point. The tone of the game was set when, just 3:07 into the game, Ozdarski was assessed a tecunical foul for questioning a call which, even objective observers agreed, the official muffed. The call centered around UMass guard Wendy Ward, who was called for a travelling violation while attempting to pick up a loose ball. A travelling call requires that the offending player have possession of the ball. Ward never did.

"After that call and the technical foul, we knew we were in for it," assistant coach Steve Jefferson said.

While BU (17-6) made 14 trips to the free throw line, converting 11 of them, UMass (14-13) had just four foul shots in the same first half.

"When you find yourself in a game like that, you find yourself playing differently than you would normally," Ozdarski said. "Our kids were afraid to do things they'd normally do, because of the officiating."

Perhaps the most notable "victims" of poor officiating were UMass co captains Ginger Legare and Julie Ready. Legare, who had been doing a fairly good job containing the uncontainable Ms. Miller, found herself with three quick fouls, two of which were questionable. Six minutes into the second half, Legare had fouled out after playing just 12 minutes total time. Meanwhile, Ready managed to lead UMass with 22 points despite an all-night assault on her person by BU defenders who pushed, shoved and belted the Wade Trophy candidate, without much discouragement of their actions occuring in the forms of fouls.

"This was hack Julie Ready and get away with it night," Jefferson quipped.

Aside from the criticism of the officiating, much of it warranted, the night belonged to Debbie Miller. The 5'11" senior forward from the Bronx showed why she can—when she wants—be one of the very best female basketball players in the nation.

"I felt good," Miller said after the game. "It's the best I've felt for a while. We haven't beaten UMass since my freshman year, in the playoffs, so I couldn't leave it at that."

Miller's 17 first-half points and stalwart defensive play allowed BU to build a 45-35 halftime lead.

UMass didn't score until 3:12 into the second half, and hit yet another scoring drought, this one for nearly four minutes, midway through the half while shooting a dismal 31 percent (UMass shot just 38 percent on the night, as opposed to BU's 54 percent) as the Terriers built leads of as many as 26. BU ran off the last five points in the half—a half made eventful only by Martha Ready's gorgeous in-yo' face rejection of a Miller jumpshot—for the final 26-point margin.

Besides Julie Ready's 22 points and 10 rebounds, Nadine Jackson scored 11, while Cindy Clapp, Sherry Collins and Ward each had six.

The win assured BU's hold on its number one tanking in New England, while the loss cast UMass playoff chances in the dar. The Region 1 A selection committee was expected to announce the eight playoff berths last night.

UMass hoop fans will get one final chance to see freshman Edwin Green, shown here against Pitt's Sam Clancy, tomorrow night when the Minutemen host URI in the opening round of the Eastern Eight playoffs.

Playoff at Cage

Try this one on for size: the University of Massachusetts men's basketball team can qualify for the NCAA tournament.

Strange as that may seem, it is theoretically possible for the 3-22 Minutemen to do so, by virtue of George Washington University's 85-82 upset of West Virginia this weekend.

With West Virginia losing, the University of Rhode Island wins the Eastern Eight regular season title and will play UMass at the Cage, tomorrow night at 7:30, in the opening round of the Eastern Eight playoffs. Because this is URI's first season in the Eastern Eight conference, they are not allowed to host a playoff game, despite their first place finish.

If UMass can win tomorrow night, and go on to win two other playoff games, they will win the Eastern Eight playoff and automatically qualify for the NCAA tournament.

URI beat UMass 73-63 earlier this year at the Cage.

Tracksters have outstanding day

By JAMES GRAHAM
Collegian Staff

The other teams arrived at Boston University in clean, shiny new buses. The UMass team pulled up in a run down, blue physical plant van. Scores of scholarship atheletes piled out of the big buses. Six UMass runners got out of the van. The runners on the other teams jogged to the indoor track dressed in the latest, most colorful, runner's rain suits, sweats and racing gear. The UMass women, dressed in their street clothes, carried their plain grey and red sweats to the locker room.

Once they were competing it no longer mattered how fancy everyone else looked because it was the UMass women who were performing. Despite their lack of glitter and depth, the UMass women came in sixth out of over 20 teams at the women's New England indoor track championships held last Saturday at Boston University's Commonwealth Armory track.

Leading the scoring for UMass was junior Cathy Petrick who won the three mile in 17:00.7. Petrick took out the lead from the start and held on to set both a UMass and facility record in the event.

In the 55 meter hurdles, UMass's Micki Callahan ran a personal best 8.5 seconds but failed to make the finals. Callahan then went on to equal her best ever effort in the long jump with a leap of 17'7" which was good for second place. Junior Caroline Gardiner ran the unseeded mile in 5:18 to place fourth.

One of the highlights of the meet was the seeded section of the two mile in which UMass's Judy McCrone placed second in 10:30.4 behind Vermont's Judy St. Hilaire. McCrone's time was only .4 seconds off of the qualifying standard for the Nationals. "I was really happy with the way I ran," McCrone said.

The 4x880 yard relay team of Iris McDonough, Sally Anderson, Gardiner and McCrone took fifth place in a time of 9:26.7. "Individually everyone ran well. We lacked some depth and I would have liked if Tricia Moores could have run," Coach Julie LaFreniere said. Moores, a top distance runner for the cross country team last fall, has not raced this season because of injury. Except for McCrone and Petrick, who will compete in the Easterns next week at Harvard, this was the last meet of the season for the team.

Spikers place third in NE open tourney

By RANDI MARCUS
Collegian Staff

The New England Collegiate Volleyball Open resulted in University of Massachusetts men's volleyball team placing third behind Springfield College and Brown University, Saturday at Boyden Gym.

Last season, the spikers finished the Open eigth of 16 teams so the five-notch increase would be probably impressive to most. But Coach Al Morel and his team were unimpressed to the point of embarrassment.

Although UMass, (12-2), was seeded second behind Springfield and they had high hopes of winning. The tournament began at 10 a.m. and the Minutemen literally blasted the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and Williams College off the court with 15-3 victories in both games.

The Minutemen went on to beat Bryant College and University of Maine with the help of Steve Geryt's unstopable blocking powers and Pat Ryan's setting skills.

The fans were few and far between with just a few preppies strolling around from families of the Yale, Amherst, and Dartmouth College teams. UMass was doing just fine despite its lack of support from classmates.

The spikers met Brown University in the semi-finals and it was thumbs down to UMass as they missed the first five serves and proceeded to choke according to Morel.

"It was the first time all year we played badly," Morel said. "A mental lapse spread throughout the team, and if they met Brown again, we'd probably kill them."

UMass worked some new plays that proved to facilitate their earlier defeats. Kevin Russell and Mark Ruegg were diving for balls throughout the day, but when it came to Brown, passing and serving were at an untimely low point.

"Unfortunately it had to happen during the semi-finals of the Open. Maybe the team was anticipating the Springfield game, I don't know," said Morel. Morel said the loss served to teach a lesson to his team not to overconfidently look past any team.

The Minutemen have time to lick their wounds and practice before their next game Saturday at NOPE Gym.

Temple topples gymmen

By ELIZABETH MCGOWAN
Collegian Staff

Even the Minutemen's highest score of the season was not enough to outdistance a strong Temple University squad. The University of Massachusetts men's gymnastics team lost their third meet of the season, 259.80-253.45 on Saturday night in the Boyden Auxiliary Gym.

The UMass gymmen, competing at home for the first time in a month, now have an overall record of 7-3.

UMass coach, Roy Johnson, noted improvement in the Temple team this year. "They looked really good. I never expected Navy (who UMass lost to earlier this season) and Temple to be so strong. We definitely need to improve on our consistency."

A first place finish in the opening event, the floor exercise, by Mark Flanagan, helped the Minutemen win the event, 43.70-42.05. Senior Steve Craig followed Flanagan's 9.05 with an 8.95, to take second place.

Temple swept the next four events, but both teams had some outstanding performances.

UMass lost the pommel horse competition to the Philadelphians by a 2.75 margin. Freshman spark, Bob Gauthier, gathered an impressive 8.90 to win the event, while Temple took second and third places.

Gauthier, an all around performer, then hit for third place in the still ring competition. Leading scorer for that event was Temple's Keith Avery (9.3), who is ranked ninth in the East in all around competition. His teammate, Scott Bram, ranked first in the East on rings, finished second with a 9.2 score.

The long horse vaulting event belonged to Craig. His 9.7 led all competitors. Bob Lamb's 9.65 vault gave him second place, while Temple's Avery, Doug Brown and Walter Kenney swept the next three places.

Although the vaulting scores brought UMass to within 1.50 points of the lead, Temple successfully held any threat off. Led again by Avery, the Temple squad gathered the first five places on the parallel bars event.

The Minutemen won the final event, the high bar, by a 43.55-43.30 score. Avery paced the competition with a 9.45, but UMass co-captain Hugh O'Neall's 9.0 performance had the home crowd oohing and ahhing.

Avery's 52.55 all around score was tops for the day, followed closely by teammate Walter Kenney.

After the meet, gymman Flanagan echoed the words of his coach. "The team did well, but we'll be looking even better for Springfield next week," he said.

...Racism is used, practiced and maintained in this country because people make money off it...

AN INTERVIEW WITH JAMES STEELE

by Gus Martins NUMMO STAFF

James Steele, National Chairman of the Young Workers Liberation League, spoke to a group of seventy-five people February 26th Thompson Hall. Among his topics were the regression of government policy, the Reagan program which is gearing up for the recovery of maximum profits for corporations, and today's foreign policy which is reminiscent of the 50s and the domestic policies which resembles the 30s.

The following is an interview with James Steele.

NUMMO (I)What are some of the most obvious signs that show the Reagan administration cultivating a nationalistic feeling that may very well be a precursor to war?

STEELE First let me say that I think there are two words about the Reagan administration and youth especially. One is that his programs and policies and the affects are disastrous. His speech before Congress was an ideological speech that is very very aggressive. He feels fully justified to go along with certain ideological themes. One is that American has to be great again. The rock bottom of that is what you could call great power chauvinism, and he wants to plant this theme into the youth. It is very important to realize that the centerpiece to this is anti-Sovietism and anti-Communism; Reagan is reviving the rhetoric of McCarthyism.

NUMMO Black youth face the severest employment deprivation, upwards of 40 percent, considering the new right which way do you anticipate this phenomenon to swing?

STEELE Well I think that things are going to get worse for black youth. I see no change in the unemployment situation and I believe Reagan's economic policies are going to make things much worse. But then again, I think that black youth face new problems, the problems for black collegbe students are imminent, less are going to be able to go to school. Black youth face the problems of organization at the grass roots level. This has to be overcome. Still all the concepts of black youth being apathetic was wiped out on January 15 when more than 100,000 demonstrated in Washington to make Dr. King's birthday a national holiday; 75,000 of those people were black youth. It seems to me a clear indication of the direction they want to go.

NUMMO What are some of the obstacles you face in transmitting your messages to the youth of America?

STEELE Money and other resources are an obstacle. We make our own way in life. We get no funding from the government. In a way we are our own obstacle, because we have not fully learned how to take advantage of the resources that are out there.

NUMMO In terms of the Klan issue, what role is the YWLL playing to try to minimize their activities?

STEELE The Klan is a menace to society. We're trying to work at the level of education of youth; especially white youth, telling them that the Klan does not belong in your future. There is also a relationship between the Klan and the people in power and this has to be exposed and we're trying to do this. You do not have to wear a robe to be a racist; often, racists go along daily in three-piece suits.

NUMMO Do you see an underground conspiracy today, set fourth to endanger the lives of black people in this country?

STEELE Yeah, I think there is a conspiracy; it's organized, orchestrated by the highest officials of this country and generally the media participates in it. In the big cities the police are the shock troops of it and they feel that it is open season on black youth especially. You can hardly go to a major city right now where there has not been a police killing of black youth. The hard line of it is that black youth stood a better chance of surviving in Vietnam than they do in the big cities. The reason I say that is I think it is a conspiracy and when I say conspiracy I do not mean all whites are part of it or are participating in it, but part of the conspiracy is to demobilize whites who are against racism. To make them feel that they are a minority, so then maybe, the will be fearful to speak out. Racism is used, practiced and maintained in this country because people make money off it. Corporations make 80 billion from racism every year. This money could be used to fuel the unity among the working class; instead, it divides them in the plants and communities.

Antidraft Links with Antiracism

by Phillip Jennings NUMMO STAFF

Febuary 13-15 More than 1000 activists met in Detroit Mich. to put the antidraft movement on a course clearly opposing U.S. intervention in the third world.

The conference called by the National Committee Against Registration and the draft (NCARD). It started during the first national meeting of the nearly 2-year old anti conscription movement.

At the close of the conference it was resolved that NCARD and local antidraft groups would join the national campain against the rise of the KKK as well as joining other antiracist struggles. NCARD was then mandated to develop antiracist materials for the antidraft movement.

"We oppose the current political and economic conditions which push minorities and others into the All-Volunteer force."

The current war preparation has increased the existing pressure of the poverty draft, the resolution notes and has resulted in a lack of jobs which "forces a disproportionate number of poor and minority youths into the military, where they must defend with their lives a system which offers them no opportunity at home."

The conference condemned the racist nature of the legal draft, understanding that Black, Latino, and other minorities were drafted and killed during the Vietnam war, disproportionately to thier actual numbers in the population.

"It is impossible to wage a principled and effective struggle the draft and war without recognizing the relationship between militarism, racism, sexism and other forms of oppression."

Young brothers who are poor and unemployed end up in the military with absolutely no idea what they're fighting for. During the 1960's 24,000 ' Puertorriquenos' on the island were forced to fight in the Vietnam war to protect the interests of Uncle Sam. Even if your interests are different than his, you will die to preserve White Supremacy.

Poem

'Register Today'

Join the Army, be a man.
Sell your soul to Uncle Sam;
be sacrificed in Teheran
to burn and die on desert sand.
Army life it aint no joke,
breathing deep that burnt-flesh smoke;
fight for all the rich old folks,
be buried in an army coat.
Live the life of toil and pain,
rot in a trench in the mud and rain;
come home bandaged, limp and lame.
Or die in far-off fields.

—Andy Weisburd

NUMMO: There Have Been Some Changes

Nummo's readers from last semester should by now have noticed a major change in this semester's newspaper. There are no longer two pages sectioned off with the heading Eco Latino and one page with the heading Asian Affairs.

There is still the same amount of news and other material produced by Latino and Asian students and concerning Latino and Asian people--this should be obvious. But Asian Affairs and Eco Latino no longer exist as specially-designated sections of the paper. Black, Latino and Asian news are all spread throughout the body of the paper.

We feel that this change reflects the reality that information concerning one group of people really concerns all people who are struggling. Our intention is to make Nummo a more genuinely Third World publication. This was the same intention of the Nummo staff in 1979 when Asian Affairs and Eco Latino were incorporated to what was up to that point, basically a newspaper of the Black community.

By integrating the material we hope to continue to develop a more solidly Third World paper, the voice of Hispanics, Asians and Blacks. With the situation for national minorities in the United States steadily worsening, a stronger unity must be achieved and this step taken by Nummo aims for that king of unity.

This change is not necessarily permanent. It mainly depends on the response of the Black, Asian and Hispanic students on this campus to the change. But we feel that this change is another step in Nummo's ongoing development and growth since it was created in 1973.

With this in mind, we wish to give you some historical background to this new step:

A BRIEF HISTORY OF NUMMO.

Nummo was created by the Black News Service (BNS), an organization of Black students and faculty at UMass who wanted to do something about the systematic exclusion of minorities from the media. BNS emerged to service the community with relevant news and information.

As with any new organization, BNS suffered the problems of financial support. Being concerned with this situation, a Black organization calling itself CORE launched an investigation of the existing media organizations on campus which revealed that they were operating with no Black student input.

CORE then organized protests in order to force the Daily Collegian to have Black representation on its staff. The result of this action was the creation of two positions on the Editorial Board of the Collegian: Black Affairs Editor and Assistant Black Affairs Editor. This move contributed to the growth of BNS and provided the group with publication privileges to which they had formally not had access.

As popularity and demand for more news space developed, the editors and staff of BNS were faced with the challenge of providing more news coverage to Black people on campus and in the surrounding areas. With this demand Nummo News came into being.

In 1979 Eco Latino and Asian Affairs were included in the paper to allow the Latin American and Asian as well as other member of the Third World Community to have means of presenting news concerning them. Both sections were included to facilitate the process of maintaining the Thrid World community informed about events and news concerning them.

Today NUMMO is a medium that provides local, national, international, and cultural information. This publication is the core, which records and communicates to Third World peoples the essence of the on-going struggle for freedom

RACIST VIOLENCE i.e. POLITICAL TERROR

Part I

For at least a year there have been media stories about all types of racist violence committed against black people in different parts of the country. Buffalo, New York; Atlanta, Georgia; Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; and Miami, Florida have been in the news as the most outstanding examples.

In these cities black people have been killed, maimed and assaulted by various means from police brutalizations and outright murders by unknown assassins, to shootings and stabbings in full view of witnesses, to vandalism, arson and bombings of black homes and residential areas. Indeed there has been left a trail of death and destruction and, rivers of blood and tears in this country's black communities.

These brutal acts of racist violence on first inspection appear to be commited at random. Closer inspection has revealed what many have been timidly suggesting, i.e. that conspiratorial efforts are at work. Indeed the utmost ruthless efficiency by which these acts have been carried out definitely bears the mark of planning! The devistating thoroughness of the attacks that have left few victims alive, leads us to draw the conclusion that these acts have been consciously planned and carried out!!! What is worse it appears that even the children have not been spared from this onslaught.

What are the Authorities Doing?

To all these atrocities we must ask, what has been the response of the authorities?

In the cases involving unknown assassins, sniping, systematic murder, and other types of actual and symbolic violence (crossburnings, etc.) the response of law enforcement agencies has been apparent incompetence and admitted inability to conduct a thorough investigation for "lack of clues, evidence and witnesses!" The January 7, 1981 edition of the Guardian news paper cites a case:

"...six Klan members staged an armed nightime attack on a predominantly black housing project in Rodeo Contra Costa (Calif.). Two elderly tenents were almost killed, and extensive damage was done...Though the pick up which carried the men was traced and identified as owned by the leader of the local Klan chapter, there have been no arrests. When asked why the Klansmen have not been prosecuted, District attorney William O'Malley said that there had been insignificant evidence. When no arrests were forthcoming the attacks againsg black homeowners began in earnest..."

Concerning the Klan paramilitary training camps, while the F.B.I. hjas admitted they are "watching these groups closely"they as well as local authorities have claimed that they cannot take action unless they suspect some plan or intention on the part of these groups to violate the law."

Such a poor excuse was not needed a scant 15-20 years ago against the civil rights and black human rights movements!

Almost every domestic law enforcement agency was mobilized by the government under the infamous cointelpro program to arrest, harrass, railroad into prison and destroy leaders, organizers and organizations, movements and progressive activists of the Black Liberation Movement of the 1960s and 1970s.

Huey P. Newton a founder of the Black Panther Party recently told the Guardian newspaper: "The history of this country is one that attempts to destroy any black organization that works for social change. And the Federal government did not spare us, they just blew us out of existence."

Everywhere the Blue and Brown hand of political repression fell on the movement in the past the one key word which justified any action they felt necessary was conspiracy!!! But in a situation where weapons are openly brandished on the covers and TV screens of the nations media, where groups boast about their ability and intent to carry out terrorist ctions against black people and other minority nationalities the United States law enforcement agencies are found to be incompetent, unprepared and unable.!!

Why is this so? This question will be considered in next weeks' edition of Nummo.

Third World Unity

COMMENTARY

Sadanobu Ikemoto NUMMO STAFF

It is often mentioned and talked about. But what does it actually mean??

I grew up in a suburb of Boston in which residents are pretty much entirely white, mostly Irish-Catholic. I was a small minority. Throughout my experience growing up, it was always my perogative to fit into the white society. To "fit-in" I had to think as other whites and in many ways be more white than the whites themselves. By doing so I began rejecting my Asian heritage, not only rejecting it but even despising it. Why couldn't I be like everybody else? There were other Asians in the school I went to but acted and thought as I did. Thus I came in very little contact with them. Looking back, I actually avoided them . They reminded me of what I am, which I did not want to be.

Coming to college and being away from my hometown environment, I grew to be more aware of other Asians and by sharing our mutual experiences. I grew to realize my heritage and to hold it in pride for the unique place it has had in American society and history. Many other Asians felt and experienced the same things I did. Despite our differing nationalities, there was a bond that tied us all together. To understand other Asians' experiences was to ultimately understand myself.

Being Japanese, what tied me to others who were Chinese, Korean and Philipine? It was probably having shared the same experience in a heavily white society.

Third World Unity--it is not based on similarity of cultures, languages or traditions. Asian culture is uniquely different from African-american and Hispanic culture. Each can hold pride in its own accomplishments and traditions. It is our mutual struggle against the same institutions of racism, our search for dignity and rightful place in American society that is the universal factor of all Third World peoples. It is brotherhood and sisterhood based on our own shared experiences that makes us unique.

LETTERS

To the Editor:

I am writing in connection with NUMMO's front page last week (FEB. 23, '81). A young white fellow was pictured alongside a quote contending that we should have an "Irish month" instead of a Black month".

I am sorry that NUMMO's inquiring photographer did not inquire of me. I look forward to Black History Month every year. Ever since I learned to read, I have partaken of that incomparable storehouse of culture and lessons of struggle for democracy and dignity which is Afro-American history.

I am proud of my own Irish-American heritage. Irish-Americans have also had to wrest what rights they enjoy (like attending a University) from the grasping hands of this nation's rulers. One lesson that Irish-American have had to learn again and again, which I learned from my father, who learned it, inturn, from his Irish-American, working class parents. That is, that racist attitudes are not only morally incorrect, but more significantly, they are evidence of ignorance. Racism is evidence that you don't really understand the forces at work in the world with which you must contend in order to survive. Thus, not only will you participate in the victimization of others, but will also help perpetuate your own ignorance and victimization.

The myth of a congential antagonism between Afro-Americans and Irish Americans is very strong, bolstered by the media and strengthened by the fact that many of us believe it. Why does this myth continue to exist? Well, think about this: For how many hours could King and his corporate masters continue to rob the people of Massachusetts if Afro-American and Irish-American working people who together constitute the majority of metropolitan Boston, got themselves together to demand quality public education, decent mass transit, and jobs for all at union wages?

As we all struggle to keep afloat in the onslaught of Reaganism (and statewide "2 1/2" budget cuts) let's not pull each other under. United we stand, divided we fall---this phrase has never been truer than today.

Yours in Struggle,
John Howley

Dear Editor

Nummo educates, Nummo explores different viewpoints about the society around us. Nummo is about the Third World community. Lately, our paper has been under fire by several letters in the Collegian.

The Third World community has been given a raw deal too long. Nummo is for the Third World community and it is needed to help us feel unalienated by this school. Nummo has been doing a fine job keeping the Third World community together. The Collegian doesn't care about the Third World Community or our voice and some one has to.

The people in the Collegian wonder why we are so angry at the white society. Well, after 400 years of slavery anybody would and should be angry. We are human and have human feelings. We also have the need to express it and should be allowed to do so.

Before anyone gets the idea of discountinuing our newspaper, I think the Third World Community should write to both Nummo News and the Collegian. it's time for us to speak up for our newspaper. If we don't... relax folks; it's only our future.

El Salvador Will Win

by Nelson X

We are living in the 80's, time of frustration and repression Some of us live in our little world, from the dorm to classes because nothing affect us. Some of us try to preach the message which opens the eyes of the ignorant about what's happening in Latin America. We try to educate them through many means (specially films)

Some people are not willing to learn from us ('latino americanos') about our living struggle. What is happening in El Salvador occurs in all the Latin American countries.

The American government considers Latin America as the "back yard" of the United States. It is because of this that when Latin American countries strive to improve their socio/political and economic conditions the US takes a paternalistic attitude. This attitude consists of backing dictaror/military regimes.

The United States is always talking about self determination and human rights, but these exist only when the economic interests of the US are not harmed.

In El Salvador the poasantry wants a land reform. This land reform threatens the interests of the US as well as those of the 'minor' elite (the families that control the land). Thousands of people are being killed by the military junta (backed by the US) which is trying to silence the claims of the peasants who are the rightful owners of the land.

Therefore, I call on the progressive people to protest the American intervention in El Salvador, and back-up the people's struggle in El Salvador and Latin America.

BLACK LAND LOST

Statistical survey

Black people have had a long history of association with the land. The roots of black people in this country extend directly back to the land. During the slavery era most blacks worked in the fields engaged in agricultural production pursuits. When slavery was abolished it was clearly recognized by all that for the former slaves to be truly independent the emancipated blacks would surely have to have land in order to have farms of their own and the wherewithal to grow crops and raise livestock. Many blacks after slavery remained closely tied to the land; working as tenants, sharecroppers, farm laborers and owner-operators.

By 1910 blacks had miraculously managed to acquire and operate some 890,000 farms in the U.S. Full and part owners operated some 220,000 of these farms with another 670,000 being operated by tenants. The total number of acres in production on these black opeated farms was in excess of 46 million acres. That accumulation of acreage that occured when the black population was less than 10 million persons was a tribute and testimony to the merit, industry and thriftiness of the black farmers of that time.

Unfortunately, the years around 1910 marked a peak for black farm operators. Since that time the number of black farmers and the number of farm acres operated by blacks has steadily declined until at this point in time it is seen that blacks today with a national population of 25 million are farming only slightly more than 4,000,000 acres.

Does this mean that blacks as a group cannot realistically be a force in agriculture? It means nothing else! It is sad, but it is true. And in fact, if the established and apparent trend continues, we can accurately predict that come 1990 the number of black farms will be so small it won't be worth mentioning.

1900	746,717	41,766,238
1910	893,377	46,632,472
1920	925,710	44,945,178
1930	882,852	35,586,136
1940	681,790	30,925,243
	black farmers	acres operated
1950	559,980	26,275,128
1959	272,541	13,901,457
1964	184,004	10,439,934
1969	87,393	6,667,195
1974	45,594	4,341,284

Elections in Central Africa Republic

Following the adoption of a multi-party constitution earlier this month, preparations are under way for elections March 15. A number of prominent political figures who fled the country during the rule of former Emperor Bokassa have returned to capital the of Banqui and are now entering the contest. Current President David Dacko is readying his Central African Democratic Union to face the large field of contenders, comprised both of these returnees and internal leaders

A Long Arm

The Portuguese News Agency reported last week from Bissau that Guinea Bissau has arrested eight Zaire nationals who had entered the country secretly. They are suspected of plotting to do away with Nathaniel Mbumba and other Zairean exiles of the Congo National Liberation Front ,who have been living in Guinea Bissau since 1979. The FLNC headed the anti government uprisings in Zaire's Shaba province, adjacent to Angola, in 1977 and 1978, but the group has been less acive since the Zaire Angola reconciliation in late 1978.

Kuanda Reshuffles Zambian Leaders

Following the recent wave of strikes among Zambia's copper miners, coal miners and bank employees, President Kenneth Kaunda has ousted Mainza Chona, secretary general of the ruling United National Independence Party. Kaunda has also replaced Prime Minister Daniel Lisulo.Most of the worker unrest stemmed from the dismissal of union leaders from UNIP, and Chona has reportedly been replaced for his mishandling of the affair. Humphrey Mulemba, long-time party stalwart and Central Committee member has replaced Chona, while Nalumino Mundia, also a UNIP veteran has replaced Lisulo after the Prime Minster came under attak for inefficiency within the government.

Armed Raid in Uganda

Representatives of a group calling itself the Uganda Freedom Movement has claimed responsibility for a recent wave of attakks on police stations, military barracks, and a maximum security prison in the Kampala area. The group, which said in Nairich said in Nairobi that its forces already control the western region of Uganda, have denied connection with any political party and said that the attaks were the beginning of a civil war designed to restore democracy to Uganda.

The Uganda government is reported to have dispatched troops to restore order to the areas. In addition, it has acvMuseveni and his opposition party, the Uganda Patriotic Movement of responsibility for the attacks. Police have detained UPM General Sectortarty Bidandi Ssali, a former minister for local administration, but the where abouts of Museveni ere unknown.

Museveni is from western Unganda and is reported to have control of some 5,000 soldiers who were a part of the Front for National Salvation, one of groups active in the overthrow of Idi Amin.

Down in a Hole

British courts recently concluded a seven-week fraud trial arising foom the diversion of more than $2.2 million from Nigerian financial institutions to conspirators in both the UK and Nigeria. Telexes ordering the transfers of funds from Nigerian bank branches in London were intercepted and altered in Nigeria, the moneys being redirected into the conspirators' bank accounts. Five of the eight defendants received jail sentences, and several fines were also imposed; but so far only $12,000 of missing lunds have been recovered by the Nigerian banks.

ABOUT FORT APACHE

by Gertrudis Garcia NUMMO STAFF

It is not easy to accept that millions of dollars were spent to present such a distorted image of Blacks and Puerto Ricans as that done in the film Fort Apache: The Bronx.

Fort Apache: The Bronx is the traditional film about cops and thieves. This film like others of the same category presents cops as the good guys who are justified to assault, beat and kill people who are not following the law according their definition of it.

I would say that Fort Apache is a collection of the stereotypes white Americans (in this case those living in the North-east) have about Blacks and Puerto Ricans . This film presents: prostitution, murders, assaults, drugs, and alcoholism, all these presented as the modus vivendi of Blacks and Puerto Ricans.

The film is considered racist not because presents these problems. The film is racist because presents them out of context and proportions.

We know that big cities in the United States suffer the above mentioned problems.

For. ache, like all the films that present the problems of the big cities, tries to blame the minorities for them. The film fails to present the complete "picture" of the realities of Blacks and Puerto Ricans. The producers and director didn't use a single frame to present the cause of the problems these groups have. The film only presents the image that the producers of the film have of the minorities living in the South Bronx. The producers nor the director present good images of these people. They didn't present factories or other working places because they want to perpetuate the idea or image that Blacks and Puerto Ricans don't work. They (the producers-director) want to perpetuate the belief other white Americans have about Blacks and Puerto Ricans. Their belief is that Blacks and Puerto Ricans do not work because they can survive with the welfare checks.

The producers didn't present children going to school because they want to perpetuate the image that Black and Puerto Rican children don't go to school. In one scene of the film they present Puerto Ricans as Spanish speakers that don't want to learn English to communicate with the rest of the society. The reality is that after the second generation of Puerto Ricans in New York, Puerto Rican children speak both languages and when they speak only one this is English. The Puerto Rican adult population in New York always have tried to learn the English language.

The producers of the film failed also in presenting Black and Puerto Rican families. They did this trying to perpetuate the image that within these groups the family is very unstable. When they presented a Puerto Rican family, presented it living in an overcrowded apartment where rooms had any privacy. Does a boycott against the theaters showing this film stop them from presenting these images against women and other minorities in the United States?
No.

Today in order to produce a film millions of dollars are needed. It is because of this that directors and producers go to big businesses to get the necessary money. In order to assure that the money they are taking from big companies will come back, director and script-writers have to present the sensationalism and fantacies the film goers want to see and pay for.

It is against " big money businesses" as Time-Life, Columbia Pictures, Gulf and Western and others that the boycotts should be directed. We know that these companies produce multitude of products. Why not boycotting their products?

I recommend to anyone who wants to see the film to go and see it, then I have one question to them. Do you agree with the images about Blacks and Puerto Ricans presented in the film? If the person answer yes, then I know that she or he already had wrong images about Blacks and Puerto Ricans. The next thing I would do is to remind those people who agree with the film that they belong to a decaying system of values. A decaying system not because is old but instead because Black, Puerto Ricans, Italians, Chicanos, Mexicans, Japanese, lesbians, gays and all the oppressed people are saying NO to it.

Justice in South Africa

by Lance Parham NUMMO STAFF

Thursday February 19, Professor of Law Albie Sachs lectured at Hampshire college, on Justice in South Africa. Sachs was exiled in 1966 for defending people accused of anti-aparthied activity. He now teaches law at the University of Eduardo Mondalane located in Maputo Mozambique.
The fifty students in attendence were stunned as Professor Sachs spoke of the treatment of South African political prisoners. The group listened with intense interest as Sachs lectured on these prisoners behalf.

According to Sachs, prisoners are given shock treatment by South African police for interrogation purposes. They are herded to prison, chained in clusters, and packed in vans as if they were animals. The captives are then taken to a place called Robin Island (a South African prison), where they are beaten and called 'caffers'similar to 'nigger' in the English language.

Prisoners receive inadequate clothing and food. They are put to work at jobs which are nothing more than physical torture. If a prisoner rejects any prison rule, like not wanting to push a huge roller all day, he is greeted with a whip. In one case a man was buried up to his chin in sand and the wardens then urinated on his head and face.

Total isolation from the outside world prevents the prisoners from hearing anything about their country. They are not allowed to read newspapers, magazines nor books. Sachs specifically talked of one his colleagues who spent ten years in prison under such conditions. After being released this man found that aparthied had grown worse in his country. He said that even the children were brought up to hate Blacks. For example, the children would point guns at him and say things like " kill that caffer".

This man spent ten years in prison for refuting aparthied only to be released into a worse South Africa. This is what they call justice in South Africa: Legal Aparthied.

Announcements

The John Brown Anti-Klan Committee is sponsoring a forum and a demonstration on Friday, March 6, as part of celebrating International Women's Week 1981. There will be a demonstration demanding ROTC out of the University at noon on March 6, starting from the UMass Student Union. From Zimbabwe to Nicaragua, women are winning their liberation today by defeating imperialists control of their nations, and building a society where women's liberation is becoming a reality. Right now the U.S. military, much of whose leadership is trained and recruited by ROTC, is mobilizing to attack liberation struggles from El Salvador to Namibia in the name of fighting "international terrorism." The Ku Klux Klan is carrying out major organizing within the U.S. military today. This exposes the fact that the Klan and the U.S. military are fighting to protect the same thing: an imperialist system which is rooten in white supremacy. The demonstration is being called as part of fighting to advance women's liberation in this country through stopping ROTC's organizing for imperialism and white supremacy in this community.

There will be a forum on the night of March 6 on Women's Liberation and the Fight Against White Supremacy, at 7:30 in UMass Campus Center Room 808. The forum will include a slide show on "Women Freedom Fighters in Zimbabwe." A $2.00 will be requested at the door to benefit legal work for an investigation of Seta Rampersad's murder.

For further information, people can call: 584-1000.

LECTURE

The Smith College student lecture committee will sponsor a talk called THE TRUE STORY OF GREENSBORO, By Paul Bermanzohn, on march 3, at 8pm in the Wright Hall Common Room.
Bermanzohn is a member of the Communist Workers Party and an organizer of the anti Klan movement in North Carolina. His political activism begin with his participation in the anti-war movement of the 1960s and the drive to free the Wilmington 10.
A native New Yorker, Bermanzohn graduated from New York's City College and the Duke Medical School in Durham, North Carolina. He co founded the Carolina Brown Lung Association, which screens textile workers for symptoms of brown lung disease.
The talk is free and open to the public.

Third World Theater Series 1981

The Mighty Gents by Richard Wesley is the first original production of 1981 by the Third World Theatre Series.
Set in the early 70s in Newark, NJ, the story revolves around four members of a 60's gang. Once rough, tough and always ready, now dinosaurs, the last survivors of an extinct breed, they face the fact that their prestige as head knockers and lovers supreme has slipped away. Through The Gents, Wesley has tried to capture the desparation and frustration of a life of bare survival.
The play will take place in Hampden Theatre, Southwest, University of Massachusetts at 8pm on March 13,14,15, and April 3, 4, 5.
Tickets: $2 students...$3 general public
Seasons passes available

Private Scholarships for You

The financial aid situation for Umass students for 1981-82 will be grim. Federal and state funds will be very limited Reagan administration, Proposition 2 and a half, etc., many people may have to borrow money. But there are many PRIVATE financial aid sources available religious organizations, civil associations, social clubs, unions, employers, charities, etc. Awards are based on all types of criteria financial need, academic merit, ethnic background, religious affiliation, community activism, hobbies, sports background, etc.

WE at CCEBS can assist you in tracking down these private sources via a free computer search, Mass Occupational Informational Search- Finacial Aid Search. Please come down and out the simple questionnaire before March 5. This is in addition to the standard 1981-82 Financial aid form to Princeton, NJ.

女 ASIAN WOMEN: MYTH AND REALITY

by Michi Nakagama NUMMO STAFF

On Saturday, March 7, The Mount Holyoke College Asian Student Association (MHCASA) and the East Coast Asian Student Union/New England Region (ECASU/NE) will sponsor a conference titled "Asian Women: Myth and Reality". The main purpose of the conference is to address and explore current issues facing Asian women in American society in order to understand how these issues affect all Asians. Another purpose of this event is to promote a greater unity among Asian student and community organizations. To facilitate this, all groups will have the opportunity to set up information tables at the conference.

The conference begins at 10 am with introductory remarks by Michi Nakagama, on behalf of the MHCASA, and Jim Kim of Brown, on behalf of the ECASU/NE. This will be followed by keynote speeches by Yun Kochiyama, a longtime Asian activist, and Gloria Chun, who hosts a talk show in Boston. There will be two two-hour sets of workshops, with three workshops offered in each set. They include: "Asian Women in the Labor Force", a panel discussion with Suzanne Lee (a teacher and community activist in Boston), May Chen (A New York community activist), Nadine Chien (an MHC '80 graduate, now doing scientific research in Washington,D.C.), Professor Koh (a Yale professor specializing in Asian women's studies); "Asian Women in Asian Student Organizations" conducted by Sandy Leung of Tufts University; "Asian Women in the Arts and Media", a panel discussion and presentation with Roberta Uno (UMass professor, playwright and director), Renee Tajima (a Radcliffe graduate, now with Asian Cine Vision in New York), Sasha Hohri (an Asian artist and activist), Fay Chiang (Asian American poet); "History of Asian Women in America", a slide show produced by the Radcliffe Asian Women's Group in '79-'80, with a discussion following it; "Ourselves", a film and discussion about the problems and stereotypes associated with growing up Asian and female in America.

There will be a disco, "Midnight Magic" on Friday 6, in Chapin Auditorium, with an after party, "Funkdown" following at the Betty Shabazz house. On Saturday night, March 7, there will be an Amherst-Mt. Holyoke "Asian Night" at Buckley Recital Hall, Amherst College, with a dis co following it at the Alumni House.
We urge everyone to attend this interesting, informative and fun filled weekend!

UMass women's week cancelled

By ANDREA ATKINS
Collegian Staff

Activities planned to commemorate International Women's Week at the University of Massachusetts were cancelled yesterday because of a "failure to involve a diverse group of women" in its planning and implementation.

In a statement issued last night, the organizers of the week cited as the reason for cancellation the "failure to involve a diverse group of women in the initiation and realization of International Women's Week to insure proportional representation of Third World women in decision-making."

International Women's Week, which was to include a series of workshops, panels, films and discussions, was scheduled to begin tomorrow and continue through March 8, International Women's Day.

The Third World Women's Task Force dropped out of the planning of this year's activities because their interests were "under represented," according to task force members at a meeting two weeks ago. Group spokeswomen said a conflict of interests had existed for a number of years.

The conflict over representation is part of a larger conflict within politics and history, according to the organizers statement.

"For the past three years of planning International Women's Week, we have experienced difficulty in coalition work precisely because cultural, sexual, racial and class differences have not been adequately addressed by the organizers of the week or in the women's community at large," the statement said.

The commemoration of International Women's Week has been a week-long celebration at UMass since 1977. International Women's Day has been celebrated internationally since 1911. The event has been commonly regarded as a tribute to women's role and struggle in the working world.

The statement said the decision to cancel the week is a reflection of the organizers commitment to address the problems of the womens' community, particularly the needs of Third World women.

Members of the Third World Women's Task Force contacted yesterday declined to comment.

Sophia Haughton, treasurer of the Distinguished Visitors Program, one of the scheduled sponsors of the event, said the women's week organizing committee was to receive "somewhere near $4,000" for its activities. The DVP will absorb a loss of $175 for posters, Haughton said.

A spokesperson for the Commuter Collective, another of the scheduled sponsors of the week, said he was counting on money from the committee to help pay for Nobuko, a concert group scheduled for Thursday night. Jose Tolson said the collective postponed the original date of the concert, which will cost $3,000 because it was feasible to schedule it during the Women's Week.

"We wanted to have the concert within the week as our contribution to it," Tolson said.

Tolson said he believed there was money in the women's week account left from last year. Student Government Association Treasurer Albert Wallace said the account was not on the frozen accounts list, but did not have an exact dollar figure.

Events scheduled for International Women's Week at the Herter Art Gallery will go on as planned because they are not under the jurisdiction of the women's week committee said Janet Feldman, a spokeswoman there.

Students gear up for elections

SGA accepts BOG nomination papers

By GREG VOLPE
Collegian Staff

The nomination papers of 24 University of Massachusetts students running for positions on the Campus Center Board of Governors were submitted yesterday to the Student Government Association , in preparation for the elections scheduled for next week.

The students, who will be running for a total of seven different positions on the BOG, were required to submit their papers to the SGA's Governmental Affairs Committee.

Thirteen of the 24 students who are running for the 10 possible open positions in the "at large" category. They are : Greg Dennis, present BOG Food Services Committee chairman; Bruce McCarter; Scott M. Cashman; James A. Buckley; Michael Ferrigano; Timothy F. Burke; Maria Carzis; Judy Stearns; Adam L. Peck; Scott Freedman; Kathleen McGettigan; Michael B. Cohen, and Jay R. Englander.

Nominated for the three open commuter positions are Jim Mathison, Ernest J. Dwork, Nancy J. Bailey, and Jeff Figgie.

There is one open position each for Central, Sylvan, Orchard Hill and northeast Residential Areas, and two open for the Southwest Residential Area.

Students running for positions for area government and representatives are Debra F. Abramoff of Central area; Barbara Hammond and Seth Singer, both of Southwest; Paul Bruno, Sylvan and Peter Franklin of the Orchard Hill area.

Finally, Lori Dratch and Christina M. Kelly will be competing for the position of Greek area representative.

Nomination papers were not submitted for Graduate student appointments, Third World representatives, Handicapped representatives, or the one open Northeast area representative position.

Ballot Boxes for the election, which will take place on March 10 and 11, will be placed in all dining commons and at the front of the hatch in the Student union Building. All University students may vote.

Presidential candidates state campaign objectives

By PAUL A. BASKEN
Collegian Staff

Nominations for the office of president of the Student Government Association closed yesterday with four groups of two students each announcing their copresidential candidacies.

Incumbent co-President Richard LaVoice is running for his third consecutive term, this year with Ruth Mazzola, co-president of the Southwest Assembly. LaVoice's co-president, Richard Moran, will graduate this year.

LaVoice, a junior, has also served as president of the state student association, and as a member of the University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees. Mazzola, a sophomore, is also treasurer of Students Advocating Financial Assistance (SAFA).

She said the main goal of LaVoice and she would be getting increased financial aid for University students.

Nelson Acosta, a junior, is running with Edward Lee, a senior. Acosta is a member of the Undergraduate Student Senate where he served on the coordinating and budget committees. Acosta said his primary concerns include financial aid increases and elimination of tuition hikes in the near future.

Lee is also a senate member and has served on the budget committee Lee said he would attempt to organize students in a voting bloc for student and university interests.

Regents board aims to avoid House conflict

By THOMAS S. BROWN
Associated Press

BOSTON — The chairman of the new Massachusetts Board of Regents said yesterday his panel is willing to take budget orders directly from the Legislature for campus spending in fiscal 1982.

Chairman James Martin's statement before the House Ways and Means Committee was intended to avoid a budgetary showdown between the House panel and the new educational superboartd, which assumed its full powers Sunday.

The board was created last year to have independent financial control over the state's colleges and universities.

But Martin said he was proposing that the Regents "allocate funds exactly as they come to us from the General Court Legislature" instead of shifting money later from one campus to another. The one exception to that policy, he said, would be the campuses located in Boston, which are a target for consolidation.

A total of $86.1 million has been earmarked for the University of Massachusetts at Amherst campus, a decrease of $605,000 from this year's budget.

Almost $2 million proposed for program changes and improvements will have to be scrapped if additional funds are not allocated.

Graduate teaching and research assistants and general equipment funds will be severely affected by the proposed budget cuts, according to Kenneth Moore, chairman of the Undergraduate Student Senate's Public Policy Committee.

Chairman Martin also pledged that before any campuses are closed or consolidated, the regents will inform the Legislature's leadership and the lawmakers from the affected areas. However, he added that no consolidations are being contemplated that would involve any campus outside Boston.

The regents board wants the state to spend $337 million on its higher education system in the next fiscal year, about $2 million less than current spending.

Last week, the regents presented its lump-sum request, angering House Ways and Means Chairman John J. Finnegan, D-Boston.

He contended the regents were supposed to give the Legislature campus-by-campus spending proposals during the transitional period. And, in retaliation, he filed a bill to delay the regents' assumption of power until three months after the hiring of a chancellor.

Finnegan's measure received a quick endorsement in the House yesterday but was not expected to advance much farther because of Martin's conciliatory move. Finnegan, who leaves his Ways and Means post today to become state auditor, remarked that he appreciated the tone of Martin's statement.

Martin compared the old campus-by-campus budget-making process to "bargaining for a rug in an Oriental bazaar." Nevertheless, he said he would ask his board to follow it for one more year, subject to Gov. Edward J. King's approval.

Two waste sites added in grand jury probe

By JAMES SIMON
Associated Press

BOSTON — A grand jury probe of an alleged New Jersey-to-Massachusetts hazardous waste dumping ring has been broadened to include two new Bay State sites, where up to 4,000 barrels of chemicals may have been discarded, state government sources say.

The Plymouth County grand jury has already returned indictments against seven individuals, including reputed organized crime figure John Albert, and two corporations, on charges they took part in a scheme to pick up chemical by-products in the New Jersey industrial heartland and dump the waste in Plymouth, Kingston, Middleboro and Halifax.

The current investigation centers on two additional sites in Plymouth—the Manoment and Cedarville landfills, where officials estimate up to 4,000 55-gallon barrels of waste may have been illegally dumped, sources told the Associated Press.

The barrels were discovered last April at the same time as other southeastern Massachusetts dumpsites, but no charges were immediately brought.

There appears to be "some link" between the kind of chemicals found at the two landfills and the chemicals found dumped at the other sites, said Amanda Ray, a spokeswoman for the state Department of Environmental Quality Engineering.

Assistant Attorney General Richard Kelly, who is prosecuting the dumping case, confirmed Monday that the grand jury was still hearing evidence, but said he could not comment further.

The indictments of the seven men last summer mark the first time a New Jersey-to Massachusetts dumping connection has been alleged, Attorney General Francis X. Bellotti said.

The case has taken on wider implications because of the involvement of Albert, who owns part of several chemical disposal companies and is described in New Jersey state police reports as a "soldier" in the Frank Tieri organized crime family.

Federal law enforcement officials are increasingly worried that organized crime may be moving into the lucrative hazardous waste disposal field.

More jobs seen in the future

BOSTON (AP) — Massachusetts electronics and computer firms will have to scour universities and large corporations for employees to fill 60,000 new jobs by 1983, according to a report by the Massachusetts High Technology Council.

The study of 61 "high tech" companies found the burgeoning industry hired 21,000 people last year, despite recessionary jitters. The same companies project their total employment will swell from 86,000 this year to 147,000 in mid-1983.

Nearly 40,000 of those new jobs will be in what the council calls "high demand catagories," including engineers, computer scientists, chemists and others with degrees in the sciences.

Howard Foley, president of the council, said companies are going to have to change their hiring habits if they are to fill those jobs. To do that, the companies will have to make more visits to college campuses, both in the Northeast and the rest of the country.

"A few years ago, the high tech companies demanded a minimum of five years experience from an applicant," he said. "The emphasis was on pirating away people who already know how to do the job."

With the market running thin, Foley said the industry will have to start nurturing potential employees at a lower level.

State tries to give parents role in daughters' abortions

BOSTON (AP) — The state's latest attempt to give parents a role in their daughters' decisions to obtain abortions was scheduled to take effect yesterday, but it has again been delayed by legal maneuvering.

The major legal challenge, mounted by Planned Parenthood and the Civil Liberties Union of Massachusetts, is before the 1st U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals. The two groups are asking the judges for a rehearing on their decision to uphold the parental consent abortion law.

The appeals court is expected to rule on the request shortly, and the abortion law cannot take effect until seven days after it acts.

Reagan complains of interest groups' threatening power

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan assailed yesterday the special interest groups standing in the way of his economic recovery program and pleaded with urban leaders to realize that "the only power needed to restore America's strength is will power."

In his first formal speech since he advanced his budget and tax cutting plan to Congress on Feb. 18, Reagan complained to the National League of Cities that a "political gauntlet of interest groups" threatens to dismantle it.

While some have raised legitimate concerns, he said, "I'm finding it increasingly difficult not to call some of them selfish interest groups."

Soviets: US relations should rest on dialogue

MOSCOW (AP) — As the 26th Soviet Communist Party Congress prepared to vote for a new party leadership, a leading Soviet spokesman said yesterday that Washington and Moscow need not rush into a summit meeting but should hold an "active dialogue" in preparation for such talks.

Leonid Zamyatin, a party spokesman, told reporters that "a certain preparatory period may pass" before any summit between Soviet President Leonid I. Brezhnev and President Reagan.

"Of course, it is better to have a prepared meeting than an unprepared one," he said.

Women in media topic of discussion

By JOAN McKENZIE
Collegian Staff

"Women in the media are subjected to an insidious revolving door syndrome," Charlayne Hunter-Gault, interviewer for the MacNeil-Lehrer Report, said Sunday night at Amherst College.

Gault was the keynote speaker to kick off the college's International Women's Week, running through March 8. This year's theme is "Women in the Media." Gault, a reporter for the N.Y. Times for 10 years, said a cycle exists in which young, attractive inexperienced, women are hired for broadcast positions on television, and because of their inexperience are incompetent and are fired. Equally young, attractive, inexperienced women are hired to replace them and in short order these women are fired.

Gault said the "revolving door syndrome" may create a false expectation for women entering journalism.

One of the first black students to attend Georgia University, Gault said she experienced first hand the media's powerful influence.

"I got an unusual amount of attention placed on me as one of the first black student attending Georgia University. Some doors were open to me in journalism, but I was never accepted automatically until I could prove myself competent," Gault said.

Gault said the media had a deep impact on the civil rights movement. But, she said the reporters of these events to the public were too concerned with capturing the drama of the protests and not examining their impact on society.

"The protests in the 60's became the ends, not the means. It was as if the significance of the events had eluded their own consciousness," Gault said.

She said that in many cases she was the only black, and the only woman in a job, and what sustained her was a confidence in her abilities. "I never had doubts it would work. I always believed in myself," she said.

Gault said that today, just as when she began her journalism career, white, middle-aged men are in supervisory positions. To succeed in journalism, one must be smarter than those in control.

Gault said the doors are only open to a few at a time in journalism, and it is important for women who succeed to remember their initial struggle. "It is important for those of us who got through the door to remember how we got there," she said.

Political image building

Women face problems

By KELLY BURKE
Collegian Correspondent

Although women candidates normally have the built-in support of female constituents, it is still harder for them to raise campaign funds and create an effective political image, Libby Moroff, political director of Elizabeth Holtzman's 1980 race for the U.S. Senate, said last night.

Moroff, addressing an Amherst College audience of about 45 people, said that Holtzman, a former House Democrat from New Ybrk, lost her race because she was unable to raise adequate funds.

"It's harder to raise money for a woman than a man," said Moroff, who spoke as part of the college's International Women's Week program.

"Liz lost because we couldn't get on television enough, because we didn't have enough money," Moroff said. "Much of the big money is still held by men who are reluctant to give it to a woman."

Moroff said she thinks men still feel safer giving money to male candidates. She predicted the situation will eventually improve for female candidates.

A political candidate, Moroff said, must have a certain image to present to the press, which will then present that image to the public and attract votes. She said that a female candidate is caught in the bind of the image of seductive woman versus serious political candidate. Moroff thinks that men tend to want women to act in a seductive way. Holtzman did not convey such an image, Moroff said.

Smartness and honesty are traits that are easier to portray in a female candidate than toughness or forcefulness because often the public interprets the latter qualities as meanness and "bitchiness" in a woman.

Moroff said that in recent years successful women politicians have tended to be "mother figures," such as Margaret Thatcher and Golda Meir. Such a image might hinder younger female candidates.

Moroff is currently a vice chairperson of the New York state Democratic Committee and also works at the Metropolitan Action Institute for Civil Rights Research and Advocacy.

Final campus improvements to get underway

by LAURIE CANTALUPO
Collegian Correspondent

Memories of inconvenience, confusion and detours may soon return for motorists and pedestrians as the last one-third of the university's new roadway construction begins this semester, said William Lambert, a UMass landscape architect.

Although the bulk of the road work has been completed, Lambert said there is still over $500,000 in work remaining, including handicap modifications, new lighting, and more pavement.

Lambert said the remainder of the work is scheduled to begin as soon as all signs of frost are gone. All the work should be completed by the time students return next fall, he said.

To meet federal regulations regarding access tor the handicapped, some sidewalks and handrails will be put on both sides of these ramps.

"Every square inch of the project meets the handicap code," lambert said.

Lambert said the remaining work also includes the construction of new walkway and street lighting on Massachusetts Commonwealth and Governor's Avenues. The present fixtures with very high pressure sodium cut-off fixtures, which will give "a no glare effect."

These lights cost a little more, but use less electricity and give more light and will be "quite a change," he said.

Lambert named four intersections where new traffic lights will be installed, three of which will also have pedestrian crosslights. Hazard warnings which will flash yellow 24 hours a day, are currently being installed near the Southwest Residential Area.

The work also involves repaving Massachusetts, Commonwealth, and Governor's Avenues and N. Pleasant Street. Crosswalks are then going to be painted on the new roads. Grassy areas surrounding the construction will either be seeded or sodded.

Lambert said that students' attitudes have been "commendable" for the past 2 years, an improvement from past behavior, which included more vandalism to campus property.

Whereas five years ago contractors were afraid to do work at UMass, the general attitude on the part of the students has not been to tear things apart," Lambert said.

Bernie Mandeville of the Collins Electric Company of Chicopee checks the level of a new traffic light pole as his co-worker Joe Welch secures the pole to its base. The installation of the lights is at the intersection of Sunset and University Drives. Mandeville said that a blinking yellow light will warn motorists of heavy pedestrian traffic.

Steve Boro of the Physical Plant removes mud and debris from a sewer on University Drive after last week's heavy rains. Boro nicknames his job "pearl diving." Although no pearls have ever been recovered, some of Boro's colleagues have salvaged coins with their shovels.

Women's health conference to be held at Hampshire

"A Working Conference on Women's Health Care" is scheduled for March 6-8 at Hampshire College.

The purpose of the conference which is being sponsored by a number of area groups is to promote ideas for improving the health care of women.

A series of workshops and discussions are scheduled. Various topics include natural healing, contraception, nursing, toxic shock and Third World Women's health care.

information and registration forms are available through the Women's Center at Hampshire College, 549-4600 X540.

Students invited to join committee lobbying effort

Will you be able to afford your education next year? Are you worried about the kind of education you'll get by the time you graduate? Your worries may be a reality unless you help. The University of Massachusetts budget may be cut severely by the State Legislature this year.

Interested students are invited to join the student lobbying effort with the Public Policy Committee of the Undergraduate Student Senate and SCERA. Participants are given a chance to learn communication and educational skills. For information, call Ken Moore at the senate office, 545-0341.

Goals of DVP: Quality and diversity

By DAVID LISTON
Collegian Correspondent

Editor's Note: In response to the series on Recognized Student Organizations printed in the Collegian last semester, the series will continue periodically this semester.

Since the Distinguished Visitors Program was established in 1959, it has tried to stimulate critical thought and debate by sponsoring such diverse speakers as Art Buchwald, Bill Lee, Andrew Young, Margaret Mead, G.Gordon Liddy and Daniel Ellsberg.

The major goal of the DVP is to present the highest quality program possible. "We try to interest everybody," co-chairman Jim Pappas said. "One thing the DVP wants to do is to make the lectures accessible to the handicapped, which includes sign language."

All the DVP lectures are taped and copies are kept in the DVP Archives on the 25th floor of the UMass library in room 2566. The DVP also funds Martin Luther King Week and International Women's Week, bringing in speakers for each event.

This semester the DVP will sponsor at least seven lectures. Upcoming speakers include former U.S. Senator and former Democratic presidential nominee George McGovern on March 10 and Elie Weisel, a Nazi concentration camp survivor, who is the chairman of the U.S. Holocaust Memorial Council, on March 16.

Other speakers include Lois Gibbs, a former resident of Love Canal, who is a national spokeswoman for Citizens Fighting Illegal Dumping of Hazardous Wastes, on April 4; Victor Tomseth, a former hostage in Iran, on April 15, and Betty Williams, co-recipient of the Nobel Peace Prize for her work in Northern Ireland, on April 28. UMass programs: What you do is what you are

EARTH SCIENCE BOOK

Sarah Bever

It is easy to understand why UMass has acquired the nickname "Zoo Mass." Even simpler is to expect, from its in-state reputation, that one is in for a four year ride; complete with beer, frat parties, and a fair share of "gut" courses. College is most definitely a time to enjoy, and be irresponsible (during the weekends); it is however also a time to expand one's intellectual horizons. Even though the "prestige," and tuition of this institution may not be high, this school is jammed with innumberable exciting programs. Unfortunately, these special programs have been overlooked for too long—the general student body cares little, and knows even less about them.

I cannot think of any other $1500-a-semester University, where one can also take courses at so one of the most highly acclaimed colleges in the East for our low tuition. The cost of these schools is approximately $8,000.00 a year. Obviously, we are not using our inbred "Yankee Ingenuity" by letting these opportunities pass us by.

The Five College Office is located in the east wing of Machmer Hall, very close to CASIAC. Why not drop in now that registration is over, peruse the catalogues, and choose a course or two for next semester? One can take as many Five College courses a semester as they please, provided one course at UMass is taken. Not only is it an expanding experience to take a class at another campus, all of the Five College courses are worth 4 credits. The bus service is excellent—schedules are abundant, and the buses run quite regularly. The work load, depending on the course, may be a little heavier. But with more work, one aquires more knowledge.

The Honors Program (which is also located on the east wing of Machmer near CASIAC) is another under utilized opportunity. The classes are smaller, and the students seem to be more interested in the course material. It is therefore more fun to delve right into a subject amidst a group of not only highly motivated, but also very interesting people. Again, the work load is a bit heavier; but Honors courses also earn 4 credits, and enable one to graduate with high Honors.

The Bachelors Degree with Individual Concentration (BDIC), program is located in the basement of Bartlett Hall. This program gives students an opportunity to form their own major either by combining two already approved majors, or by creating a new one to suit an individual student's needs.

The only real drawback of going here (aside from the long lines, and the delicious foods) is the minority of interested and enthusiastic advisors. I realize that every advisor is responsible for far too many students; perhaps if we, the students, met with them during the middle of the semester, instead of the hectic periods, we could gain a greater amount of valuable information.

Perhaps if we scour this vast campus, we will find, and can share other unknown opportunities. This is our education, after all. What we put into it is exactly what we will leave here with. Why not take advantage of some of the opportunities offered? By doing so, we will not only be improving ourselves, but improving our school as well.

'Context' precludes Women's Week

We, as organizers of International Women's Week, regret to inform the Amherst-Northampton area community that the scheduled events for International Women's Week 1981 are cancelled. This decision has come after long and painful consideration—a process which was prompted by the Third World Women's Task Force's withdrawal from the planning of the week.

The seriousness of the situation between women in the Valley community is manifested each year in conflicts surrounding International Women's Week. This year, as in times past, there was a failure to involve a diverse group of women in the initiation and realization of International Women's Week, and to insure proportional representation of Third World Women in decision-making.

This situation fits into a larger historical and political context which has functioned to divide women and continues to divide us. For the past three years of planning International Women's Week, we have experienced difficulty in coalition work precisely because cultural, sexual, racial and class differences have not been adequately addressed by the organizers of the week or in the women's community at large.

Although International Women's Week is an important time, it is off-base to assume we would come together in unity to plan one week without dealing with the broader problems that have been facing us for years. We cannot expect to come together without honestly addressing our differences and explicitly stating our various priorities and goals in coalition work. We, as part of the International Women's Week organizers of 1981, regret that this year's situation was allowed to reach the point where the Third World Women's Task Force felt compelled to withdraw.

Our decision to cancel International Women's Week reflects our deep commitment to working through the particular problems that the women of our community have had in understanding and working with each other. We don't want this to be seen as the dissolution of International Women's Week but rather as the basis for building the unity that will allow us to create a real International Women's Week in the future.

With the latest wave of repression nationally and internationally, there is an urgent need for oppressed peoples to come together. In this light, we find it is particularly important for us to resolve our conflicts and strive for unity in our struggles. We must learn to respect and understand each other's differences.

We feel that the scheduled speakers have important things to say, particularly about what's ging on in Atlanta and El Salvador and that these issues must be addressed. We intend to reschedule speakers for a later time this spring. As women we understand that we must have respect for each others' political positions, and as white women we must struggle to work through our racism which has continually undercut our attempts at working together. Therefore we will schedule workshops for white women dealing with the issue of our own racism.

We hope that these decisions will be part of an ongoing process of working to resolve these problems, and that we can proceed with the goal of forming a solid base of unity from which to build on the future.

We would like to express our appreciation to those who put their time and energy into International Women's Week.

Cullen trivializes important issue

I am writing in response to Kevin Cullen's column (Collegian 2/23).

I am a junior electrical engineering student, which implies that I have a fairly heavy scholastic work load. As a basic lack of money forces me to work so that I can afford the luxury of eating, I have far too little time as it is to cope with the mysteries of standing electromagnetic waves or the solution of the Schrodinger equation. Certainly I have no time to stand on a soap-box, shout into a megaphone or hold rallies in the sun. So why did I spend half of my weekend working against the mini-store, rather than try to design sequential circuits?

I work against the mini-store because it is not a trivial frivolous issue as Mr. Cullen suggests. The wishes of the Board of Governors — the student representatives in all matters concerning the Student Union/Campus Center complex — were totally ignored when the Campus Center administration decided to build the mini-store. Why, the BOG did not even see the work order for the store until days after it was signed. The Board then went on record as opposing the store, but again their wishes were ignored. Even when an opinion poll showed that students were overwhelmingly opposed to the store (73% of those polled did not want it!) the administration continued on with their plans.

That's $47,000 of your money. That's about enough to put you through school here for about eight years (present prices, assuming off-campus living and paying rent for 12 months). Not only is that a frivolous waste of your money (have you tripped over a rain barrel in the concourse today?) but the store also represents a veiled threat to the co-ops.

Co-ops not only provide one of the scarcest commodities on campus — the elusive non-work study job — but they also provide excellent experience in starting or running small business for students. They also provide goods and services at low prices that can not be matched elsewhere, as co-ops tend to have a low overhead and an anti-profit philospophy. Both the experience given to student workers and the low prices provided for student customers make co-ops vital and valuable alternatives to regular mindless temporary jobs and inflationary prices. Clearly they are work having, even if they do compete with the Hatch, the University store, et al.

If we let the mini-store open and do business without opposition, what is to stop Campus Center administrators from deciding to finally eliminate student-run businesses and co-ops which vie "unfairly" (due to their anti-profit orientation) for their God-given right to the student dollar? Damn little Charlie. If we prove to them that we are apathetic and uncaring by doing, what is to make them respect our wishes in other things in the future, such as the death of co-ops of co-ed bathrooms?

This is a test my friends. Help us prove that we (students) care about what is done with our space by signing the petition. Boycott the mini-store! Buy your papers at the new Clio News Service, a student run news stand.

In closing, I would like to speak for the ad hoc coalition for student control of student space by saying that we neither appreciate nor approve of the recent rash of malicious vandalism directed at the mini-stores. To the vandals: your selfish acts of rage are making us look bad. If you feel that strongly about the presence of the store and absurdity of spending $47 thousand there when the rest of the building continues to dissolve away with every passing day, do come and join us. Put your energy into constructive opposition rather than counter-productive violence.

★DVP

All the lectures are free and will be held in the Student Union Ballroom. Times will be publicized at a later date.

RSO
RECOGNIZED STUDENT ORGANIZATIONS

The more than 20 active members of DVP contact lecturers they are interested in and either directly or through lecture agencies. The members propose and vote on speakers at weekly DVP meetings. If a proposal is approved, money is appropriated for the lecture. The DVP also takes proposals from students and the Amherst community monthly.

To be able to vote on financial matters or run for a DVP office, a student must attend three consecutive meetings. Students may become members of DVP any time during the academic year. Graduate students may also become members, but are not given the priviledge to vote on financial matters.

The DVP is financed and operated by the Undergraduates which allocates between $26,000 and $30,000 yearly to the group. In addition, the DVP will be receiving about $5,000 for the first time this year from the interest of an endowment fund.

Last year the senate gave the DVP permission to charge admission to offset the costs ofd the program, which average about $1,000 a lecture. According to Pappas, the budget has not changed since 1961.

"We're not a money making organization," Pappas said, "Most of the planned lectures are free. We only charge admission when it is financially impossible to do it otherwise," he said.

The DVP, for example, recently paid speaker Abbie Hoffman $3,500 from the group's budget. Ticket sales brought in $2,000.

"It sounds like we have a lot of money but we don't," Pappas said. "Hopefully we will get more funding. Some programs have been turned down because we couldn't afford them," he added. He cited Henry Kissinger and Moshe Dyan as two unaffordable speakers.

During Internation Women's Week, at least 13 speakers are scheduled to speak on panels and workshops.

The DVP needs volunteers who are willing to contribute time and effort to fulfill its purpose, according to group members. The DVP meets every Wednesday night unless there is a lecture. The meeting room number is posted on the DVP office door in the fourth floor of the SUB.

Charlayne Hunter-Gault, keynote speaker for Amherst College Women's Week addresses the problems of women in the media last night. Hunter-Gault is an interviewer for the MacNeil-Lehrer Report, a news program which airs on the Public Broadcasting System.

She recalled that her colleague, Marlene originally referred to as the "news Hen." Sanders is now a vice president at NBC news, Gault said.

Gault said that many men in news management positions regard women in the newsroom the way they regard their wives and mothers. Gault said women and blacks are locked out of political beats on newspapers.

Gault, who has been to Atlanta twice to cover the recent murders of black children, said the events in Atlanta are not unique to that city.

"No newspaper is doing anything about children's issues," she said. She said that a colleague of her tried unsuccessfully to have a beat established on the New York Times that would deal with children's rights.

"I thought the New York Times could be a pioneer in this area," she said.

Gault said the only stories the Times prints about children concern children and sex. "Children's rights just aren't sexy," she said.

Gault said there is justifiable reason to be concerned about the image of women in the media in the 1980's. "The election of Ronald Reagan is going to bring about a re-examination of accomplishments made that my generation and yours take for granted" she said.

Gault said the demand in journalism now is for specialization. The two a that will dominate the 1980's are foreign policy and economics, she said, and women entering the field would do well to develop a firm background in these areas.

She said there will be a continued struggle for women to infiltrate the media in successful numbers.

Boomtown Rats rock FAC

By LAWRENCE HADDAD
Collegian Correspondent

On Sunday night at the Fine Arts Center, The Boomtown Rats put on a show in the true sense of the word. Whether it was lead singer Bob Geldof chasing a roadie off-stage, making fun of liberal arts students and designer jeans, or pretending to sing the UMass school song he was irresistible.

In contrast to the rest of the Rats, Geldorf exuded energy all evening, and was the complete showman. Looking like the thin black snake that crawls up the Latin American stairs during their opening number, "Mood Mambo," he was joined up front on bongos before the rest of the band appeared.

The material covered by the band was spit evenly between the newer, more idiosyncratic songs on their latest CBS album "Mondo Bongo," and more immediate songs from the previous two.

The Rats didn't take long to get the audience on its feet, and during "Elephants Graveyard," they even invited four audience members on stage to dance silhouetted against their inipressive backdrop.

Knotted napkins were donned for "Having My Picture Taken," outrageous lyrics given an airing on "Keep It Up" and a lecture on gun control preceded what for many was the highlight of the show,"I Don't Like Mondays."

Geldof sings every song like it was his last, but with a pajama clad Johnnie Fingers on keyboards, he sang with so much emotion that the whole Fine Arts Center rose and applauded Geldof's message about the schoolgirl who murdered because she didn't like Mondays.

The set ended with a hurried version of "Rat Trap", (despite some excellent sax work), and the band was brought back for two encores by a crowd that was surprisingly enthusiastic considering they hadn't heard old favourites such as "Looking After No. 1", "Mary of the Fourth Form", and "She's So Modern".

The encores featured the band's version of the Jagger-Richard "Under My (Their) Thumb", and "IGet My Kicks On You". Finally, after 90 minutes of pure style, the show ended with their song about a debutante, "Diamond Smiles". Geldof received plenty of those as he played the spotlight on the crowd and blew kissed. After all Bob, "on a night like this you deserve to get kissed at least once or twice".

The Rings, a Boston band, opened the show with a very competent set and were well received by an audience familiar with many of their songs.

The Rings seem to have all the correct credentials to make it "big" excellent musicianship, (especially Mark Sutton on lead guitar), good songwriting abilities, a versatile vocal line up with good harmonies, and a natty debut album, entitled "The Rings."

They played superbly, running through all the songs on their first album and a couple from the next. The highlight of their set being "Let Me Go" and the Sutton-Thurber "Who's She Dancing With."

Baker, Gilford, and Sutton are an attractive vocal team, and with Thurber, write strong songs. Their only let down are their visuals which leave something to be desired. I hope they were watching the King Rat tonight, because everyone else was.

Meredith Monk company to perform

By LISA LANGONE
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts Fine Arts Center and Arts Council will present The Meredith Monk Dance Company, who will offer two performances tomorrow and Thursday at 8 p.m. at the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall.

Meredith Monk —a dancer, choreographer, director, singer and composer— and her company, The House, will also be offering two different performances as part of a week long visit to the Five College Area.

Meredith Monk has been called one of the most influential choreographers of today. Her technique is an integration of dance, music, voice, mime, and non verbal acting. Her works are truly non traditional and considered highly abstract and avant garde.

Monk has created over 40 music/theatre/dance works since 1961, and in 1968, she founded The House, a company dedicated to an interdisciplinary approach to performance. Dance Magazine has called her "the most significant intermedia artist of our time."

Tomorrow night's performance will feature a music/theatre/dance performance of the "Plateau Series," a piece of great dramatic and emotional intensity.

Thursday's performance will feature a special preview presentation of "Waltz," a new music composition, "Vessel Suite," a piece drawn from a 1971 opera epic of Joan of Arc, "Tablet," which is the retracing of the evolution of Western music, with the incorporation of instruments and polyphony, and solo voice music performed by Monk.

Ticket prices for each performance are $7, $6, and $5 for the general public, and $6, $5, and $4 for senior citizens. UMass student tickets are $3.59, $3, and $2.50.

Robert Crowley, a junior, is on the ticket with James P. Nagle, a senior. Crowley and Nagle said they would try to lobby for student representation on the Board of Regents. They also favored co-ed bathrooms, the elimination of the language requirement for liberal arts majors, and "an improvement in the quality of coffeeshop."

Larry Kocot, a junior, is running with Kevin Mangan, also a junior. Kocot another senate member and chair of its Budgets Committee, has also been a member of SCERA and SAFA. He said his primary concerns are resolving of the mini store controversy in favor of the boycotters, lowering of prices in the bookstore and increasing the power of the Campus Center Board of Governors.

Managan, Southwest co-president with Mazzola, has also been a member of SCERA and SAFA. He said his main objective would be in obtaining funds for UMass lost by Proposition 2½ budget cuts.

Senate Speaker Linda Geary said the order for names on the ballot will be determined randomly today, the Senate will distribute $1500 evenly between each campaign.

Elections will be held March 10 and 11, with ballot boxes placed at the Hatch, in Butterfield dormitory, and at each of the four dining commons.

"The thing I would urge people to do is to find out about the issues and vote on them, not the personalities of the candidates," Geary said.

Beaulieu qualifies for Nationals

Trackmen run well at NE's

By JANE WOLFSON
Collegian Staff

Amidst their most stunning team performance of the year (6 school records broken), the University of Massachusetts men's track team placed eighth of 42 teams at this weekend's New England indoor track championships held at the Armory of Boston University. But the standout performance of the day and most possibly of the season beloned to Paul Beaulieu.

Beaulieu shattered Randy Thomas' school mile record (4:08.7) by a blistering four seconds running an amazing 4:04.7 for a second place finish in the mile run, and qualifying for the Nationals.

Beaulieu is the only UMass runner to qualify for the Indoor track Nationals, which are annually held at Codo Hall in Detroit. They will be in two weeks on Mar. 14-15.

Bealieu ran a strategic race as he and BU's John Wilson led the pack for the first three quarter of the race. With about 300 yards to go, Northeastern's Jeff Cullinane pulled in front of both Wilson and Beaulieu, but Beaulieu went with Cullinane and broke away from Wilson with the final results of the race remaining that way. Cullinane won the race with a time of 4:01, the fastest New England collegiate mile this year, and Wilson finished third behind Beaulieu.

"I felt really good all through the race," Beaulieu said. "This was the first time that I didn't have to run on my own at that pace and I think I could have even knocked off more time by kicking harder at the end. The track is one of the fastest but the field of competition played the biggest part."

"If I had to pick an objective time that I thought Paul would have run this weekend it would have been about 4:05", UMass coach Ken O'Brien said. "He has been training very well and we moved him into the 800 and the 1000 races this season to help him focus in on a faster starting pace."

Another outstanding performance for UMass was John Wright's second place finish in the hurdles (7:4). Wright and Robert Holden from the University of Rhode Island finished at identical electronic times and the decision was left to a photo finish in which Holden was declared the winner.

Sprinter Rick Cady topped another UMass record in the 440, running 48.4 in a fourth place finish. The same held true for freshman Brian Osborne who also broke the school record in the 600 with a time of 1:11.5. "Both Rick (Cady) and Brian (Osborne) broke their own personal best records all through the trials, semi-finals and finals of the competition," O'brien explained.

UMass hoop lives on

by KEVIN CULLEN
Collegian Staff

For a change, something has gone right for men's basketball at the University of Massachusetts. Tonight's Eastern Eight playoff game against Rhode Island, 7:30 at the Cage, was just what a dead team needed to come back to life.

"Three weeks ago, we were playing with much more intensity," UMass head coach Ray Wilson said yesterday, referring to his team's performances in losses to Rutgers, Northeastern and Boston University. "But when West Virginia beat URI (Feb. 18, which at the time seemingly assured the Mountaineers the league title), we all had an emotional letdown you could see it in our play."

But things have changed. In one of the bigger upsets in college basketball this year, George Washington University squeaked by West Virginia 85-82 this weekend. This gave URI the Eastern Eight regular season title in their first season of play in the league. But, because of this being their first year in the Eastern Eight, URI is not allowed to host a playoff game.

So, first place URI plays last place UMass at the Cage tonight. And attitudes have changed around here.

"Just emotionally, they (the team) responded when we found out URI had to come here," Wilson said. "Practice went really well, and people are up for this."

Good reason. In URI, the Minutemen (3-22 in the regular season) find themselves taking on a team against which they played one of their better games this season. URI beat UMass, 73-63, in a basketball game which more resembled a wrestling match. All told, 56 personal fouls were dished out, UMass guard Tony Del'Pina had some words with URI strongman Jimmy Wright, while Minuteman freshman Edwin Green and URI's Chris Cummings were ejected after a shoving match, which Cummings seemed to have purposely started. (Mr. Cummings, as evidenced by his 23 minutes of playing time in 12 games, is not exactly the man you put on Green, unless you're looking to start trouble.)

All in all, UMass would probably rather play the Rams than anyother Eastern Eight opponent. Their ability to knock the Rams off their game plan in the earlier game is a factor in the Minutemen's favor along with the home court advantage, perhaps the only point in their favor.

"URI will be physical with us," Wilson says. "They are a big, strong team. But we know what to expect."

What they can expect is a 20-6 team (10-6 in league play led by the 6'8", 215 pound Wright, who leads the team in scoring (15.2 points per game) and rebounding (8.2). Wright has plenty of help up front from Marc Upshaw, second on the team in scoring (13.7) and rebounding (7.9), while Pappy Owens is one of the better guards in New England.

"We've got to play our game," said URI assistant coach Claude English, who has been directing the team since head coach Jack Kraft suffered a heart attack before the New Year. "UMass played well against us last itme, but I didn't think we played as well as we could have. We're just going to go out there and do the things that have won us ball games all year."

Wilson's hopes for a large crowd could be diminished by the fact that the game is an Eastern Eight event, not a UMass sponsored event, so an admission charge will be required, probably keeping student attendance down.

But, that's not the point. For once, just once, things went right for Ray Wilson this year.

Julie Ready (4) and Cindy Clapp (34) will be two Minutewomen competitors in the Eastern Regionals Sunday at Dartmouth.

Hoopwomen gain berth in playoffs

The University of Massachusetts women's basketball team received a pleasant surprise yesterday morning when it was learned they were one of eight teams awarded a spot in the Eastern Association for Intercollegiate Athletics for Women (EAIAW) playoffs, slated to begin next week.

UMass, seeded seventh, will travel to Hanover, N.H., this Sunday where they'll take on second seed Dartmouth in a 2 p.m. game.

The playoff berth came as somewhat of a surprise for UMass head coach Mary Ann Ozdarski, who did not learn of the bid officially until yesterday morning. The eight playoff spots were expected to be announced sometime Sunday night, but a mix up in the Region 1-A selection committee caused the delay in notifying UMass.

UMass, which finished the regular season with a 14-13 overall record, lost an earlier season encounter with Dartmouth 58-44, but Ozdarski is optimistic.

"If we play to our capabilities we can beat them (Dartmouth)," said Ozdarski, whose team struggled to a 2-6 record during the month of February. "We had a terrible February, but it's a new month now and we're ready."

Other teams in the Eastern regionals, which encompasses New York and New England, include number one seed St. John's, Syracuse, Providence College, Boston University and Queen's College of New York.

KEVIN CULLEN

Pay to watch play

If you plan on attending tonight's playoff game at the Cage, plan on spending some money. Tonight's game is not a University event; it is an Eastern Athletic Association (Eastern Eight) sponsored event, and the league, as with any post-season tournament, requires an admission charge.

University officials stress they have no say in the matter. The Eastern Eight is merely using the Cage; control over the game, including admission charges and press accomodation, is being handled by the league, not UMass.

It is standard procedure that for any post-season tournament an admission charge be assessed.

Ticket prices, as determined by the Easter Eight, are as follows: $2.50 for students; $3 general admission; $5 reserved.

If you can't afford a ticket, WMUA (91.1 FM) will carry the game line.

The men's final championship game of a one on one basketball tournament spon sored by Commercial Distributing and the Miller Brewing Company was held last Tuesday during halftime of the basketball game in the Curry Hicks Cage.

The two contestants in the tournament play a game consisting of four minutes. The winner is the player who scores 10 points first or is leading at the end of the alloted time period.

There were two divisions in the tournament, an under six feet category and an over six feet category.

Garry Pearson, a sophomore education major, won the under six feet category. The runnerup was Phillip Martin, a freshman.

Walter Garwacki, a junior, was the over six feet champion and Donald Houston, a senior HRTA major, was the runnerup.

Women's week contemplated

By ANNE KIRBY
Collegian Correspondent

Withdrawal of the Third World Women's Task Force from planning of the events commemorating International Women's Week at the University of Massachusetts prompted other members of the planning committee to engage in "self-criticism," Kharmia DeLemos, the Third World women's programmer and coordinator said, leading to cancellation of the events of the week.

"We did not cancel," the week, Aquila Ayana, another Third World women's coordinator and programmer, said. The Third World Women's Task Force wanted women to talk about the week. "We did not want to be responsible for the cancellation," she said. Third World women formally announced their withdraw from planning on February 18.

Members of the Third World Women's Task Force said yesterday at a press conference that channels of communication are open between the members of the Task Force and the other members of the planning committee for International Women's Week. The groups have decided to meet later on this year for further discussion.

Time will tell if the decision to cancel events in connection with International Women's Week this year was positive said another member of the planning committee. It is the first step in a long process, she said. Instead of having events this year be superficial the planning committee would like to work at reflecting an international theme in years to come, said one member of the Third World Women's Task Force.

By engaging in "self-criticism" the planners examined what they were trying to promote through the week, said DeLemos. The theme of the week was to be "Women around the World; Changing the World," which suggests the representation of a diverse community. In a statement issued Monday the organizers of International Women's Week said, "This year as in times past, there was a failure to involve a diverse group of women in the initiation and realization of International Women's Week, and to insure proportional representation of Third World Women in decision making."

Suggestions in a written statement presented to the planners of International Women's week by the Third World Women's Task Force on February 18 were taken seriously, DeLemos said. The statement had two components. One discussed the events leading up to the withdrawal of the Task Force from the planning of Women's Week. The second section was a list of suggestions for effective planning of future International Women's Weeks.

TOC's Soap Opera Happy Hour pleases management and viewers

By MARYELLEN GAMBALE
Collegian Correspondent

If it's three o'clock and it's standing room only in the Top Of the Campus lounge, it must be time for the "Soap Opera Happy Hour." This newest campus haven for soap opera addicts has already developed a tremendous following.

Timothy Lynch, manager of the TOC restaurant and lounge, first suggested putting a television back into the renovated lounge, and subsequently developed the idea of the "Soap Opera Happy Hour."

"Everyone thought I was crazy at first," said Lynch, whose lounge is now so crowded during the soaps that people start coming two hours before the 3 p.m. showtime just to get a seat.

The reasons people come to the lounge each afternoon during the happy hour are as varied as the opinions people have about the soaps. But Jack Farr, bartender at the lounge, admits the soaps are probably even more popular than the daquiris, the most popular drink among the "General Hospital" fans. Non-alcoholic drinks are sold at a special low price during the "Soap Opera Happy Hour."

It seems that college life, with a certain amount of peer pressure, has addicted countless thousands of students to these afternoon dramas. Wendy Levy, a resident of the Sigma Delta Tau sorority, came to the lounge early to beat the crowd, even though it meant skipping a class.

"I watch them all the time," she said, "they're foolish, but they're entertainment."

Besides, how could anyone concentrate on economic policy when Dianna is lying in a pool of blood and P.J. is terrorizing the laundry room in his Spiderman pajamas?

The appeal of the soaps is hardly limited to the female audience, in fact the waitresses confided that the men in the lounge often outnumber the women. Will Jacobvitz, a senior, had a healthy attitude about the soaps.

"I started watching them in high school with my sister," he said, "but now I come here because they serve maritinis for a dollar."

Whatever the reason for the great success of the happy hour, the TOC lounge is packed from two to four. Linda Culliton, a waitress at the lounge, said about 350 crammed into the lounge last Friday afternoon and the cash register totalled $600 in one hour.

Santana to come to May show

By RON MILLER
Collegian Staff

Union Program Council officials confirmed last night that Santana has agreed to appear at this year's Community Day May 9th in Alumni Stadium.

Frank Gironda, talent coordinator for UPC, said Santana was not booked as the headliner.

"There will be two other bands which I'm working on right now," Gironda said.

"If circumstances arise that a headliner is not available at that time, then the other two acts will be along the same caliber as Santana rather than a large headliner," Gironda said.

Gironda said that the bid for Santana went in a month ago, and UPC has the contracts now.

The University signs the contract, and then it is sent back to the agency to be signed by Santana's management, and then returned to UPC, he said.

Gironda said a ticket plan is not quite ready yet, and the alcohol policy is still being worked out.

Carlos Santana has 16 albums including solos. He debuted in 1969 and performed at Woodstock. Santana is currently touring with an eight piece band.

Military claims army battles last leftists

By EDUARDO VAZQUES BECKER
Associated Press

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador — Soldiers and antijunta guerrillas were locked in gun battles in the northeast yesterday in what the military claimed was a "cleanup" of leftist strongholds.

"The Salvadoran army has succeeded in its objective of bringing peace to the nation with only the help of the people," proclaimed Defense Minister Jose Guillermo Garcia. He said the left had been "smothered" and "every day the situation tends to improve."

Military commanders gave no casualty figures, but said there was fighting in Zacatecoluca and San Esteban Caterina, some 35 miles north of here, and farther north at Arcatao. National police said 16 people were found dead in the capital.

Garcia refused comment on junta President Jose Napoleon Duarte's announcement Monday that he would meet with the Socialist International, an international group espousing non-violent revolution that has offered to be an intermediary in attempts at a political settlement.

"These are political matters in which the military will not intervene," Garcia said.

Duarte, a Christian Democrat who depends on support of the armed forces, did not indicate when or where such negotiations might take place.

Duarte maintains the U.S.-backed military-civilian government's most pressing need is for economic aid, not arms.

Some observers have expressed fears that the military, allied with rightist businessmen, might stage a coup if the economy does not improve.

Reagan says army won't go to El Salvador

WASHINGTON — President Reagan said yesterday he does not foresee sending U.S. combat troops to El Salvador.

The president, in an interview with CBS News, said, "I do see our continued work in the field of diplomacy with neighboring countries that are interested in Central America, South America to bring this violence to a halt and to make sure that we do not just sit passively by and let this hemisphere by invaded by outside forces."

"I certainly don't see any likelihood of us going in with fighting forces," the president told CBS newsman Walter Cronkite.

The United States now supplies U.S. military advisers and aid to the junta that rules El Salvador and which is fighting leftist forces. The United States says the leftist are being supplied arms from communist nations.

The president acknowledged that a parallel with the early U.S. involvement in Vietnam is being drawn as military training advisers are sent to El Salvador.

"But the difference is so profound," he said. "What we are actually doing is at the request of a government, in one of our neighboring countries, helping, offering some help against the import or the export into the Western Hemisphere of terrorism, of disruption. And it isn't just El Salvador. That happens to be the target at the moment," he said.

The president said the lesson of Vietnam was that "never again do we send an active fighting force to a country to fight unless it is for a cause that we intend to win."

Budget cuts tough on federal programs

WASHINGTON — Massachusetts residents, already struggling with self-imposed budget cuts under Proposition 2½, will have to lobby even harder to salvage whatever federal programs they can under Reagan's economic gameplan, Sen. Paul E. Tsongas said yesterday.

Addressing members of the Massachusetts Municipal Association yesterday, Tsongas said that anyone who wants to keep Urban Development Action Grants in the federal budget should call or telegram the White House.

Of the 95 UDAG projects in New England since 1977, 54 were in Massachusetts, creating 27,659 jobs.

Largest layoff ever for MBTA workers

BOSTON — The chief of the Boston-area transit system, claiming he is financially handcuffed by an "absolutely unrealistic" budget, Tuesday announced the largest layoff in the history of the city's transportation network.

Barry Locke, chairman of the Massachusetts Bay Transportation Authority, said 650 workers including nearly 440 bus drivers and transit operators would begin receiving layoff notices Wednesday.

Another 100 positions currently unfilled because of attrition will be eliminated, a spokesman said.

Locke initially announced that 750 employees would lose their jobs, but transit officials later explained that 100 of the jobs were vacant.

The 750 jobs, equivalent to 11 percent of the MBTA's workforce, will be abolished as of March 21, the same day drastic service reductions are scheduled to take effect.

B-52 project to cut striking range

WASHINGTON — The Reagan administration likely will seek runway improvements on the mid-Indian Ocean island of Diego Garcia to allow the nation's mainstay bomber, the B-52, within shorter striking range of the Persian Gulf, Pentagon sources say.

The sources, who asked not to be named, said a request likely will be submitted to Congress on Wednesday to provide $39 million for the runway widening project. The purpose, they said, will be to shorten by many hours the time it takes to fly B-52s over the Arabian Sea and Persian Gulf area and return to base.

B-52 bombers have flown 27 surveillance missions over that region from the mid-Pacific island of Guam since former President Carter ordered such flights in January 1980 as part of his effort to show the Russians U.S. resolve.

Finnegan named state auditor

BOSTON — State Rep. John J. Finnegan became state auditor yesterday, with oath taking ceremonies conducted by Gov. Edward J. King in a crowded House chamber at the Statehouse. Finnegan's name now lengthens the list of politicians who first won a constitutional office without having to face the voters.

Speaker Thomas W. McGee is expected to name Finnegan's successor as chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee Wednesday. Speculation on a leader for the budget committee has centered on Rep. Michael C. Creedon, D-Brockton.

Activists protest vessel move to Seabrook plant

By ANDREW SCHNEIDER

SEABROOK, N.H. — A 450-ton reactor vessel passed through the gates of the Seabrook nuclear power plant yesterday after a four-hour trek that prompted much pushing and shoving between police and demonstrators.

But anti-nuclear activists, caught by surprise and a windchill factor of about zero degrees, mobilized fewer than 300 demonstrators, most of whom rushed to Seabrook in three bu ses from Amherst and in several car pools.

The vessel was nine minutes behind schedule on its journey from a dock seven miles away.

Paul Cronin, Seabrook police chief, called it "a nice peaceful demonstration, a great thing to break up winter boredom. If we have to have them, it's just the way we like them — no arrests, no one badly hurt."

A New Hampshire state police sergeant added, "We didn't come here to jail them. We just came here to keep them out of the way."

Two years ago, about 180 demonstrators were arrested when the first vessel for the twin reactor plant was moved.

"We caught them by surprise and I think it's too cold," said one policeman.

The demonstrators, carrying signs with anti-nuclear slogans, yelled "It won't be built!" and "Shut down Seabrook!" as the 95-wheeled trailer pulled by two diesel trucks crossed the Public Service Company of New Hampshire gate at the junction of Routes 1 and 107.

Financial aid outlook dim

College students nationwide may be forced to drop-out

By ED LEVINE
Collegian Staff

Budget cuts and program changes proposed by the Reagan administration may jeopardize many state and federal financial aid programs and, according to some estimates, may force as many as 750,000 college students across the country to drop out of school.

In a memorandum recently issued by University of Massachusetts President David C. Knapp, he estimated that about 3,000 students, 10 percent of the enrollment, may not be able to return to UMass this fall.

According to Knapp's memo, more than 11,000 UMass students receive financial aid, including about 6,700 on the Amherst campus.

Last week, at hearings of the House Subcommittee on Post-Secondary Education in Washington, E.K. Fretwell, Chairman of the American Council on Education, estimated that between a half-million and 750,000 students may have to leave school nationwide if Congress follows the president's recommendations.

According to an article in this week's edition of The Chronicle of Higher Education, Joseph M. Cronin, president of the Massachusetts Higher Education Assistance Corporation (MHEAC), told the House subcommitte that he estimates 10,000 to 20,000 students may have to leave school in the Bay State alone if federal funds are not made available. The MHEAC administers the state Higher Education Loan Program (HELP) loans. According to MHEAC statistics for 1980, 7,858 UMass-Amherst students borrowed more than $16,8 million in HELP loans, the highest of any school in the Commonwealth.

According to Reagan's economic plan, "America's New Beginning: A Program for Economic Recovery," federal funding for state and privately-supported loan programs would be eliminated. Under the plan, the Student Loan Marketing Association, known as Sallie Mae would be prohibited from borrowing funds from the Federal Financing Bank, which supports many government programs. As a result, the programs would be virtually eliminated.

According to the White House report, $15 billion in federal revenue would be saved over a five-year period by cutting Sallie Mae from federal funds. About $1.09 billion would be saved in 1981, climbing to an estimated $4 billion savings in 1986.

In addition to cuts in state loan programs, the administration has also proposed severe cutbacks in Guaranteed Student Loan programs. According to the administration's report, "substantial federal benefits are being paid out to those who do not need them to meet educational standards."

The report also claimed that GSLs are being awarded to many families who do not need them. The report contends these families are investing the money and earning interest before paying them back.

> "Without rational limitations, such as the Administration is proposing, the Department of Education could soon become the creditor of the first resort for every American family that has a family member enrolled in undergraduate or graduate education."
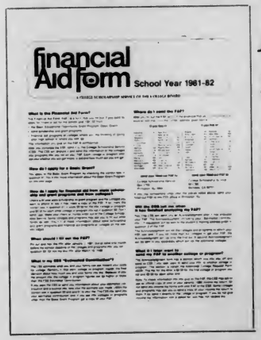
> —White House report

"Without rational limitations, such as the Administration is proposing, the Department of Education could soon become the creditor of the first resort for every American family that has a family member enrolled in undergraduate or graduate education," the White House report states.

To combat abuses in the GSL program, the administration has proposed to eliminate interest subsidies while students are in school, requiring the student to pay the interest; to base the amount of the grant on the student's need; and to raise the interest rate from the current nine percent to the market rate, now in the double-digit range.

In addition to loan cuts, the administration has also proposed sweeping changes in the Pell Grant (formerly Basic Educational Opportunity Grant) programs. Under the administration's plan, students would be required to contribute $750 towards the cost of their education; family contributions towards the cost of education would be increased from 14 percent to 20 percent; and tax payments could no longer be deducted from the amount of family incomes.



Rigorous collection lowers default rate

By M. W. MULCAHY
Collegian Correspondent

While the number of crackdowns on collecting defaulted student loans has increased in Ohio and other states, Robert Collings. U.S. Attorney in Boston, said no such collection process is underway in Massachusetts.

"We've been consistently rigorous on collecting defaulted student loans," said Collings. "There's no need for a crackdown."

According to the UMass Financial Aid Operations Report for fiscal year 1979-1980, the default rate on National Direct Student Loans is 9.29 percent, compared with a 14.95 percent default rate for the previous year.

National Direct Student Loans are based on need and administered by the federal government. Guaranteed Student Loans are also issed by the federal government, but are not based on financial need.

"Students are becoming more aware of the legal implications involved in taking out a loan," said Ed Apodaca, director of Financial Aid at UMass.

Apodaca said that although the percentage of defaults is decreasing, the number of loans being taken out is increasing.

"Two years ago about $5.5 million was taken out in Guaranteed Student Loans," Apodaca said. Last year approximately $2.3 million was taken out."

Apodaca noted that the budget cuts by President Reagan may change the amount of money students can borrow in the future.

"The two programs being considered for cuts are the Basic Educational Opportunity Grant and the Guaranteed Student Loan," Apodaca said. "All the bad media about students defaulting loans isn't helping the situation either."

Yet Julie Crozier of the Department of Education's Office of Student Financial Assistance said she felt the media has helped cut down on the number of defaulted loans.

"The number of defaults are going down because the (students) know that we're collecting," said Crozier. "We have a good record of finding people."

While Ohio's new crackdown has retrieved 36 percent of the defaulted loans, Crozier says Massachusetts U.S. attorneys have been getting a similar percentage all along.

Apodaca said the reason that many students were hard to find is because the

Students expecting financial aid should prepare for lower awards

By MICHELE MURRAY
Collegian Correspondent

Chances are good that University of Massachusetts students who applied on time and met eligibility requirements will receive financial assistance, although awards are expected to be lower than previous years, because of budget cuts proposed by the Reagan administration, said Edward C. Apodaca, director of Financial Aid.

Apodaca said the budget cuts would have the greatest effect on students attending low-tuition institutions such as UMass.

Students can expect a lower number of Pell Grant awards (formerly Basic Educational Opportunity Grants), as well as a lower number of Massachusetts Higher Education Assistance (HELP) loans, Apodaca said.

UMass President David C. Knapp recently reported that almost two-thirds of UMass students receive some sort of financial aid. Almost 8,000 students on the Amherst campus alone received more than $16 million in HELP loans, according to statistics.

"I estimate that as many as 3,000 students—about 10 percent of our enrollment—will find it extremely difficult or impossible to return to the classroom next fall," Knapp reported in a recent letter sent to UMass alumni and parents of students.

"Students simply cannot expect to be able to depend on the Financial Aid Office to meet full aid needs," Apodaca said.

Apodaca cited inflation, increasing numbers of students eligible for financial aid, and a 10 percent cut in federal government spending as reasons for the inability to meet financial needs.

The Financial Aid Office is operating on the same budget as 1979.

In view of the Financial Aid Office's increasing inability to provide money to students, Apodaca said the office will attemp to meet student needs through other services. Counseling and workshops on meeting financial aid costs, as well as a financial aid library to provide informational resources are some of the services being considered, Apodaca said.

Apodaca also warned that students should not let their financial aid expectations rise to an unrealistic point. He said he feared many students would feel they were being cheated and might unfairly blame their personal financial cuts on minority students.

Committee authorizes funds for womens' events

By MALCOLM CAMPBELL
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts Undergraduate Student Senate Coordinating Committee last night authorized funds from the senate sponsored events account to cover the cost of bringing musician Nobuko Miyamoto to campus.

Earlier this week, various sponsors withdrew their support from the event when plans for International Women's Week were cancelled. Nobuko Miyamoto was originally part of the now defunct women's week. The committee also authorized funds to pay for a Lesbian Union coffee-house, another women's week activity. Both events will cost nearly $1,000.

Student Government Association Treasurer Al Wallace originally opposed the idea, saying that contracts were signed before any money was transferred into the women's week account to pay the contracts. The money for these events was to come from the Distinguished Visitor Program, the Arts Council, and others, who backed out when the women's week folded.

In other business, the committee passed a motion which established a judicial review subcommittee to look into charges of abuse of power and misconduct on the part of Clerk of Courts Michael Cohen. The subcommittee will examine evidence, hear testimony from witnesses on both sides of the case and make their recommendation to the senate as to whether a motion of impeachment is needed. The subcommittee will consist of four senators and the case will be prosecuted by the Attorney General's office.

Cashin dormitory President Don Atkinson was present at the meeting seeking the committee's sanction to form an interim government for the Sylvan Residential Area. Sylvan has been without an area government for almost a year since last spring's elections were invalidated. Sylvan receives about $5,7000 a semester from the Student Activities Trust Fund but has been unable to spend any of it because only the area government can spend money. Atkinson said that there is a Sylvan "Spring Day" planned which will cost in the neighborhood of of $2,500.

The interim government would also be given the task of writing a new constitution, since the present constitution expires at the end of this semester.

The committee also passed a motion to send two telegrams to President Ronald Reagan. One would urge him to give full federal support along with all the requested money to authorities in Atlanta, Georgia who are trying to capture the killer of 21 black children. So far, the president has given little aid, said Undergraduate Student Senate Speaker Linda Geary.

The other cable would voice the SGA's opposition to cuts in federally financed loans and financial aid to college students. The committee feels that if anything should happen, aid should be increased, not cut. The Student Senate will vote on sending the telegrams at their meeting tonight.

Grad senate backs harrassment bill

By BRIAN SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

The Graduate Student Senate (GSS) voted unanimously last night to endorse State House Bill 1542 prohibiting sexual harrassment on the job and in the classroom.

The bill, sponsored by Representatives Barbara E. Gray, (R-Framingham) and Alfred E. Saggese, Jr. (D-Winthrop), would create a complaint process for students, employees and specifically state employees who were victims of sexual harrassment.

The GSS also unanimously passed a motion supporting Dean Samuel Conti's move to institute an interdisciplinary PhD program.

The program would allow graduate students to design their own program of studies from various departments when pursuing a degree, John Delmond, president of GSS, said.

"In this age of specialization it would be useful, in terms of finding a job, for a student to receive a degree in an exact field of study," Delmond said.

Graduate students presently have to take many unrelated courses in order to fill the degree requirements of a specific field of study; the new program would eliminate that need, Delmond said.

The GSS also discussed the possibility of issuing a statement on current U.S. involvement in El Salvador but did not vote on it.

A Graduate Senate Committee also discussed their investigation into the working conditions of Teaching Assistants and Resident Assistants.

Recall of clerk considered by senate

By KATHLEEN HOWLEY
Collegian Staff

The Undergraduate Student Senate will consider a motion tonight to recall Michael Cohen, clerk of courts, for "abuse of power" who, the motion says, has harmed the senate and the student body as a whole. The motion was tabled at last week's meeting.

Allen Compagnon, chair of the Finance Committee, said the Coordinating Committee recommended yesterday that a committee be set up to review the situation and make a recommendation to the senate.

Compagnon said a motion will be made to send two telegrams to President Ronald Reagan. The first will urge the president to appropriate federal money for an investigation into the murders of black children in Atlanta. The second will ask the president to reinstate funding cuts made to the student loan and financial aid programs.

Nominations will also be made for the Finance and Budget Committees, among others, he said.

The senate will meet at 7:00 in the Campus Center.

BLACK AFFAIRS

Save the children

By KIMBERLY GREEN
Black Affairs Staff

A crowd of about 100 spectators were pleased by the performances given at the benefit fashion-talent show held in the Student Union Ballroom, Saturday night.

The fashion-talent show was a benefit for the children of Atlanta and Starchild Affairs, a 100 member group from Pittsfield. It was a change of pace, as well as, a candid representation of struggles and tribulations of all people, but especially children.

Valerie Hamilton, 24, a Residents' Assistant in Melville as well as the originator of Starchild Affairs, produced and coordinated the production. She feels that too much attention has been given to nuclear weapons, war, politics and money, but no one is paying attention to the children—the individuals who are this country's future.

"Somebody's got to do something to save the children," says Hamilton. "The children of Atlanta have died a physical death, other children are dying a spiritual and moral death through alcohol, pregnancy and drug abuse," she said. "It never gets into the papers, but I've seen them die this way."

Hamilton said the kids need guidance, "My goal is to help the kids develop skills, ...to teach them that there is more." She did part of this wholeheartedly by bringing nine kids from Pittsfield to UMass, Amherst to show them "more," not only have the Campus Center hotel which repossses the rooms at 6:00 each day and subsequently left the burden upon her to find these children a place to stay in Melville.

To top this off, the guy who was supposed to do the lights walked off after setting up the equipment, but luckily someone else took over the responsibility.

Hamilton said she hadn't heard from her d.j.'s in about a month and she didn't know what she was going to do about the music, but when Kirk Williams and William Grady better known as "K. Rock" and "Shady Grady" walked into the room, Hamilton, with a sparkle in her eye and a smile on her face said, "See, we have mental and physical communication between us, we come through late, but we come through."

Hamilton feels black people are talented, "Math and all that comes from us, did you know the Egyptians were the first ones to create that stuff?" Hamilton asks.

Hazel Hamilton, 48, Valerie's mother, is also very proud of what her daughter is doing, "I think it is more vital today than before. Many of the children are experiencing murder of the mind," she said.

"Smitty from the City," was the M.C. for the show, and he was accompanied by a young fellow named Terry who represented "the children." This team which at times seemed a little uncoordinated, added variation to the show by performing a soft-shoe duo.

"K. Rock" the commentator of fashions, livened the descries of the audience by contributing humorous anecdotes which made the crowd giggle and snicker.

Many of the models with whom so many of us are familiar with ranged from short to tall, male to female. These models wore

Reagan's attack on the poor

Editor's Note: Norman Hill is President of the A. Philip Randolph Institute, a civil rights and trade union organization.

Ronald Reagan's program of cutbacks in social services is an attempt to revitalize America's corporations at the expense of the working poor. While the Reagan program does make some cutbacks in programs for the poor and elderly, the full force of the Administration's budget-slashing axe will be felt by our country's working poor: unskilled and semi-skilled workers, a disproportionate number of whom are black.

Clearly the Administration is not so much interested in getting the government off the backs of people as it is getting government off the backs of corporations and the rich.

The Reagan approach will cut back unemployment insurance benefits from 39 weeks to 26 weeks. To propose this reduction in aid at a time when jobs are scarce and unemployment is well above 7 percent is to drive more out-of-work Americans onto the Welfare rolls. But, the Reagan Administration is not content with this measure. It also proposes changing unemployment compensation in a way that would force workers who have been jobless for three months to take minimum jobs or lose their unemployment benefits.

The plan suggests precisely the kind of federal coercion President Reagan claimed he opposed. Clearly the Administration is not so much interested in getting the government off the backs of people as it is getting government off the backs of corporations and the rich. Under the plan, for example, a skilled autoworker or steelworker with no job prospects in his area of skill would be forced to take an available job at a fast-food restaurant or as a housekeeper, or risk losing his benefits.

The Reagan program represents a massive effort to take services and benfits from working people and to transfer them to the wealthy. This will be achieved through the elimination of social security benefits for college-age students whose parents are dead, retired, or disabled. President Reagan also intends to lower the minimum social security payment of $122 per month and to drastically reduce the extent of coverage for workers who are disabled.

In the past two decades, education has been the principal mechanism for black advancement into the middle class. The Reagan proposals will cut $1 billion in aid to higher education in 1982 and will reduce spending on vocational training programs by $200 million, The cost of a college eduction today is prohibitive. Without federal subsidies to the children of middle- and lower-income workers, higher education would be beyond the means of most young people. Aid to education and support of vocational training is not only a legitimate purpose of government it is one which enjoys a great deal of public support.

The President's obsession with budget cutting will even damage America's foreign relations. While calling for a huge increase in defense spending, the President recommends a two billion dollar cut in foreign aid from the figure recommended by President Carter. Foreign aid is an important instrument in improving America's relations with the developing world. Indeed, what has made America different from the Soviet Union in the eyes of many has been our willingness not only to provide weaponry but legitimate economic aid, as well. The Reagan cutback in foreign aid is short-sighted, will weaken American influence in the third world, and will, in the final analysis, serve to undermine our country's national interest.

Moraut urges blacks to learn history

By DONNA DAVIS
Black Affairs Staff

Dr. Mack Bernard Morant, a UMass alumnus, spoke to a small audience in the Campus Center, Thursday, Feb. 26th. Morant, currently deputy Director—Public Relations officer for the Dillon-Marion Resources Commission of S. Carolina, has written several articles for local and national publications. From his experience in the Pioneer Valley, he has also written a book, "The Insane Nigger."

The theme of Morant's lecture was the need for Blacks to reconstuct their history and culture. His lecture asserted that Blacks remain at the bottom of the socioeconomic ladder not by chance, but because they have been conditioned to believe they are inferior. According to Morant, this conditioning is perpetrated by a white racist society.

Morant said that many whites know that Blacks stem from a heritage to be proud of and are doing everything possible to erase this legacy. One case he pointed to is the African slave trade; many believe that Africans were brought here to perform sub-human labor, however, according to Morant the truth is that Africans were brought here because they had valuable building techniques and iron-smelting skills.

He said, "to really consider yourself educated you must know how to make money for yourself." He also stressed the importance of Blacks to learn about politics on a local, as well as, a national level.

Morant also pointed out the unwillingness of some whites to recognize the importance of African/Black history; in 1956 scientists discovered that Africa, not Europe, is the birthplace of man. Morant said that Egypt is often disassociated from Africa, however, Egypt is located in the northeastern region of Africa, therefore Egypt's contributions to civilization, i.e. hieroglyphics, the pyramids, are in fact African contributions.

Throughout the lecture Morant pointed out the various aspects of black culture that have been ignored and misrepresented. Dr. Morant said that the Bible referred to Solomon as Black, but no race identity was given to David and Paul, who were his relatives.

"How could Jesus Christ be blond-haired and blue eyed if he originated from Africa??!!" Morant asked.

Morant's final message to Blacks, particularly those who are in college, is to remember that the institutions they are attending will only teach them how to make money for white companies or industries.

"When Blacks understand the forces that keep them in check, then they will be able to combat them," he said. Morant also said for Blacks to remember that survival has been and still is the only weapon.

UMass in the dark, tree-cutting causes outage

By SALLY KERANS
Collegian Corespondent

Parts of the University of Massachusetts campus were in the dark for close to an hour yesterday when switching problems occurred between the University power plant and the North Amherst station Podick.

The outage began when a tree-cutting operation in Leverett brought two power lines in contact, and the Podick station in North Amherst was "tripped out", said Mark W. Jacobs, community relations representative for the Western Massachusetts Electric Company (WMECO).

Jacobs said that power in Leverett, Shutesbury, and parts of North Amherst was out from 12:03 to 12:04 p.m.

Reports of which UMass areas were affected by outage were uncertain, but all seemed to confirm that, while Sylvan and Orchard Hill Residential Areas were unaffected, Southwest Residential College and the central sections of campus were without power for a short time.

Internal problems at the University's power plant complicated the restoration of power to the campus, said plant superintendent Edmund J. Ryan.

"When the North Amherst station tripped out, that meant that all of our secondary power was out," he said. Ryan explained that because the University purchases power from WMECO, the UMass system must be synchronized with WMECO.

Ryan said that in order to re-energize the plant, the UMass generators have to go through a process to synchronize with the incoming power that is purchased from the public utility.

"The initial problem was created in the public utility and was attended to by normal procedures," Ryan said.

Prince dorm check theft heads up UM police list

A topaz ring by diamond chips valued at $100 was reported stolen yesterday from a women's bathroom in the University Health Services police said. The woman apparently left the ring in the bathroom, when she returned for the ring it was missing they said. There are no suspects in the case.

A periodic table valued at $30 was taken from Goessman Auditorium sometime over the weekend police said. The incident was reported yesterday. There are no suspects in the incident.

House plants valued at $200 were reported stolen from the French Hall greenhouse at 8 a.m. Monday morning police said. The incident apparently took place over the weekend. Police said a window on the south side of the greenhouse was smashed. There are no suspects in the case.

At the concert

Come mothers and fathers throughout the land
And don't criticize what you can't understand
Your sons and your daughters are beyond your command
Your old road is rapidly agin'.
Please get out of the new one if you can't lend your hand
For the times they are a changin'.
—Bob Dylan

A couple of nights ago, I had the unexpected pleasure of sitting behind a member of the back-up band's parents at the Boomtown Rats concert at the Fine Arts Center. They weren't celebrities or anything, so that was no big deal. But as far as I could see they were the only people over thirty in the whole place, and the place was full.

Jackson Katz

From the moment they walked in, I couldn't stop staring at them every couple of minutes. As a matter of fact, because of them, it was one of the more memorable concerts I've ever attended.

Now you might think I'm making a big thing out of the fact that an older couple were at a rock concert, but let's face it, they really stuck in the crowd. I mean, how many times do you see parents at a rock and roll concert?

The woman, whom I assumed to the bass player's mother, was wearing a dress. How many women wear dresses to rock concerts? The man, whom I assumed to be the father, was wearing designer jeans and a turtle-neck sweater. I don't want to sound mean, but they did look a little out of place.

Anyway, the mother was up and dancing right from the beginning. The father, meanwhile, was just sitting in his seat, watching the band. As the crowd started to get into the music and more and more people started dancing, everybody surrounding the couple were dancing and clapping. Every once in a while the woman could sit down next to her husband, presumably, I thought, to make him feel less isolated. But he remained seated.

Between acts, coincidence had it that I was behind the father on the line to the men's room. That, if I may say, was an experience right out of a scene in a movie. Since I was right behind this man, I could see how everyone was looking at him as they filed on their way out of the bathroom, which was very crowded. It's not like only a few people looked this guy over. Just about every guy who walked by looked right at him, and a few did double-takes.

I can only imagine how that man must have felt! When we reached the bathroom, there were a bunch of kids smoking a joint, but the man didn't seem to care. I figured since his soon was in a rock band, he'd had to deal with things like pot before. The man was cool.

During the Boomtown Rats set, the man stood up and started dancing. And he wasn't faking it. This man was dancing. I don't have to mention that this made my night.

In a society where so many of the decisions concerning young people are made by older people who are totally out of touch with us, it was gratifying to see a couple like that experiencing something as important and integral to our sub-culture as a rock concert. I wonder how many legislators, or governors, or presidents, or judges have ever been to a concert, or a coffee house, or any kind of social event or gathering that would give them more than the limited view so many of them have of us. There was no violence or wanton vandalism, just a bunch of people enjoying themselves.

I also often wonder what our society would look like if all those rich politicians and businessmen had the guts to break through the layers of repressed human emotion and expression that seem to so thoroughly desensitize them to their own humanity.

I know that's about as idealistic as you can get, but believe me, I never though I'd see that guy standing up in the third row of a hall filled with your people and rock and roll.

Caption degrades, perpetuates sexism

I am writing in reference to the degrading caption you printed in Tuesday's Collegian (12/14). In that one sentence you contributed to the perpetuation of sexism in our newspaper.

The caption read, "Even gossiping on the phone doesn't stop Pam Liebman from decorating her room in John Adams Tower in the Southwest Residential Area." If this had been a picture of a man I doubt that you would have chosen "gossiping" rather than "talking," and you probably would have changed it further by writing "painting" instead of "decorating."

You owe an apology to Pam whose work you discredited, as well as to all women who must live with the effects of such attitues.

We must opt for political solutions

There are several points of confusion or misinterpretation in your article, "Professor speaks of women's role in peace" (Collegian, 2/26) which I, as the professor in question, would like to clear up.

The article quotes me as stating that "any war we fight will be just just because we are a country that feels it must justify itself." If the first "just" in this sentence were set off in single quotation marks it would come closer to my meaning. What I actually said, as part of a long and fairly complex argument concerning just war theory and its inadequacy to the problems of war and peace in a nuclear age, was that those policy makers who, if we are to be in another war will get us into it, will feel compelled to portray our involvement as just. They will have to create situations—remember the Gulf of Tonkin?—that justify our involvement. Citizens will have no opportunity to debate the issue fully and openly, and by the time debate begins we will already be embroiled in conflict—a conflict characterized as "just."

The final sentence in the piece quotes me as saying, "Words are more powerful than munitions." I am not a romantic and I did not say that. What I said was the following: We are now locked in a deadly dance of death that will lead to widespread destruction if not certain doom. We are in the danger zone. United States strategic doctrine has shifted, over time, from deterrence theory to first-strike capability. This shift has been justified by our perceptions of the Soviet threat. If we are to break the deadly logic of the nuclear arms race we must, I argued, "stake everything on a formidable gamble: that words are more powerful than munitions." In otherwords, we must opt for political solutions.

The truth of the matter is we no longer believe in politics and we increasingly substitute war or the preparation for war for that debate, dialogue, and flexibility that lie at the heart of a genuine politics.

Let's have an explanation, please

As a member of the University community, I find myself party to the same frustrations associated with the structural defects and limited resources of the Main Library as those expressed within numerous articles and editorials appearing in the Collegian over the past several months. Inquiry into the problem leads to confusion, for according to a report published by a Cambridge engineering firm the Main Library could have been restored to its full working capacity over one year ago.

On January 11, 1980, an in depth investigative report conducted by the consultative engineering firm of Simpson, Gumpertz, and Heger, Inc., was submitted to the Vice Chancellor for Administration and Finance, Mr. George Beatty Jr. Copies of this report were also sent to the Bureau of Building Construction (BBC) in Boston.

A public information request sent by the SCERA Office of the University in early February of 1980, requesting a copy of the report, was ignored and later refused. The findings of the report were finally revealed when a copy was obtained through the demand of the Supervisor of the Public Records Office in Boston, in September of 1980.

The consultative engineers at Simpson, Gumpertz, and Heger, Inc., offer detailed analysis as well as specific remedies relating to the structural defects of the building. Conclusions of the report state that it was unlikely that the brick veneer of the building would "peel off," however, as a safety measure access to the library should remain limited to the lower level entrances. Furthermore, if the brick veneer ever was to break off, the plaza structure below the building has adequate strength to support the bricks and protect and pedestrians walking below. Pedestrians are now allowed to walk in the lower level eastern entrance, directly beneath the plaza structure. The School of Continuing Education, has been relocated to the south end of the plaza, with a handicap entrance ramp leading from the eastern entrance. These developments seem to acknowledge the safety of the building, as indicated by the report.

The implications of these findings are that the Main Library of the University could have been safely reopened and restored to its full working capacity as of January of 1980. As an independent member of the University community, I would respectfully request an explanation from the University administrative personnel responsible for the decision to preserve the Main Library in its present state of limited service.

It's time to reverse racist trends

After three days of letters against Nummo News I find myself compelled to reply to the criticisms that I feel are devoid of understanding of Third World people, their issues and their lives. The three letters demonstrate the need for the analysis of news pertinent to the Third World community and the broader student population in particular.

If the people who authored the letters consistently read Nummo they wouldn't have made the assertions they did.

The letters represent the perspectives of too many whites which are predicated on racist notions by people who may consider themselves not racist. It is this unconscious racism that has eroded the miniscule gains that so-called minorities have made. The common attitude expressed in the letters is that an exclusively Third World newspaper is segregationist. It's amusing that they use the term segregated newspaper because segregated means someone has segregated you; it inherently is an act taken against someone. What they mean is separatist, and in that criticism is the root of their problem.

We need news analysis in order to understand why 21 of our children have to be murdered in Atlanta and people like the letter writers don't seem upset about that. They say its a case of Nummo perpetuating an "us" and "them" mentality; however, we did not create, nor do we perpetuate, the conditions that have caused this. The sentiments expressed in those letters are precisely why we need and you need Nummo News, since these "open minded institutions" don't consider racism academically relevent enough to require for study.

This is not racism in reverse. It is time to reverse the trends that racism produces and begin our manifest destiny to civilize white America.

Bus stop smashed replacement needed

Pioneer Valley Transit Authority (PVTA) Assistant Administrator Alan Patashnick yesterday said the PVTA will replace the recently destroyed Fine Arts Center bus stop shelter "in the near future."

UMass Police Chief Robert Joyce said the shelter was destroyed Friday morning at aproximately 12:30 a.m. He said there were no witnesses, and estimated damage at $2,500.

William Lambert, university landscape architect, said a "very large rock" and 15 broken panels were found Friday morning beneath the shelter. He said the physical plant removed the remains of the shelter after receiving a complaint from a studnet concerned with the danger of broken pieces.

Wymin's events still scheduled

The Wymin's Coffeehouse scheduled for March 6 in the Commonwealth Room of the Student Union, featuring the music of the Mimi Jones Band, has been cancelled along with International Women's Week.

The Wymin's Contra-dance of March 7 scheduled for the Campus Auditorium of UMass, featuring Cindy Green, Barbara Stack and Joan Pelton, will still be held at the scheduled time.

SGA candidates to debate issues

A debate between the four groups of candidates for the Student Government Association Presidency is being sponsored by WSYL-TV in the Student Union Ballroom (SUB) on Monday, March 9, at 7:00 p.m.

The SGA elections will be held on March 10 and 11.

Savida Sachar, co-producer of the debate with Paul Mervine, said the debate is designed to "draw out the central issue differences between the candidates and to acquaint students with the issues so they know who is representing what."

Sachar said students who want to ask the candidates questions should be at the SUB by 6:30 p.m. The entire debate will be aired by the Union Video Center in the Student Union all day on Tuesday.

Over $600,000 to be spent, how?

The Amherst Board of Selectmen will hold a hearing on Monday March 16, at 8:00 p.m. in the Town Room of Town Hall on spending federal Revenue Sharing funds. All residents of Amherst will be allowed to make written and oral comments and suggestions regarding the possible uses of $508,000 of Federal Revenue Sharing funds received in fiscal year 1981, and $585,000 of funds to be received in fiscal years 1981 and 1982.

Energy collective tries solar projects

The Five College Solar Energy Collective, an RSO group founded last fall, has embarked on a number of new projects on campus, at Hampshire College, and in the community.

On campus the collective is raising money through a raffle to fund small scale construction projects including a thermosiphon air panel, a solar food dryer, and a solar oven. First Prize in the raffle will be a ride in a balloon.

To improve skills in solar technology, members are attending five week workshops on passive solar design and thermosiphon air panels conducted by Dan Reif, an experienced solar designer. Several collector panels will be constructed and their performance compared.

At Hampshire College, a newly-completed solar greenhouse is being used to experiment with aquaculture (intensive fish production in solar algae ponds), hydroponics (soil less growing of plants in a flowing nutrient solution), and agriculture. The greenhouse will produce protein from the tropical fish Tilapia, as well as vegetables and herbs. Solar collectors will be added to the greenhouse to help heat the fish tank.

Other Hampshire students are constructing a solar oven, which is expected to cook at 375 degrees F, by using a 6 foot parabolic reflector dish.

The collective has about 20 members. They have weekly meetings at the five colleges and welcome any new members who are interested.

Grants available for study abroad

American college students admissible to Junior Year or higher in September 1981 are eligible for grants to study in Paris during the academic year 1981-1982. The must be adequately prepared in French and have completed a dossier de pre-inscription which is received in Paris before 1 April 1981. These grants will be paid in French Francs in two installments each semester.

Additional grants of up to $1,000.000 for the year will be awarded to qualified students who elect AYA arranged housing in a French home.

Financial Aid Office only knew the address of a student's parents.

"That's been changed now," Apodaca said. "Now in order for a student to get a loan they have to give more information."

If a student defaults on a Guaranteed Student Loan the bank involved tries to contact the student. If they have no success, they sell it back to the federal government and it goes to the Department of Education. It the Department of Education can't get the money then they give it to the U.S. Attorney's Office and they take the student to civil court, said Crozier.

If a student defaults on a National Direct Student Loan it is handled by the university, Apodaca said.

"If we can't contact the student then we turn it over to a collection agency," said Apodaca. "They usually get about 30 percent. SOme of them can be pretty ruthless but we try to avoid them."

"If the student gets a hold of whoever he owes the money to," Apodaca said, "then usually we can work something out. The problem comes when the student completely ignores the notices."

Edward R. Morgan
(Behind the Beyond Records)

The most curious thing about Edward R. Morgan's music is not its particular style or quality, but rather its diversity. When listening to his latest album, one can't help but wonder which group or musicians inspired each song.

On the first side (designated by the press sheet as being folk oriented), strains reminiscent of Jethro Tull, Seals and Crofts, and Harry Chapin are intermingled through five various songs. The last song on this side "You Are My Love" is by far the superior one and reminds one of vintage Simon and Garfunkle.

On side B (designated as Rock by the publicity agents), Morgan, through a number of off-beat audio and recording effects suggests the influence of such performers as Joe Jackson, The Eagles, Roy Orbison, and even-pre 1960's Charlie Rich. It must surely be a testimony to an artist's talent and ability when he can jump from song to song and yet explore territories that are as far apart as the ones that are featured here.

It would also be amiss to say that this album is a tacky rip-off in the manner of Slim Whitman, Ace Cannon, and Boxcar Willie-The Singing Hobo; for Morgan not only wrote all the songs on the album but utilized a number of off-beat and exotic instruments as well. Ed, who is currently a resident of South Hadley, along with doing all the vocals, played the guitar, piano, saxophone, wooden flute and harmonica. Also on the album we have people like Liko Kraus on the harp and Mark Paffrath on the mandolin.

From the sound of it, this is a very fine and delicate album with many mood changes and precise melodies. For those who are interested in discovering new artists with new ideas then this album is a good bet; however, those of you who are interested in cranking up the same mindless hysteria day in and day out, might just as well stick to disco.

James "Blood" Ulmer
Are You Glad To Be In America Rough Trade)

Any record that defies categorization is o.k. in my pamphlet. Ulmer is a famous/infamous jazz guitarist who has done studio work with, among others, Ornette Coleman and reed magician Arthur Blythe.

Before the cries of "Not another legendary jazz guitarist" fill the bunker let me just say that Ulmer's blend of jazz, funk and soul is perhaps the most ambitious, enjoyable sound to squeeze out of my cheap Japanese speakers in weeks.

Ulmer recently made his Boston debut at the Channel. Unfortunately it was an evening of empty seats and polite applause. A low rent Monday night in South Boston is clearly not the appropriate venue.

Hopefully when he returns to The Paradise with Arthur Blythe's Quintet things will be different. Not the next big thing, but certainly the next best James Ulmer is stretching boundaries unencumbered by misconceived media hype. See him before some fool calls him the "future of bla...bla...bla..."

Motorhead
Ace of Spades* (Mercury)

No matter what label they try to give it, no matter what record company they record for, no matter what crowds they attract, no matter if they wear Sex Pistols buttons, it is a fact that shaggy-haired, shaggy-faced, unwashed-denim-clad neanderthals are only capable of playing one type of music—heavy metal—and it stinks.

Yeah, yeah, Motorhead is supposed to bridge the gap between heavy metal and punk, they're supposed to have that crucial sense of humor, they're supposed to appreciate the absurdity of their image, and they do claim to like the Clash better than Black Sabbath. Who cares?

All I know is that Ace of Spades is chock full of screaming, upper-register guitar solos, boring tunes, and racist/sexist lyrics. In other words, Motorhead's no different from any other dinosaur-rock band we've all come to know and hate. Dull, dull, dull.

Pete Seeger

Pete Seeger to give benefit concert

Folk singer Pete Seeger will give a concert to benefit the B'nai B'rith Hillel, Saturday March 7, at 8 p.m. in the Fine Arts Center.

Seeger has recorded over 80 LP's, and is also well known for his banjo playing, contributions to American folk music and championing of social causes. He has written a number of books including The Incompleat Folksinger (sic) and produced short films on folk music. Seeger's most recent social crusades have centered on the enviroment and disarmament.

In his concerts worldwide, Seeger has assimilated the folk music of diverse cultures, using his knowledge of musical styles to demonstrate the potential unity of all nations. His influence on contemporary American music is significant as well; as can be seen in the music of The Byrds, Arlo Guthrie, and Bob Dylan.

Tickets for the concert are being sold at the Fine Arts Center Box Office (open Monday through Friday from noon to 4 p.m. and one hour before the performances). Tickets are $6, 7 and 8 for the general public and $5, 6 and 7 for students and senior citizens.

Landscape planner hopes to restore campus' beauty

By AMY HASBROUK
Collegian Staff

The office in 127 Hasbrouck is a long and narrow room with one window. The window looks out on an ancient, pitted sidewalk, a mud flat that is supposed to be a lawn, and the scenic beauty of a PVTA bus stop. The office is occupied by Benjamin Fieman, assistant landscape designer and one of the master minds behind the landscape renovations going on at the University of Massachusetts.

Since 1976, the Campus Landscape Improvement Project, (CLIP) has been working to try and compensate for the large number of new buildings constructed in the 1960's and 70's. The goal of the project is to try to make the everyday experience of walking on a campus a positive one, Fieman said.

Among the more recent CLIP projects are the improvement and addition of walks on the west side of the campus pond, walks near Herter and Curry Hicks, a gravel walk on the east side of the campus pond, and improvements near Bartlett and the Student Union.

Artists use videotape not canvas at this show

The Union Video Center at the University of Massachusetts funded by the UMass Arts Council, is exhibiting a program of video art and documentaries on artists during the week of March 10-14.

Irene Starr, director of the Center, said the exhibition will feature top quality works by artists who use videotape rather than canvas, as an art medium.

"This exhibition should appeal to those interested in both art and television," said Starr. "Normally you'd have to travel to the Museum of Modern Art in New York to see works of this type."

The exhibit is free and will take place nightly at 7:30 in 216 Student Union at UMass.

The video art being exhibited is representative of well-established pioneering artists who use electronics as their medium. The opening night, March 10, features "Scapemates" by Ed Emshwiller, a surrealistic work that fuses video synthesis and computer animation. On March 11, there will be documentaries on such subjects as American Indian painting and Peruvian weaving.

'Illuminated Music II and III,' by Stephen Beck is scheduled for March 12. On March 13, there will be eight programs by Leland Johnson, a Northampton resident who established video departments and taught at Wesleyan University and Hartford Art School.

On March 14, "Global Groove" will be shown. It was produced by the iconoclastic Nam June Paik who presented the first known exhibition of video in 1963.

Pond hosts guests

By TERESA TEETER
Collegian Correspondent

The wild ducks which have made the campus pond their home this winter may be leaving the University soon, said animal science professor J. Robert Smyth.

Smyth, a bird expert, said this is the first year the University has had such a large group of wild ducks make their winter home on the pond. He said he thinks it was probably chance that the ducks landed at UMass.

They were looking for open water and there was some feed around," he said.

The animal science department keeps about 15 domesticated call ducks, eight geese, and two swans at the Tillson Farm Pond during the winter, Smyth said.

This winter, however, a large population of wild mallards and black ducks landed in the area of the pond. The caretakers were worried that the tame birds would starve, Smyth said. Because of "budget problems" they were not able to feed their birds along with the wild ducks.

The solution to the problem was to keep the tame ducks inside and stop feeding "our wild friends," in hopes that they would "go back from whence they came," he said.

Many students have enjoyed watching the ducks in the campus pond, particularly last week when the weather was unseasonably warm. The wild ducks tend to tame quickly and they become used to people easily, especially when they are fed, said Smyth.

"I like to throw them bread and watch them chase it," said Maria, an eight year old observer who was waiting for her mother.

Jeff Figgie, a junior zoology major, said he thinks the ducks "brighten up the pond and also are great to chase around while ice skating."

Other students said they "didn't care" about the ducks, they "are nice to have around", and they "are cute."

Physical plant workers said the swans will be back in the pond this spring and probably will not have any problems getting along with the ducks if they stay.

Fieman said one of the objectives of the project was to try and achieve the greatest efficiency possible. For example, the base of the walks CLIP is constructing are composed of wasted cinders from a coal burner. Also, the path on the east side of the campus pond was made out of gravel instead of concrete and this drastically reduced the cost.

The only cost CLIP incurrs is materials. The University grounds people provide the labor, said Fieman. Unfortunatley, the grounds keepers have the lowest paying job on campus, so no one makes a career of making the landscape more beautiful, he said.

"Landscape is not the highest priority at the university. Money is needed for education, to fix holes in roofs, and for coal for the heater. But we still have a place, Fieman said.

Fieman also said he would like to see more student imput into the process. He said it is important that the Physical Plant workers get the commendation they deserve, and mentioned that he had only seen negative comments in student's letters in the Collegian.

Proposition 2½ should not effect the CLIP program, and UMass should be an example to other schools in their efficient use of available resources, he said.

Putting the student's needs first, Fieman said he would ultimately like to see a paved, landscaped path everywhere there is a brown path of dirt made by people taking short cuts through lawns in order to get to class.

Swimwomen eighth in NE's

By FRANK NAGLE
and STEPHEN FREKER
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts women's swim team finished in eighth place at the New England Division A women's swimming and diving championships which were held this past weekend at Boston College.

Massachusetts tallied 238 total points in the 11 school competition, good for eigth position in the field.

"Overall, I'm pleased with the way the team swam," UMass coach Val Turtle said. "We had some good competition."

Massachusetts did not have many high individual finishes in the meet. The best that they could muster was two fourth place honors taken by Rosalie Nataupski. Her time of 1:02.6 was good for a fourth in the 100 yard butterfly event and she finished in the same spot in the 50 yard butterfly with a time 00:27.82 seconds.

Nataupski's time of 1:01.46 in the preliminary for the 100 yard butterfly event was good enough to qualify her for the National Division II championships. Nataupski will also compete in the 50 yard butterfly event at the Nationals, according to coach Turtle.

Jennifer Black set a new UMass school record with her time of 2:19.22 in the 200 yard backstroke. Black will also be going to the nationals on the basis of an earlier season qualifying time.

Swimmers in the AIAW Divison II Championships qualify for the meet by meeting certain qualifying times which are set aby the AIAW.

The National Division II Championships will be held from March 12-14 at Northern Michigan University.

"I'll tell you," English said. "I gained a lot of respect for UMass the last two times we've played them (URI defeated UMass 63-53 earlier this season). They don't play like a team that's lost more than 20 games."

Wright led URI with 17 points, while Pappy Owens added 14.

Besides DePina's 13, Smith added 11 and Whitehead finished with 10.

"Do you know where I'm going?" Ray Wilson asked rhetorically 20 minutes after last night's game. "I'm going on the road and find us some more help."

★ The fans were there had to pay," Don Tremblay, a junior, said. "But then I didn't care because I knew I was going to sneak in anyway. If I got caught, I probably would have paid because I really like this team."

Steve Shover, who followed the same route as Mr. Tremblay, echoed these sentiments (both declined to reveal their surreptitious means of entry). "If I didn't get in for nothin', I still would've paid," he said. "We followed this team all during intersession and we weren't about to miss this one."

Even though the Massachusetts fans were extremely exuberant and loud when the team needed it for the most part last night, the fans from URI could only be described as raucous. They were on their feet screaming at every call or play that went their way and definitely gained an edge when they continuously waved the innumerable blue and white Rhode Island Ram pompoms in unison.

The dominant color in the Cage last night was not the maroon and white of Massachusetts but, instead, the place was awash in Rhode Island baby blue. Even the 55 year old URI alumni were wearing the powder blue Ram sweaters.

A group of assorted Ram-loving nuts sat in the first row directly on the other side of the court facing the Minuteman bench and they clearly made their presence known. They led cheers, stomped their feet and, when the game was over and the URI win was consummated, this crew led the departing Rhode Island crowd in a victory jig.

"We had a great time tonight," one of this five-man pep squad said. "We're pumped now and I think we'll go all the way."

Are they celebrating the Rhode Island victory tonight?

"We had a few on the way up. A few that we snuck in here and we'll have quite a few on the way home to Kingston. You can count on that."

The final tally was in URI's favor. Banco. They took it all. The score. The crowd: URI many, UMass not so many. URI even brought their band which delighted the bipartisan crowd with such favorites as the Three Stooges theme song and a special rendition of the Mickey Mouse theme for the refs when they made a suitable call.

Perhaps if the crowd for UMass had been larger, it would have made a difference, in the Minutemen's favor. Steve Haynes and Neil C. Grant were two fans who wished it had happened that way.

"When they said money, a lot of people said 'no way'," Grant said. "If we had a big crowd like last week, then the team would have really pulled it out I think."

As usual, it simply wasn't in the cards for the Minutemen.

In a 175-pound battle between two independent entrants, Phil Crawford blanked Dave Perry, 4-0. And Scott Baker of Kappa Sigma edged Dan Maselli of BLT, 6-5, in the 180 pound championship.

Cagers impress, but story the same, 53-48

By KEVIN CULLEN
Collegian Staff

When you get right down to it, perhaps Rhode Island coach Claude English summed up last night's Eastern Eight playoff game at the Cage best.

"We survived on talent," English said. "UMass definitely wanted this game and played harder than we did. We just happen to have better people on the floor."

That, in a few words, said it all.

URI survived a scare from Massachusetts last night, taking a 53-48 decision, but not before UMass basketball gained a little respect it has lost in past years, while leaving one with the hope that, provided the kids stay, things will get better.

It was, in fact, the kids that made last night's playoff a basketball game for 40 minutes and not just a half game.

UMass came out inspired, with a disciplined man-to-man defense that held a heavily-favored URI team in check for most of the first half. Freshman Tyrone Whitehead's opening layup and a Bill Bayno followup on a missed free throw gave UMass a 4-2 lead it held onto for over three minutes in the early going.

"I was worried that their (URI's) size would just dominate us inside," UMass head coach Ray Wilson said. "But the man-to-man worked well, and we were rebounding with them."

Indeed, it was his team's failure to outrebound the diminutive Minutemen that left English so puzzled.

"Our rebounding stunk," English said flatly. "When you're as big as we are, you should dominate the boards, and we did not. UMass simply wanted the ball more than we did."

While UMass freshman Edwin Green was doing a fairly good job containing URI musceleman Jimmy Wright, frustrating the Rams' leading scorer inside, Whitehead threw in two more baskets, while Craig Smith added six points, to keep the Minutemen close throughout the half. A Green jumpshot tied the game, 20-20, with 5:10 left in the half, but URI's Phil Kydd hit two free throws to give the Rams a two point lead. Thirty seconds later, a pretty Whitehead pass found Jeff Bierly for a backdoor turnaround that tied the game again. After Wright made it 26-24 with two free throws, it stayed that way for the final three minutes of the half, as UMass employed a disciplined four-corners stall, content to go into the locker room down by just two.

UMass had perhaps their best first half all year, shooting 43 percent (9-for-21) while outrebounding the Rams 18 to 10, behind Whitehead's seven boards.

While URI seemed to handle UMass with a bit more ease during the second half, getting the lead up to as many as 10 (48-38) with 5:15 left. Tony DePina scored nine of his team high 13 points, keeping the Minutemen in striking distance throughout the final 20 minutes.

"I thought at the beginning of the second half, we were going to go into a stretch when we just say 'oh, no, here it comes again,'" Wilson said. "But we didn't. Our kids played really well. I think they wanted to go to Pittsburgh (to the Eastern Eight semi-finals)."

Showing some stick-to-itiveness, which has lacked most of the season, UMass played the game to the final buzzer, holding the Rams to just one basket in the final 3:25 as they closed the final gap to five points.

And, the attitude showed.

Bold, Little & Tough takes wrestling title

By MIKE ESTRADA
Collegian Staff

To captain Mike Vilardi of Bold, Little and Tough, capturing the team wrestling title in last night's intramural championship at Boyden Auxiliary Gymnasium was the only appropriate result for him and his buddies.

"It means a lot to everyone win or lose, these guys are the best," he said. "They really gave their all in every match."

BLT of Coolidge Tower captured first place in three weight classes and second place in five others to edge Delta Chi, 42-37 and win the Intramural Department's Annual tourney, held before 100 fans.

Gabe Oliveri dumped John Maenhout of the Rebels, 11-3, in 190-pound class. Fred Oakes pinned Phi Sigma Kappa's Shane Hart in the second period of their 185-pound class matchup. And Vilardi himself set the pace with a 13-2 defeat of Pi Kappa Alpha's Scott Peterson in the 135-pound division.

"Winning meant a lot to me tonight," Vilardi said. "I was in shape and ready for the match." He said both he and Peterson were on the UMass wrestling team for a while this year, and was able to defeat the PKA entry despite the fact that "he was last year's intramural champion."

Other teams gathering points were Beta Kappa Phi, with two first places and 24 points. Phi Sigma Kappa and Pi Kappa Alpha tied for fourth in the team results with 18 points each.

In the unlimited weight division, 240-pound junior Marco Manzanares pinned 230-pound, 28-year old Karlson Green in the second period of their matchup.

Green, a student majoring in Physics and Electrical Engineering, said Manzanares "was just so damn big and strong" that he was unable to handle him.

"The only chance I had to beat him was to trick him," he said. A campus champion in the 191 pound class in 1973 and 1975, Green hoped his experience would give him the edge he needed.

But Manzanares, a former California state runner-up in Wrestling from South San Francisco High School who is currently a tackle on the UMass football team, had little trouble with Green. After taking a 2-0 lead after the first period, he breezed to the pin halfway through the next minute and a half.

Fourteen wrestlers were awarded plaques for their efforts in capturing first place in individual classes.

In the 120-pound class, Glen Gaylin of Zeta Psi pinned Timothy Kearney of Delta Chi. Kevin Paszko, also of Delta Chi, pinned Ned Futterman of BLT in the 130-pound division. Another Delta Chi entrant, Tom Choi, pinned John Shea of BLT in the 140-pound weight class.

In a close, 9-7, 145-pound match, Peter Joseph of PKA edged Gary Currelop of BLT. Ted Klash, an independent entrant, topped John Lewison, 6-2, in the 150-pound division.

Independent John Scarth, the 155-pound champion, beat Dick McClure, 7-2. Delta Chi's Ed Kim downed independent Dave

UM fans were there, but so were URI's

By STEPHEN FREKER

(The following conversation was overheard yesterday morning on the bus from Brittany Manor to the stop in front of the Grad Research Center.)

"Did you hear that we have to pay to get in if we want to go to that hoop playoff game tonight?"

"Get outta here. They can't even get people to come for free. How much are they charging?"

"Two fifty. I guess it's because the Eastern Eight is running it or somethin'., I don't know. They're gonna get killed anyway because they're playing Rhode Island, they won the league."

"Yeah, they'll probably lose, but I doubt it'll be a blowout. UMass gave them a game last time they played. I might go anyway. I've never seen a playoff game."

"Well, good luck, you'll probably be the only one there (laughter)."

Well, the game was certainly not a blowout, the University of Massachusetts Minutemen had nothing to be ashamed of in losing 53-48 to the University of Rhode Island last night at the Cage. For one of the few times this season, they put together a full game of inspired basketball.

There was also an admission charge, $2.50 for I.D.-carrying students since it was a league-run game, not University-sponsored as many students thought, but the Cage was far from empty. There are real Minuteman basketball fans out there after all, not just the boobirds and cat-callers who permeated the Cage for a few token games this year. The fans who showed up last night were there for a purpose. They wanted to cheer for their team. These people were not ashamed to be associated with UMass. They weren't worried about the team's record. They simply wanted to see if their team could knock off the Eastern Eight regular season championship Rams.

Granted a few fans didn't pay, but, what the hell? Just because they found cheaper ways to watch their team in the playoffs doesn't mean they weren't any less sincere in their support.

"I was mad when I first heard that we

Panasonic Stereo-to-Go: Nobody gives you more ways to fill the room inside your head.

Only Panasonic Stereo-to-Go brings beautiful music to your ears in so many different ways. There are four Stereo-to-Go models, each with super-light-weight headphones. So whatever kind of music moves you, moves with you. Wherever you go!

The RS-J3 is a stereo tape player so small you won't believe the size of the sound that comes out of it. And its price will come as a pleasant surprise, too.

The RS-J1 is a slightly larger portable stereo cassette player with a handle for carrying tunes – and the right connections for use as a tape deck at home.

The RX-2700 is the world's smallest headphone AM/FM stereo cassette recorder. It has a built-in AM/FM radio, so you can listen to tapes or FM stereo through headphones and even record in stereo.

The RF-20 is the world's smallest FM stereo headphone radio. It's a set of featherweight headphones with an FM stereo radio built right into it. Fantastic!

Whichever model you choose, a Panasonic Stereo-to-Go lets everybody know you've got something between your ears.

You've been trying to get to know her better since the beginning of the term. And when she mentioned how hard it is to study in the dorm, you said, "My place is nice and quiet. Come on over and study with me."

Your roommates weren't very happy about it. But after a little persuading they decided the double feature at the Bijou might be worth seeing.

They're pretty special friends. And they deserve a special "Thanks." So, tonight, let it be Löwenbräu.

IN ONE EAR

As a reviewer, Gene Sculatti is out to lunch. If all he got from Double Fantasy by John Lennon was the fact that it took Lennon 5 years to learn housekeeping, then Sculatti has a lot to learn about his trade. Lennon has an immense amount to say in Double Fantasy, and it all flies right over Mr. Sculatti's head. The reason the roughness is gone in this album is because Lennon's anger is gone. The whole idea is to show Lennon living the peaceful, loving life which he for so long preached about (all you need is love). He couldn't do that with a Plastic Ono Band-style album.

Lennon comments on many other areas in Double Fantasy, such as male-female relationships. It's plain to see John is saying in "Clean Up Time" and "Woman" that men don't have to be super-macho to be men and women don't have to be housemaids to be feminine. This is only the tip of the Lennon-meaning iceberg. Mr. Sculatti would do well to listen closer to the albums he reviews in the future.

NEW CONTRIBUTORS

David Lubkin (In Print) not only reviews sci-fi books, he writes them. In Michigan. Nobody's perfect.

Howard Rosenberg (John Hiatt) has finagled his photographs into Rolling Stone, Time and, finally, Ampersand. Rosenberg says he's a devotee of natural light, but fails to specify whether he means beer or available sunshine.

Duncan Strauss (On Tour) who stalks the elusive "Blood" Ulmer in this issue, covers entertainment for the California Aggie (U.C. Davis) and RAM Magazine.

Gene Sculatti (On Disc) may or may not be the infamous Chuck Steak, whose Unprovoked Attack radio show featured an interview with Jim Morrison and Fred Ledans of the University of California, Magic Mountain. But we know for certain Sculatti's writings have appeared in New West, Oui, Rolling Stone, and the late, sorely missed Wax Paper.

In The Red

All Hollywood is waiting (with assorted attitudes) to see whether Francis Ford Coppola's Zoetrope Studios will cose or remain open, and whether his currently-in-production film, One from the Heart, will be completed. Coppola is in serious financial trouble unless he can come up with a million or two. All this less than a year after Coppola bought the old run-down Hollywood General Studios with promises of revitalizing Hollywood. At press time his studio employees had agreed to take cuts in salary, but this was a temporary measure.

Jungle Jack Flash

THERE MAY NOT BE A ROLLING STONES tour this year because Mick Jagger is reportedly stranded deep in the Amazon jungle filming Fitzcarraldo, directed by Werner Herzog (who filmed Aguirre, Wrath of God in a nearby locale) and starring Jason Robards as an obsessed madman keen on building an opera house in the jungle so he can hear Caruso first hand. Jagger plays Robards' feeble-minded nephew; together they venture deep into the jungle to find rubber. Stay tuned.

Football Has Been Very Very Good to Me

OHIO STATE'S controversial former football coach, Woody Hayes, will be the subject of a film titled, rather predictably, The Woody Hayes Story; script is by Budd Schulberg (who wrote On the Waterfront and The Harder They Fall, among others); Jack Nicholson is being pursued for the title role.

Two more rumored football flicks: The Jim Plunkett Story, all about the man who just led the Raiders to their Superbowl victory; producer Roger Corman supposedly wants Erik Estrada to star. Ed Asner is the reported choice to play Knute Rockne in The George Gipp Story (do you believe these titles?). Our president once played George Gipp ("Win one for the Gipper!"). How depressing.

Terminations

DESPITE A HOT SINGLE with "The Tide Is High" and a very popular (if semi-putrid) album with Autoamerican, rumors persist that Blondie has broken up. According to whispered conversations, Deborah Harry and Chris Stein have fired the rest of the band.

LOU REED has shifted from Arista Records, headed by his professed friend Clive Davis (a.k.a. "Jive Clive"), to RCA Records, where he cut his original solo material and the Velvet Underground albums. Reed's recent Arista albums got generally good critical notes, but, in the words of a New York record store manager, "they didn't sell for s--t."

Listen to the Wookie

STAR WARS will be on the radio — National Public Radio is finally offering the first audio installments, a full year after originally promised, but welcome anyway. The only familiar Star Wars voices will be Mark Hamill as Luke Skywalker and Anthony Daniels as C3PO; Perry King will portray Han Solo, Brock Peters will be Darth Vader, Ann Sachs, Princess Leia. The first 13 episodes will be a "greatly expanded" version of the first film; new characters will be introduced who may appear in forthcoming films, so pay attention. About 200 National Public Radio stations will carry Star Wars starting in the first or second week of March. Check your locals. Oh yes — the series will also incorporate sophisticated stereo sound techniques, including the nifty John Williams score.

More Boobs for the Tube

BAND ON THE RUN, an hour-long new series from MTM on CBS, gives us the on-the-road adventures of a country & western band (three guys, one gal); said band is pursued by a nasty former manager's mean henchman. Sounds like The Fugitive Meets the Monkees on Hee Haw.

COUNTRY SINGER MEL TILLIS and Steeler quarterback Terry Bradshaw were supposedly so funny together in Cannonball Run, the latest Burt Reynolds epic, that NBC signed them up for a series, called The Stockers, based on their Cannonball characters.

Genius & Others at Work

RICHARD DREYFUSS will portray Albert Einstein, age 26, in a Disney production — described as a cross between a "straight biography and Fantasia." The untitled picture will use animation and special effects to show how Einstein devised his theory of relativity. Dreyfuss' brother Lorin and David Landsberg are the project developers.

STEVE MARTIN, Bernadette Peters and Christopher Walken are starring in Pennies from Heaven, about a sheet music salesman in the Thirties. Although full of song and dance, the film is dramatic; Martin's dull, boring life and unhappy marriage send him into musical fantasies. Peters starts out as a schoolteacher, has an abortion and ends up a prostitute, while Walken plays a pimp. As hinted by all this, Pennies is not a typical Steve Martin routine. "This is his first dramatic role," quoth the film's publicist; "he's definitely not playing this with an arrow through his head." Martin spent four months on tap dancing lessons, but no one in the film sings; rather, they all lip-synch to original recordings of the Thirties.

And after that, Martin is supposed to revert to type, playing a private eye in Suck the Bullet (a tentative but memorable title).

Digital Delay

RY COODER has sworn off digital recording. Though his recent Borderline is digitally recorded and last year's Bop 'Til You Drop was promoted as "rock's first digital LP," Cooder wants to go back to the sounds of the pre-transistor era. Nevertheless, digital has several new converts to its clean, lively (& expensive) sound: Billy Joel, Jefferson Starship, Rickie Lee Jones, Paul Williams, the Outlaws, the Village People (remember them?) and Quincy Jones are all making digital LPs. Digital studio time is about $25 an hour more costly than standard recording. "I like the clean, perfected sound of digital," Grammy-winner Christopher Cross told Billboard recently, "especially for my type of music. Of course," he added, "if I was Mott the Hoople I probably wouldn't think it was such a good idea."

In the Studio & on the Road

DAVID JOHANSEN is in New York studios, working on his third album for Blue Sky Records. Also in console country is Tom Verlaine, former leader of Television, now a solo artist for Warner Bros.

ANTICIPATION is high for a new Garland Jeffries album, his first for Epic. Escape Artist will feature the ? and the Mysterians classic, "96 Tears" as well as "Miami Beach," a song about the recent Freedom City riots, and a 4-song reggae EP including contributions from David Johansen, Lou Reed, Big Youth, Linton Kwesi-Johnson, E Street Banders Danny Federici and Roy Bittan and a couple of members of the Wailers. The Rumour, formerly Graham Parker's quintessential backup band, is accompanying Jeffries on a European tour.

ERIC CLAPTON begins a four-month, sixty-concert tour in March. For those chagrined by the sleepwalking qualities of Clapton's recent discs, the lively Fabulous Thunderbirds will open the bill. Clapton's tour is in support of a new LP (first studio work in two years) called Another Ticket.

Frogs Dig Blues

BLUESMAN ALBERT COLLINS, a great, sweaty showman who likes to prowl audiences with a long cord on his Fender, tossing off insinuating glances with his nasty riffs, just received the 1981 "Prix Big Bill Broonzy" in Paris. The award, granted by the French Academie du Jazz, celebrates Collins' recent Ice Pickin' LP on Alligator Records.

What Might Have Been (A Continuing Saga)

TWO MUSICIANS were on their way to Ampersand's cover recently, but each got uniquely sidetracked.

Delbert McClinton, now Top Ten with "Givin' It up for Your Love," was slated for a flight to Los Angeles recently, there to meet with Ampersand, Rolling Stone, Newsweek and the camera crew of Solid Gold, a TV pop music series. Came Tuesday and no Delbert. "We don't know where he is," chorused McClinton's manager and record label. "But we think he had a fight with his wife and he might be somewhere in Mexico . . . maybe."

Tom Petty, triple platinum a year ago with Damn the Torpedoes, an album made in the midst of legal battles, is delaying completion of his newest album because MCA, parent label to his Backstreet Records, wants to retail the finished product at $9.98. Arguing that a whopping price would damage his personal image, Petty adds, "For once in my life, I'd like to make a record without a legal battle. It's just not fair to the kids."

"Maybe," countered an anonymous MCA spokesperson, "if he didn't burn up a million dollars making the record, it wouldn't have to cost so much."

De-evolution

DEVON, PENNSYLVANIA has a headache. Avid fans of Devo, the Akron, Ohio, rock and roll mindbenders who postulate that humans are experiencing retrograde evolution, have taken to proving that theory with a thorough campaign to change everything labeled "Devon" to "Devo." Thus, hundreds of children have attended "Devo Elementary School" and commuters by the thouands have taken the "Devo" highway interchange.

FABIAN has reportedly filed a $64,250,000 lawsuit against Transamerica, United Artists, producers Gene Kirkwood and Howard Koch, Jr., Bob Marcucci and writer Edward DiLorenzo, claiming, among other charges, that their film The Idolmaker constitutes an invasion of his privacy and holds him up to ridicule. Kirkwood said at press time that he had not yet been served any papers. "But Paul Land [who plays the young singer in the film] may sue Fabian for defamation of character," Kirkwood wisecracked. Marcucci, it should be noted, was Fabian's discoverer and manager back in the early Sixties — not unlike the Ray Sharkey character in the Idolmaker.

They Shall Be Released . . . Maybe

THE WORLD ACCORDING TO GARP, script by Breaking Away's writer Steve Tesich, will reportedly star Robin Williams as Garp . . . Lillian Hellman's three autobiographical books, Pentimento, An Unfinished Woman and Scoundrel Time, are planned as one film, so far untitled and unstarred . . . Producer Julia Phillips has Erica Jong's Fear of Flying in beginning stages (no cast yet), while Jong herself is trying to produce a version of her latest novel, Fanny . . . It's rumored that Peter O'Toole has agreed to star in a remake of The Bridge on the River Kwai, but from the Japanese point of view . . . James Caan and Al Pacino, who co starred in the first Godfather, will reunite in The Pope of Greenwich Village. Conan, currently filming in Spain with Arnold Schwarzenegger as the big bad barbarian, will also star James Earl Jones and Max Von Sydow, with production design by Bill Stout, prominent in the Tits and Lizard school of fantasy illustration . . . Sissy Spacek, who won the Golden Globe for Best Actress in Coal Miner's Daughter, will next appear in Raggedy Man, with Sam Shepard and Eric Roberts, a 1940s tale of marriage and separation . . . Alan Alda's Four Seasons will be released in mid-May; this is his first acting/writing/directing accomplishment (he wrote and starred in The Seduction of Joe Tynan), about friendship among three couples . . . Tim Hutton will spend four weeks in military training — shaved head, 5 a.m. pushups, etc. — to prepare for his role in Taps.

THE GREAT AMERICAN PHOTO CONTEST, mentioned last issue, has postponed its deadline to March 27, giving all you amateur photogs more time to enter. Call 800-251-1790 for more details.

On Disc

Joe "King" Carrasco & the Crowns

(Hannibal Records) If party music is a lost art, nobody told these guys. The thirteen cuts locked in the grooves of Joe "King" Carrasco and the Crowns debut LP don't just cook — they parboil, deep fry and barbeque. It's the most unabashed 40 minutes of fun since the invention of the polka and long overdue proof that the best rock is played straight to the feet, not the head.

Texas bred Joe and his rollicking Crowns recall a galaxy of trashy Tex-Mex, rock and R&B heros on this delightful album, including Sam the Sham and the Pharoahs, ? and the Mysterians, the Swingin Medallions, Sir Doug, Buddy Knox, Music Explosion, the Kingsmen and a host of others. Yet, it's not so much the discernible influences — including some head banging pogo rhythms — that endow this outing with an authentic good times feel, it's really the group's own exuberant energy. They don't invite you to dance — they dare you not to.

Nominally, the band uses the Tex-Mex cumbia rock of South Texas much as a good Mexican chef would use refried beans — a hearty and nourishing base to which are added mounds of spicy condiments. The resulting aural tostada hits all sorts of musical flavor buds at the same time and the whole concoction slides down with a pleasant sizzling sensation. Genuine rock primitives, the Crowns — anchored by the cheesy splendor of Kris Cumming's Farfisa organ — have accomplished the impossible; a record with no bad cuts. Songs careen into each other with hapless and happy abandon. Not only are there no slow songs — even the vinyl between cuts crackles with energy.

Dancing, laughing, eating — Joe "King" and the Crowns recall them all, to which might also be added, drinking, leching and howling at the moon.

Sir Douglas Quintet
Border Wave

(Takoma)—As gratifying as it is to welcome back long gone musicmakers, such affairs have a way of being pretty dismal. One thinks of such misadventures as the various Byrds reunions, short-lived second tries by the Righteous Bros. and Four Seasons, the ill-advised "return" of Sam the Sham or Country Joe & the Fish. In most cases, the lack of recognition wears off and the warm embrace turns quickly cold.

All of which makes the reunion of "Sir" Doug Sahm with members of his original Quintet such an unexpected triumph. Border Wave may just be the best music Austin's laconic Sahm has ever made, and it surely matters that he's making it with "Mendocino" era accompanists "Oogie" Meyer and John Perez, along with Alvin Crow and Speedy Sparks.

Things get off to a hot start with what sounds like the fastest, most 'up' cut of Sahm's career, an unlikely cover of the Kinks' "Who'll Be the Next in Line." There's a punky, 1965-ish reading of Roky Erickson's (and the 13th Floor Elevators) "You're Gonna Miss Me" that restores all of that chestnut's pre-psychedelic glory. And there's a drastically improved update of "Revolutionary Ways," one of the underrated originals from Sir Doug's late Sixties solo career.

Most impressive are the Quintet's new songs—Crow's "Tonite Tonite" (Meyer's organ-izing should at least get him elected President some day), Sahm's polka-dotted title cut, "It Was Fun While It Lasted" and "Old Habits Die Hard," songs as fine as any he's ever written.

There are few requirements for anyone liking this record. New Wavers, Texans, unreconstructed hippies—none should have any reservations whatsoever. In an age when mass appeal equals bland, along comes the Quintet to remind us what "crossover" really means.

Ry Cooder
Borderline

(Warner Bros.) After dabbling in such exoticisms as Hawaiian guitar stylings (Chicken Skin Music) and antique jazz-roots material (Jazz), Ry Cooder seems to have settled into a niche he wishes to develop at length. Borderline finds the veteran guitarist pursuing a Latin/blues/pop direction, capturing an appealing Texas flavor of outlaws, romance and fast living.

Tex-Mex melodies and rhythms are in vogue in rock at the moment, making this LP very much in step with the times. Cooder brings out the plaintive, melodramatic tinge to Latin music through lively, uncluttered arrangements. A number of his sidemen distinguish themselves, particularly drummer Jim Keltner and organist William D. Smith, who play with surprising authenticity. While some of Cooder's choices for material ("Speedo," "Down in the Boondocks") might seem unlikely ones for this album, they turn out well—every song has the sound of a Cantina serenade, intimate and folksy.

If Borderline has one deficiency, it's that Cooder's reknowned slide guitar is featured too sparingly. Though his stinging style does highlight several tracks ("Never Make Your Move Too Soon" most notably), we're left wanting to hear more. Though he can be a diffident, overly precise artist, Cooder's humor, good taste and affection for his music win us over.

Pat Metheny

(ECM) When a leader surrounds himself with talents like saxophonists Dewey Redman and Mike Brecker, bassist Charlie Haden and drummer Jack DeJohnette, provocative and alluring sounds are expected and '80/81' is surely that. Straying temporarily from his electric, contemporary format, guitarist Metheny seeks new ground here and often lands solidly, even managing to overcome producer Manfred Eicher's amazingly boring propensity for sameness within a project.

The two-disc outing is in four chunks. Side one's "Two Folk Songs" opens with Brecker stating the melody in full, rounded tones then soloing at length over a highly-charged rhythm section supervised with elan by DeJohnette's spirited, always-shifting pulsations. The tenorist almost immediately breaks away from the back-and-forth harmonic center and explores freer values. Afterwards, Metheny holds all together while Haden and the drummer work around inside, then the bassist, wistful and delicate, plays what resembles "Bury Me Not on the Lone Prairie," at half the previous tempo, followed by a bright guitar passage, with Metheny evoking images of the Great Southwest, almost like a western soundtrack except that no western has had a DeJohnette furiously egging on a guitarist. This is the album's highpoint.

The second portion is a tribute to Ornette Coleman, with two Metheny vehicles in the Coleman tradition and the saxophonist's classic blues, "Turnaround." "80/81" has a brisk tempo with a startling half-time melody against that pulse at the bridge, creating a rush of tension. The leader's wide, wiry sound works well with the go-where-you-will rhythm section that's constantly grooving. Redman and Haden know this course well, and Metheny shows he's no slouch either. Redman emits a darker, more robust sound than his compatriot Brecker, and is less extreme in his melodic presentation, but he, too, cooks like a Cordon Bleu grad. "The Bat" is a radiant ballad, delivered with a stately elegance and highlighted by Haden's sensuous, luxurious tones. The blues opens with the bassist's sure-fingered reading of the line and shows that Metheny, for all his contemporariness, has not forgotten this ancient twelve-bar journey.

The third segment consists of "Open," which, excepting the brief melody, is totally free, and "Pretty Scattered," which though well played, is too much of what just went before.

The last disc centers around "Every Day (I Thank You)," more in the pop vein that we expect from Metheny and a feature for Brecker, whose intensity at first is refreshing, as he sprays double-timed utterances over an aggressive trio accompaniment. But he stays too long at the fair, and a reprieve from this onslaught is not soon coming. The leader's "Goin' Ahead" closes the session; while lyrical and persuasive, it is insufficient to balance out the previous cut's rawness.

The whole of '80/81' is a bit much to take in one sitting, but in small morsels it is an enjoyable, and often quite musical, release.

My Life in the Bush of Ghosts
Brian Eno/David Byrne

(Sire) Talking Head Byrne and producer, electronics whiz Eno lifted the polyfunk concept of Remain in Light from this collaboration effort, initially recorded beforehand. Yet The Bush of Ghosts is far more experimental.

The album opens with an evangelist declaiming that "America is waiting for an answer of some sort." A Beefheart-like meter, Byrne's staccato guitar clanging and Eno's whooshing synthesizer frames his speech, as he condemns us for having "no will what soever, absolutely no integrity!" The throbbing music in "Mea Culpa" meshes deep, resonant whispers with somebody repeating, "I'm sorry, I made a mistake . . ." The black preacher howling in "Help Me Somebody" is backed by a furious funk beat; the effect is not unlike James Brown in his prime.

But the LP's masterpiece is "The Jezebel Spirit." An intense dance beat is established, Byrne adds a sharp guitar melody, then Eno enhances it with a synthesizer that swells menacingly. An evil-sounding laugh is heard. "Do you hear voices?" asks what sounds like the Rev. Ernest Angely. "You do, so you are po-ssessed!" He then goes on to exorcize a demon from a woman, who can be heard hyperventilating with passion. As he reaches an emotional peak, demanding "Out, Jezebel! Out, destruction!" The music peaks in intensity.

The music on the second side is subtler, with more of an emphasis on Middle Eastern sounds. "Qu Ran" is typical of that influence; the wailing voices are reminiscent of the Turkish Muslim prayers in Midnight Express. Other songs evoke moody auras. "Mountain of Needles" is a stellar example of using silence to amplify single piano and bass notes, or the reverberations of a gong.

More exotic dance and mood music than My Life in The Bush of Ghosts is hard to find. Other artists have inserted taped spoken passages into music, but Byrne and Eno have given the concept a whole album's worth of effort, and the results have rarely been as spectacular. What the Talking Heads hinted at in their most recent release, Eno and Byrne amplify in a blaze of glory.

Delbert McClinton
Rocks His Way from Honky Tonks to a Hit Record

After 20 years of hard nights in honky tonks, after a string of luckless affiliations with 10 different record labels, after five critically acclaimed but seldom heard albums, Delbert McClinton suddenly finds himself in the commercial music mainstream.

McClinton's new single, "Giving It Up For Your Love," is rapidly becoming a nationwide radio favorite, and sales on his recently released Capitol LP, The Jealous Kind, have already eclipsed any of his previous appearances on vinyl.

How do you explain this surprising emergence? People who know music aren't surprised at all. For years aficionados have recognized Delbert as arguably the best white southern blues rocker alive. But many would also allow that McClinton's uncompromising stylistic commitment to his "black-and-blues" musical roots has kept him from success in the mass marketplace.

"I'm not saying that I'm right and the world is wrong," drawls Delbert, "but the old stuff just sounds better to me. It inspires me, keeps me goin'."

Keeping things going hasn't been easy. More than two decades ago, McClinton started singing and playing harmonica on the rawhide-and-cold brew circuit in southern Texas. Between the boozing and brawling, he honed his chops by jamming with legendary bluesmen like Howlin' Wolf, Lightnin' Hopkins and Jimmy Reed.

Delbert's first record, a cover of Sonny Boy Williamson's "Wake Up Baby," set a precedent in 1960 as the first platter by a white artist to air on Ft. Worth's black radio station. But this distinction was totally lost on the white Coast dog food factory.

Record deals in the late '70s produced a succession of albums that pleased critics but generated only moderate airplay and sales. Knockout live shows across the country brought Delbert a loyal cult following, especially among musicians and other performers. But even an appearance on "Saturday Night Live" proved a short-lived burst of national exposure that paid meager dividends at the record racks.

It wasn't until McClinton teamed with Muscle Shoals Sounds Records, the independent label (distributed by Capitol) of the famed studios in Sheffield, Alabama, that things began to happen. Delbert's new album, recorded at Muscle Shoals with an all-star roster of session musicians, has a fuller, cleaner sound than anything he's done before.

"I never could get everything I wanted onto a record," he says. "But I feel like I grew up with these Muscle Shoals guys. They have no barriers. We could take it in any direction we wanted to go. I just did what I've always tried to do — find some songs I can put my heart into and sing 'em so they sound good to me."

The songs sound good to others as well. Top 40 radio has discovered Delbert's sassy and

With more than two decades of performing in smoke-filled roadhouses throughout rural America, Delbert is arguably the best white southern blues rocker around.

Two years later, Delbert's searing harmonica work on Bruce Channel's "Hey Baby" helped make the song a worldwide number one hit. The record's success prompted a club tour of England, where at one of the dates a promising quartet from Liverpool opened the bill.

"After one of the sets, somebody from the opening act asked me to show him something on the harmonica," Delbert recalls. "I showed this guy a few things, but I didn't think anything of it." Within a year the results of this backstage lesson could be heard on "Love Me Do." The Beatles' first single. Delbert's impromptu pupil had been John Lennon, and the opening act none other than the fledgling Fab Four.

But while The Beatles went on to redefine pop music, Delbert went back to a dozen years of redneck beer joints and regional obscurity, punctuated by an abortive shot at the big time in 1970 when he headed for Hollywood and wound up working in a West soulful style, while powerful renditions of Al Green's "Take Me To The River" and the sensuous "Shotgun Rider" are bringing the rockin' blues back to album-oriented airwaves.

It's been a long upstream journey for Delbert McClinton, but he's finally getting the recognition that he and his music deserve.

It's about time.

McClinton's first Capitol album, The Jealous Kind, is a current favorite on album-oriented stations across the country, while "Giving It Up For Your Love" has been "discovered" by Top 40 formats as a powerful new single.

Shatterday

HARLAN ELLISON
Houghton Mifflin, $12.95

It seems repetitious to review Harlan Ellison's newest canister of phantasms. The man reviews them himself, after his fashion: seventeen stories, seventeen introductions—eighteen, if you count the general intro. He tells you how to read each story, what was going on in his life when he wrote the story, what was going on as he wrote the introduction, what being a writer is all about, what he thinks of what people think of his stories, and generally, what life is like for a tough, gritty, hard boiled, barb-witted, iconoclastic, brutalized, one-step-ahead chiaroscuro chimera named Harlan Ellison—all the while pumping us with false-ringing pleonasms about how the following fantasies are our bad dreams, our fears, our mortal dreads, "transmogrified" through the "purifier of my imagination"? Well, it is 98 per cent hokum, and a lot of fun, too.

The introductions seem worthy of mention, because they are skewered on the same connecting rod that holds all the stories together, namely Ellison's ego, which rants and rampages, behind and out front of the literary masque. It's like a child intensely make-believing, alternately delighting and alarming us. This phenomenon makes for stories with no characters, save one: that ingenious and horrified Mind, cackling, smirking, commenting wryly, or lifting a what-do-you-make-of-it eyebrow in a flitting moment of near-serious reflection. There are no characters. There is only "the woman with the serious smile," the "man lying in the fog," and so on. These particular wraiths, we learn at the end of "The Other Eye of Polyphemus," are merely "lost bits" of the main character. They are "Malformed . . . hairless, blind, atrophied, ruined." They are "Damaged, forlorn, but no longer bound to him." It's a pretty straightforward case of artistic exorcism, problems being worked through in isolation; Ellison is not even concerned with character as an aspect of the story (in a particularly effective miniature called "Opium," an hallucinating attempted-suicide named Anne Marie Stebner has a page-long conversation with the Seven Dwarfs, who are planting a bonsai tree on the front lawn of her duplex) and in fact he gets along quite nicely without it. His forte is suspense, page-flipping readability, as shown in the longer stories, "All the Lies That Are My Life" and "Shatterday," both stories of the ego under siege, in one case by symbiosis, in the other by conscience.

Ellison's style is polyglot, informed as it is not only by the serious fantasists (Irving, Hawthorne, Poe, and Twain, to name a few of them) but by pulp magazines, comic books, radio serials, Hollywood, and life on the wet side of rocks. There is a wonderful description of a magic shop in "Shoppe Keeper," and in "Opium" Ellison's penchant for injecting jokiness into macabre dreams is at its eerie best. Here is Anne Marie again, slowly bleeding to death from a razorblade incision in her arm:

"Sailing the catamaran through the reefs of sapphire rocks, she made for the island. The wind smelled of freshly mown grass and carried with it the faint tinkling of wind chimes.

"'If it gets too lonely out here,' she said aloud, 'perhaps I'll start a fast-food franchise. Something with Lebanese food, maybe.'"

That's nice; sort of Bruce Jay Friedman with horns. Elsewhere, the rib-poking gets tiresome, as in "How's The Night Life on Cissalda?" in which we're subjected to an endless litany of real-life media celebrities having coitus with a "disgusting thing" from an alternate time/universe. Whatever happened to defamation suits?

New Voices III

Berkley, $1.95

The three top awards in sf are the Hugo, the Locus Award and the Nebula. Collectively they are science fiction's Triple Crown, and in 1978 Fred Pahl's Gateway won all three. Beyond the Blue Event Horizon is the sequel.

In Gateway, mankind had discovered alien (Heechee) faster-than-light spacecraft. One catch: no one knew how the controls worked. Sure, if you pressed "GO" it would take you somewhere. If you were lucky, the food would hold out. If you weren't lucky, you were dead.

Robinette Broadhead survived three trips, struck it rich and lost the girl he loved. Now he thought he had a chance to rescue her and save a starving Earth, along the way becoming the richest man in history. A lost explorer had stumbled onto a Heechee Food Factory, which could convert comets directly into food. An expedition found the Factory still working. That wasn't all they found.

I didn't breathlessly turn pages, but I kept coming back to Blue Event. I didn't care what happened to his people, although I believed in them. The concepts were intriguing, even grand, but too late in coming. Pohl is a competent, experienced craftsman, worth reading, but Blue Event is not award quality.

Also every year the John W. Campbell Award for Best New Writer is given. New Voices III is a collection of original stories by the 1975 nominees and winner. (There is a substantial lag before book publication.) Fred Pohl is typical of state-of-the-art, these people are signs of things to come, with the notable exceptions of John Varley, already one of our best, and Alan Brennert, equally gifted though not as acclaimed, who recently chose to leave the field.

The stories are fresh and alive; they reach up and claw out your carotid artery while you're not looking. The results are mixed: the inexperience shows, but so does the talent.

Live at the Village Vanguard

MAX GORDON
St. Martin's Press. $12.95

This slim volume (146 pages) is an entertaining account by Gordon, the sole proprietor of New York's oldest jazzclub. Gordon has a way of taking the reader into his confidence as if speaking over a cup of coffee in the Vanguard kitchen during a late night set. Perhaps Gordon is not the sharp-eared scribe that Nat Hentoff makes him out to be in the introduction, but Gordon gets his story across quite well.

Gordon was a failed law student, a seemingly unlikely candidate for entrepreneurship, but he opened a depression-era coffeehouse (the Vanguard) which featured, in turn, Greenwich Village literati, a satirical revue boasting an unknown named Judy Holliday, folksingers Josh White and Leadbelly, comics from Wally Cox to Lenny Bruce. From the early 1950s to the present, Gordon has staunchly adhered to a jazz policy, even though it would have been more financially expedient to book rock groups.

The strongest points of the book are Gordon's discursive word portraits of the artists who have played the Vanguard over the years. The most incisive and interesting chapter deals with the patron/adversary role he was forced to play with Miles Davis. "Don't talk to me like a black man," Davis bullied. "You're a white man and don't forget it." Davis seemingly enjoyed flaunting his accumulated wealth, offering Gordon the services of his tailor, girlfriend or the use of his luxurious whirlpool bath.

By contrast, the chapter on Charles Mingus consists of a kitchen dialogue between Gordon and Mingus' longtime drummer and alter ego Dannie Richmond. We learn more about the politics of Mingus' ghostband, Mingus Dynasty, than we do about the man himself. Stories and rumors are tossed about, recounted more accurately elsewhere.

A final word about truth in advertising: the photo on the dustjacket collages Gordon with an array of celebrities in front of the Vanguard. There are also many photos inside, but several of those pictured are not mentioned in the text, save for captions. To include two pictures of Charlie Parker, who probably never even played the Vanguard, and omit him from the story is less than honest.

IN BOTH EARS

The Phono Cartridge

Of all the components in your hi/fi system, the most improbable, the most unlikely invention of all, is the phono cartridge. Looking like a small, rectangularly shaped box sitting on the end of the tonearm, it is supposed to translate the extremely fine grooves in phono records into clean sparkling sound. Further, the stylus must track these grooves at a speed of more than a thousand feet per minute. And while traveling at this speed, the stylus may wiggle back and forth more than a million times a minute.

While doing all this the stylus jiggles a tiny rod, a cantilever, and this, in turn, moves a magnet, or a coil of wire, or a bit of iron, jiggling them at the same incredible rate. These are the devices, vibrating in the magnetic field supplied by a permanent magnet, that change movement into an equivalent audio electric current.

But that isn't the whole story. The phono cartridge must be able to respond to peak amplitudes of about 0.002" with average amplitudes of less than 0.000002," corresponding to the loudest and softest sounds, and to forces producing accelerations commonly in excess of 1200 times the force of gravity and sometimes greater than 2500 times. Any astronaut subjected to such forces would become a blob of human jelly.

As a final requirement, the stylus must respond uniformly to these changes in amplitude, something that is often called flat frequency response, but which would be more correctly termed uniform amplitude response.

Also, as a crowning insult, the stylus of the phono cartridge must travel in the exact center of the record grooves, yet be immediately responsive to every slight change in that groove, not moving of its own volition, but only in response to the configuration of the groove walls.

The concept of a phono cartridge is bizarre, but the system does work and works well enough for us to enjoy the music supplied by phono records.

Theoretically, the stylus should move only when forced to do so. But there is a law of Nature that a body in motion tries to stay in motion and a body at rest tries to remain that way. The stylus can produce movements not dictated by the groove walls, thus supplying sounds that were never created by an orchestra.

The lower the mass of the stylus tip, the more accurately it will track transient signals which require precision response in the treble range. To reproduce high frequency musical overtones the stylus tip must be tiny so as to make good, firm contact with the high frequency modulations in the grooves. But there is a penalty. The smaller the tip, the greater the pressure it can put on the grooves. The result is that the vinyl can become deformed as the stylus travels through it.

The phono cartridge isn't an isolated component, but must interface with the preamp. There may be a radical change in response when connecting a cartridge to a different preamp because the electrical characteristics of the preamp input—its resistance and capacitance—can vary from one preamp to the next, and not necessarily those of different manufacturers. So while the response of a cartridge may be reasonably flat from 20Hz to 20kHz, it may not be so after the preamp gets a grip on it.

Not only can the preamp behave in a villainous manner, so can the phono record. Records are made of vinyl, an elastic material. So somewhere along the line the vinyl is going to push back against the stylus. If, when listening to a record you note that instruments have a sort of metallic sound, then you are listening to vinyl in action. (Or, perhaps, AC-DC.)

Records aren't perfect, a choice understatement. Manufacturers try to make the pickup cartridge, its headshell and the tonearm as light as possible to avoid sound coloration due to record warp. But you can help too. Clean records with a professional record cleaner, not soap or detergent and water. Keep records in their jackets when not in use. Treat records with an antistatic fluid or use an antistatic mat beneath the disc. Clean the stylus with a stylus brush and follow the manufacturer's instructions in its use. When you put a record on the turntable, push down at the center to make sure the spindle comes completely through the center hole of the disc. Don't play records with the turntable's dustcover in its up position. Follow the manufacturer's recommendations on tracking force.

Finally, the phono cartridge is a delicate mechanism working at a tough job. Don't let the cartridge drop down on the record surface, an action that won't help the cartridge, the phono record or your budget.

BY FRED SETTERBERG

If history occasionally opens a wider door and demands extraordinary participation from ordinary men and women, then the Thirties, the Depression, the "Red Decade" was such a time. Presently, we are experiencing a renewal of interest in the Thirties. Given the dreary state of our economy, the rumors of war, and the bland, compromised, uncomprehending expression of our political leadership, it should come as no surprise that the Thirties are once again emerging as a touchstone for our popular culture. As a nation fixated with the idea of interpreting history through a tapeloop of revolving decades, we stand as more-than-willing subjects for this particular brand of deja vu. We are a people short on long-term memory, though strongly enamored of nostalgia, and we can prove as much by the implausible rise and blather of our major public figures. But amid the prevailing notions about the good old days—notions that for the most part are fraudulent, self-serving, and bi-partisan—there is a more complicated, corrective, and oftentimes ambiguous vision of the Thirties. This is the appraisal of the decade by the extraordinary participants—of which these four books focus upon one particular breed.

Now clearly, these memoirs of Thirties literary life do not provide a man-in-the-streets perspective of the Depression years. (Malcom Cowley relates the ambience of his New Republic office as including "good French cooking" and "deck tennis on Wednesday afternoons.") Nor do we learn much first-hand about the rise of trade unions, radical political movements, nor government reformism. (For these inside accounts, we might turn more profitably to Arthur Schlesinger's The Crisis of the Old Order, Al Richmond's A Long View from the Left, or library copies of New Masses.) Rather, it is the peculiar experience of the middle-class, Left-leaning intellectual that is explored here. Or more to the point—particularly given the special status and influence of the four men who were to become America's leading literary critics and contemporary England's finest essayist—it is the keenly documented journey from personal containment to public commitment, from radical sympathies to political action (and back again) that makes these books interesting and serviceable beyond the narrow pale of literary criticism. "Many writers had the feeling (I more than some others)" admits Cowley, "that we were living in history."

Of course, we all live in history. But what these four volumes seem to be implying is that we also relive history, and the choices that we now find ourselves facing are not so different from those that were grappled with, agonized over, and finally left unresolved by the activists of the 1930s. "I was a literary radical" Alfred Kazin writes of himself in the early Thirties, "indifferent to economics, suspicious of organization, planning, Marxist solemnity and intellectual system-building. . . ." And so, we suspect that Kazin would have been speaking for many of his contemporaries were it not for the bothersome role of history, the intrusion of world events into the writer's plane of purely personal existence.

In the end, it is not so much the story of events that makes these memoirs so valuable, but rather the portrayal of civilization's continuing history of conscience. We are interested here primarily in the quality of choices; we learn how commitments are formed—and then how they are sometimes forgotten. For many of the writers and intellectuals profiled by Cowley, Kazin, and Wilson, or identified with Orwell, it all finally seems to boil down to a matter of simple usefulness: how can an individual, particularly a man of letters, be of some influence in the world? Cowley speaks most perceptively of the "moral qualities that writers had missed in bourgeois Society: the comradeship in struggle, the self-imposed discipline, the ultimate purpose . . . the opportunity for heroism, and human dignity." At last, it is the universal drive towards community, productivity, and compassion that allows us to identify so strongly with the struggles of Cowley and friends. To paraphrase the bearded, 19th century German philosopher who had become so fashionable among the 1930's liberal literary establishment: novelists, playwrights, and poets have interpreted the world, the point now is to change it.

NOWHERE MAN

Backpacking the Desert Trails

BY DON ROBERTS

They cannot scare me with their empty spaces
Between stars—on stars where no human race is.
I have it in me so much nearer home
To scare myself with my own desert places."
Robert Frost

After a l-o-n-g winter the mind starts to warp, turns to dementia and homicidal fantasies. While suppressing a Boris Karloff laugh, one may easily entertain and devise an infinite variety of ways to skin the household cat. Ah, but outside the jonquils and daffodils have already zipped open green skirts to brazenly exhibit their bright-hued sex organs. These innocent blossoms are the tender flags signaling a race—a foot race into the great, gawd-all-Friday I can breathe again, out-of-doors.

Gotta get out . . . exchange blood in the eye for a bootful of blisters. Beyond the ever-closing walls, the sedentary-pedantry, and the self accusing notes taken in Beginning Abnormal Psychology 303 (one must start on a career of perversity somewhere), there is redemption. There is the desert, a fragile void waiting to swallow you down into the entrails of nowhere. Do not fear; there is no timed examination at trail's end.

While evicting spiders from the ol' backpack and absentmindedly priming the suction cups on the ancient, unused snakebite kit, one's mind wanders to the serrated silhouette of a sapphire mountain range. Forget it, Chingachogook. Unless you adore slogging through Sierra cement (wet, packed snow and ice) you must disregard the temptation of getting Rocky Mountain high. Turn the channel on John Denver and tune in on Death Valley Days—replete with 20 Mule Team Borax and, if you're a lucky cowboy patriot, Ronald Reagan.

March, April and May in the U.S. of A. is prime time to trek into an ocean of desolation, the baddest of the bad lands, the gloriously hostile, more than a little dangerous vastness of the Great North American desert.

Think of it this way: by hiking and camping in rigorous desert regions you will automatically avoid the most pervasive threat to cosmic sanity—the crowd, including: thieving bands of hippies, social climbers (photogenic groupies dressed in those revolting Lederhosen), rabid squads of drug-crazed Girl Scouts, overly affectionate, possum-breathed hillbillies, and the inevitable busloads of retirees with cameras sprouting from their sternums. And don't worry about the possibility of boredom. Ask any Bedouin; it is virtually impossible to be lulled and dulled by the desert. Killed, yes, but never bored.

In his lyrical book, Desert Notes, Barry Holstun Lopez comments, "Prepare for the impact of nothing." But don't misconstrue his admonition. Between you and that delicious sense of nothingness (a mental more than physical phenomenon) there exists a deceptive abundance of natural stimuli.

In mountainous regions the intensity of the seasons forces all life into periods of ebb and flow. In the desert, wildlife abounds in constant, symbiotic reticence. The animals are there, but they are shy, retiring, wary—as subtle in their movements as the shimmer of heat waves which hover above the formica landscape. If you approach softly you will eventually intrude upon bobcat, coyotes, rodents of every style and brand name, mule deer, antelope, bats, birds (including the elegant and mystical raven), lizards, snakes, and a host of exotic insects.

At night, with the scent of hellebore and sage pressing against the desert tarmac, you will be serenaded by a chilling cacophony of cries and whispers. It quickly becomes evident that the Hollywood conception of howling coyotes is a ridiculous auditory myth; this discovery alone justifies the trip. Although each melody is different, coyotes never string together a series of extended OW-OOW-OOWWWOOO's, as if being tortured by the German S.S. In reality, coyote songs are more in the Miles Davis school — a beat spirited by broken and desperately comical dissonance, more like the shrill laughter and marrow-piercing squeals of startled school girls.

Not to be Ignored Is COLOR, living, breathing, changeable character in the desert realm. Everywhere one looks the stark brilliance of rock and sky, the raw exposition of minerals, assaults the eye. Nowhere else on earth does the wounded stratosphere hemorrhage so freely at sunset.

It is not for nothing that Madison Avenue advertising agencies airlift everything from refrigerators to Farrah Fawcett into such desert wonderlands as Arches National Monument for surreal film sessions at the apex of a monolith.

Okay, you're talked into it; you're ready to part company with the seemingly sane, the rational, the hopelessly predictable. You are ready to saddle up your Detroit steed and follow the bouncing ball into Gila-land. Go ahead, strap on a chassis, hitchhike if you must, or even straddle a crotch-rocket (motorcycle), but do not forget to extricate your civilized arse from the security of naugahyde once you arrive. An auto keeps you hermetically sealed from the environment, particularly the desert, upon which you must wander and suffer to even begin to "see."

There are, fellow mesa marauders, some practical considerations. First and foremost, unless you prefer traveling in bad company, never go alone. (With the right kind of companion, solitude remains accessible.) If you happen to shatter a kneecap, sit on a cactus, or stick your big toe into a rattlesnake's kisser, it is much more rewarding to panic with a friend. The second important preparatory consideration is the care and maintenance of the most important organ (with the exception of the brain) that the backpacker possesses—the foot, preferably a matching set.

For desert traipsing a pair of high-top tennies is usually preferable to those awesome, heavy-truckin' alpine boots armed with three-inch lugs. But foot fashion tends to be a very personal item which must be chosen to suit the individual's own pedestrian prejudices.

Pre-seasoning the old peds will also spare you loads of both sheer anguish and Dr. Scholl's foot pads. One week prior to departure spend each evening listening to Roy Rogers' hit recording, "Happy Trails," while soaking your feet in a brine solution composed of one part coarse salt to five parts plain ol' tap water.

The following list of provisions will greatly reduce the odds of gambling with your bones.

Essentials for Desert Hiking and Camping

1. Matches in waterproof container. (A Bic lighter, if you don't mind cheating . . . Remember that a "Mojave master" never, never builds a raging inferno. Keep fires small and do not pilfer living vegetation. That scraggly juniper close to camp was a resident when the first Paiute dug for grubs at its base.)

2. High energy food. (Oatmeal, gorp, Twinkies, anything that constitutes a "moveable feast" . . . as Gino Sky points out in Appaloosa Rising, "You know what those birds like to eat? Assholes! Ya see 'em on the highways jumping on the road kills . . . 'n all they eat are the assholes . . . leave the rest for the backpackers. That's what those health food factories make their pemmican out of . . . diesel-flattened rabbits and kangaroo mice. Didja know that?")

3. A compass that works at least 50 percent of the time. (The kind found in Crackerjacks will not suffice.)

4. Map and itinerary. (File your travel plan with a friend, relative, spouse, priest, or the local Mounties. Someone has to get a headstart on the vultures.)

5. Desert wardrobe. (Light-colored clothing that is comfortable and durable. Be prepared for cold nights. And, unless you savor brains flambeau, take a hat with a brim.)

6. A field knife. (Forget the Ché-style guerilla hardware and macho Jim Bowie meat cleavers.)

7. Flashlight and extra batteries.

8. First aid kit. (Plus lip balm and sunscreen potions.)

9. Polarized sunglasses. (It is never a bad idea to carry a spare set of Foster Grants.)

10. WATER and salt tablets. (Remember that water weighs eight pounds per gallon. Figure at least one gallon a day per person. To purify questionable spring water, boil it for 20 minutes.)

While the bag and baggage list is mercifully brief, there is another list, the nasty-numbers-that'll-get-ya list, which the desert backpacker should indelibly etch upon his cortex.

Professor Snakebite's List of Desert No-No's

1. Never set up camp or cut a few Z's in the soft, inviting contours of a gulch. With the approach of a thunderstorm in the mountains or foothills, that domicile in the dirt may become all too transitory, transforming into a roaring spate of mud, boulders, terrestrial debris, landmarks, and small towns.

2. Avoid camping within spittin' distance of a waterhole. All kinds of creepy-crawly critters, including scorpions and black widow spiders, loiter on the premises, waiting to ambush lunch ... each other.

3. Do not counsel forced marches during a full sun. Not even Audie Murphy rode out at high noon. Keep a cool head by hoofing it through the shadows of early morning and evening.

4. Watch out for seep water that contains sulfur, or, gulp, even arsenic. A distinctive, bitter odor will usually press the alert button. Beware, especially, of water that looks pure as a beer commercial. Desert water that is not scummy, thick with balls of algae, and swarming with wriggling minutiae is apt to be the final, eternal thirst quencher.

5. For those who value the esoteric qualities of loneliness—do not stray too near Las Vegas, sheep-droving Basques, nuclear testing sites, or the Mustang Ranch.

Perhaps the least challenging aspect of desert trekking is determining a destination, unless, when confronted by a sundry menu, the sage transient is tormented with indecision. Obviously, the wide, rambling expanses of the Southwest—Arizona, New Mexico, Utah, Nevada, Southern California, and downtown Tijuana—provide a lavish variety of desert landscapes. Found within the Burrito Belt are dozens of state and national parks.

When searching for new places to infest do not ignore the so-called "high deserts" found in the Columbia Basin in eastern Washington, the prairies of southern Idaho, the inhospitable outback of eastern Oregon, and the sun-scorched Sierras of western Nevada.

For information and maps regarding those desert areas accessible to the public, simply write to the Parks Department of whichever state harbors the most attractive vistas. Keep in mind that there are hundreds of out-of-the-way prairies, basins, salt flats, and arid nether-regions which, though rarely publicized, fall within the public domain.

Desert trekking is an addictive form of recreation. Backpacking into harsh and barren seas of sand is not entertainment; it is compulsion. It is the search for more amid extravagant quantities of less. According to Thomas Merton, "With the Desert Fathers you have the characteristics of a clean break with a conventional, accepted social context in order to swim for one's life into an apparently irrational void."

Perhaps no man can be complete without having first tested the terminal strength of his soul set adrift in the desert. &

FOOD & MUSIC & NEW ORLEANS

BY DON SNOWDEN

The Spanish, French, Cajun, black and old southern cultures that shaped New Orleans provided the city with a cosmopolitan flavor uniquely its own. Even the spectre of the Superdome, a concrete monstrosity looming above the downtown business center adjacent to the French Quarter like a nuclear reactor or ICBM silo, doesn't detract from the character.

There are rooming houses in the French Quarter and along St. Charles Avenue (a main drag) at fairly reasonable prices. New Orleans is a favorite convention city so, if you're thinking about renting a car, try to arrange it in advance. Even without wheels, you shouldn't have too much trouble getting around via buses, the St. Charles streetcar, cabs or on foot, since most of the typical tourist attractions — museums, souvenir shops, steamship cruises and horse-drawn carriage tours of the French Quarter — are centered around Jackson Square.

Bourbon Street is a lewd Disneyland for middle-aged tourists. Apart from some hot Dixieland jazz, the most interesting sounds come from the sidewalk spielers — "They got their daddies' names and their mamas' frames" took the best line honors during our visit — trying to lure victims into the clubs.

But, oh yes, you will eat well. Connoisseurs of seafood and spicy table fare will dig into Italian and Creole cuisine as well as local specialties like jambalaya, gumbo, red beans and rice.

The Gumbo House (630 St. Peter St. near Jackson Square) offers a representative taste of New Orleans fare (jambalaya, gumbo, etc.) for $5-6.

Toney's Spaghetti House (212 Bourbon Street) is a functional place that scores 0 for ambience but serves good Italian food in the $4-5 range.

Cafe DuMonde (800 Decatur St. off Jackson Square) is mandatory in the morning for beignets — square doughnuts covered with powdered sugar — and chicory-laced coffee of sufficient strength to blast caffeine junkies into full consciousness with two cups.

Camellia Grill (626 S. Carrollton, off St. Charles) is a counter restaurant serving good short order food — burgers, shakes and a great potato & onion omelette — for $2-4.

Pascal's Manale (1838 Napoleon) is the place to go if you decide to splurge on a $10-12 per person dinner. It's a natives rather than tourists restaurant, you can get by on a button-down shirt and blue jeans and there are no reservations so be prepared to wait for an hour or so.

Speaking of native places, Buster Holmes (721 Burgundy St. in the French Quarter) is a blue collar place that closes around 6:00 p.m. where the most expensive item on the menu is fried shrimp and red beans & rice for $3 (this is April, 1980, mind you). The food is good and you get enough to fill your belly; what more can you ask for?

Everyone automatically associates New Orleans with the Mardi Gras but, on a native friend's recommendation, we checked out the New Orleans Jazz and Heritage Festival. Held over the course of two weeks in April, it's equal parts state fair and music festival featuring everything from gospel and jazz performers to bluesmen and hometown heroes like Fats Domino, Allen Toussaint and the Neville Brothers.

The weekend concerts are held outdoors at the Fair Grounds Race Track where simultaneous musical programs take place on ten different stages; there's no way to absorb everything so buy a program and place your priorities. A number of crafts tents feature a wide assortment of native Louisiana handicrafts, food tents offer everything from jambalaya to goat ribs, and a healthy number of social club marching bands parade New Orleans style.

A special treat is the opportunity to see the Mardi Gras Indian tribes performing their funky, percussive street chants in costume. The tradition started as a homage to the bonds formed between native Americans and runaway blacks during slavery days. The costumes, all vividly colored feathers and plumed headdresses interlaid with ornate sequin and bead designs, are hand-made, and no one wears the same costume two years in a row.

During the week, the concerts shift to half a dozen locales around the city including the SS President, a bona-fide steamship docked at the southern end of Canal Street. Many performers at the weekend shows also play club dates during the week, allowing the opportunity to see someone like zydeco king Clifton Chenier in intimate surroundings.

There are five clubs worth knowing about: Tipitinas (at Napoleon and Tchoupitoulas) has a tremendous jukebox, among other virtues; the Dream Palace is located just off the eastern fringe of the French Quarter; Jed's and Jimmy's are located a couple of blocks apart off the uptown end of St. Charles, as is the Maple Leaf Bar where James Booker, one of the last of New Orleans' brilliant barrelhouse pianists, holds court every Tuesday.

The Figaro, a readily available weekly newspaper, lists New Orleans' current entertainment. Information about the 1981 Jazz & Heritage Festival can be obtained by writing to New Orleans Jazz & Heritage Festival, P.O. Box 2530, New Orleans, Louisiana, 70176. Telephone: (504) 522-4786. &

We made this Pioneer car stereo do a little twisting and shaking before it left our factory. Twisting through temperatures ranging from −22° to 158°F. Shaking 8-100 times a second with forces ranging from 2.9 to 4.4 times normal gravity. Slamming to a sudden 80-G stop from 1760 mph. BEWARE THE EUROPEAN LEECH

Foreign Studies Programs Are Not Always . . . Foreign

BY DEBORAH BAKER

In the spring of her sophomore year in college, a young woman decided to spend a semester of her junior year in France for credit towards her French major. For twice the amount of tuition as a semester at her home university she was accepted into a program sponsored by a respectable American university. When she arrived in France she found herself living in a dormitory of American students and being taught French by American French professors. Instead of being registered as a student of the area university [in this case, the University of Bordeaux], she discovered that the program was linked to an independent organization with no official relationship to the French university. Consequently, she was not allowed access to the university's library and had to depend upon a feeble selection of books from the city library. She returned to the States with only a vague sense of the French educational system and student social life.

Such an experience is not unusual. The increasing number of American students choosing to spend their junior year abroad has brought about a corresponding increase in the number of foreign study programs—many of them hoping to exploit the "rich" American college students, hungry for the experience abroad but naive in their choice of programs.

There are three basic types of foreign study programs. One is sponsored by an American university in an association, that may be real or merely implied, with a British or continental university. The second type is sponsored by a foreign university and aimed explicitly at the American student. The third type of program is linked with a wholly independent organization, either foreign or American, and set up in the locale of a foreign university—frequently with no recognition or authorization from that foreign university.

The quality of a program set up by an American university depends largely upon the commitment of that university to the program. There is a tendency for some universities to "ship students off," entrusting them to the care of "representatives" from foreign universities. There are cases in which the official liaison in the foreign university has little, if any, official status in that academic community. Eminent foreign universities look upon these academic entrepreneurs as leeches, and take steps to prevent unauthorized American students from entering their lecture halls and using their libraries.

On the other hand, European universities less concerned about their academic reputation perceive American students as a ready means of making extra money. Some rent out dormitories at a stiff price to the parent university in the States, and allow limited access to student organizations and facilities. Even this does not always mean the use of libraries or the benefit of foreign faculty instruction, certainly crucial elements of a good foreign study program.

There are, of course, varying degrees of quality among the numerous foreign study programs available to the American student. All of them, however, tend to be very expensive. One way to avoid the prohibitive costs of a foreign study program is to apply directly to the university in the foreign country. Most European universities are public institutions that are heavily subsidized by the government. Thus tuition fees are very low, even if the student is not a citizen of the country.

Naturally this involves a more independent spirit—the flight, living accommodations, field trips and grade transfers will not have been arranged upon arrival. There will be no American community to commiserate over homesickness. Still, the direct experience of a foreign school—its social life and academic standards—will be a far more demanding challenge than traveling under a study program tailored like a tour for retired senior citizens. (Obviously, a confident grasp of the language is necessary to make this approach.) To find out which universities open their registration to non-citizen students, the crucial source of information is the foreign country's embassy in Washington, D.C.

A warning: because many American universities will not accept independent credit from foreign universities, a foreign study program may be the only means of acquiring academic credit if it is needed. In this case, it is necessary to approach the sponsoring academic institution or organization with questions that may not be answered in its brochure. Are courses specially designed for American students (that is, will all one's classmates be Americans)? What are the qualifications and nationalities of the instructors? Does the student have an official relationship with a foreign university? If so, what does this include—library privileges, faculty instruction, membership in student organizations? Cambridge and Oxford, for example, do not accept any foreign undergraduates, independently or in a foreign study program, though there are many summer programs and even year-long programs conducted in their vicinity.

Finally, before even considering a foreign study program it is necessary to evaluate one's academic and personal expectations of a foreign study experience. The questions that students should ask of themselves are as important as the questions asked of the program. What sort of living accommodations would be preferred, family or dormitory? Could the student in a foreign study program strike out from the security of American classmates to make friendships and speak the language of the country? Would the student be happier traveling under the supervision of a knowledgeable superior or guided solely by personal motivations, interests and expense?

Living and studying in a foreign country can be an invaluable experience if one is wise in the selection of a program. Even if one's college or university has its own foreign study programs it is important to compare them with others. Where would one rather be—Paris or Bordeaux? Is it possible to save money for more pleasurable pursuits by arranging one's own flight? How demanding is the program in academic standards? Does it allow for personal initiative, time for travel? Remember: the more someone else takes care of the student in the foreign study program, the more expensive it will be and, perhaps, the less will be gained from the experience.

THE "KEY" TO A GREAT SPRING BREAK

BY ALISON NELSON

It's an annual predicament. As spring break approaches, many college students get the urge to head south. Trouble is, most are short on funds, with parents who think the ideal spring vacation is a week at home with the family. Sunworshippers, take heart: there is a way for students to enjoy a fabulous Florida vacation without running into debt or staying at Aunt Sadie's condominium in Tampa. It's called "camping in Key West."

A mere sixty miles from Cuba, Key West is the southernmost point in the continental United States, the last in a string of tiny islands off the coast of Florida called the "Keys." Key West is rapidly becoming the springtime mecca for college students from Florida to Michigan.

Vacationing in Key West needn't be expensive. Those willing to travel on the "economy plan" (foregoing such luxuries as plane flights and hotel rooms) can have a sensational Key West vacation for as little as $150-$200 per person. Besides traveler's checks, all one needs are summer clothes, sun-tan lotion, a tent and a sleeping bag. Car-owners will be spared the hassles of finding a ride down, but those who are stuck with a gas guzzler may need to find a couple of friends to share expenses.

Once in Key West, most college students on a budget stay at Boyd's Campgrounds. Boyd's is reminiscent of the migrant camps where the Joads stayed in The Grapes of Wrath: the place is rather dumpy-looking, but everyone there is friendly and willing to share food, beer, and a helping hand in putting up a tent. While far from swanky, Boyd's has showers and telephones, and at $6 per night for two people, the price can't be beat. The campground sponsors inexpensive scuba and snorkel lessons, and is located only a short drive from town and the public beaches.

Those who arrive at Boyd's on a Saturday have the best chance of getting a fairly decent campsite: in the shade under some trees, with a small picnic table nearby. The less fortunate will end up out in a large open lot under the blazing sun, camping on something akin to kitty litter. If the campground is temporarily full, the best place to go is not the beach or a public parking lot. The Key West police don't take kindly to college high jinks, and those who camp in unauthorized areas often end up in jail for several days, awaiting bond money from their parents. Fortunately, there are several other campgrounds in the area, all of them slightly farther away from town and the beach.

Except for sleeping, showering, and a couple of campsite cookouts, student campers spend most of their time at the beach or in the downtown area called Old Key West. There the streets are lined with charming boutiques, shops, restaurants, bars, theatres, and art galleries. Those who do have extra money usually spend it here. For those with a weakness for unique and beautiful clothes, Bahama Mamma's on Duvall Street is a must. This boutique features stunning handpainted dresses, skirts, bathing suits, and men's shirts, all originals by proprietor Vaughan Cochran.

One nightly ritual that no one will want to miss is the sunset gathering at Mallory Pier, overlooking the bay. Tourists, students, and townspeople gather to watch the sunset and be entertained by jugglers, mimes, musicians, dancers, and other local characters like the "Iguana Man," a grizzled old fellow renowned for his unusual pets. When the sun finally dips below the horizon, all activity stops and there is a silence, followed by a round of applause.

After the sunset, a favorite before-dinner stop for students is a stand near the pier called Cap'n Conch's for an appetizer of hot and spicy conch fritters at $1.50 per dozen. For a more substantial meal, there are several Cuban restaurants that offer both local color and low prices. Yes, it is possible to replace Big Macs and shakes with Cuban sandwiches, black beans, conch chowder and sangria without blowing an austerity budget. At places like Cacique and Al Mar dinner for two will cost $10 or less. For those who have

MOSEYING AROUND EUROPE... PODNER

BY RICHARD LEVINSON

Ah, Europe, where the river Thames thunders out of the Alps and flows lazily past stately Dutch windmills, where the Eiffel Tower stands vigilantly over the houses of Parliament, where every street corner is filled with boisterous Germans hoisting festive glasses of Ouzo and dancing merrily to the strains of a traditional Flamenco guitar...

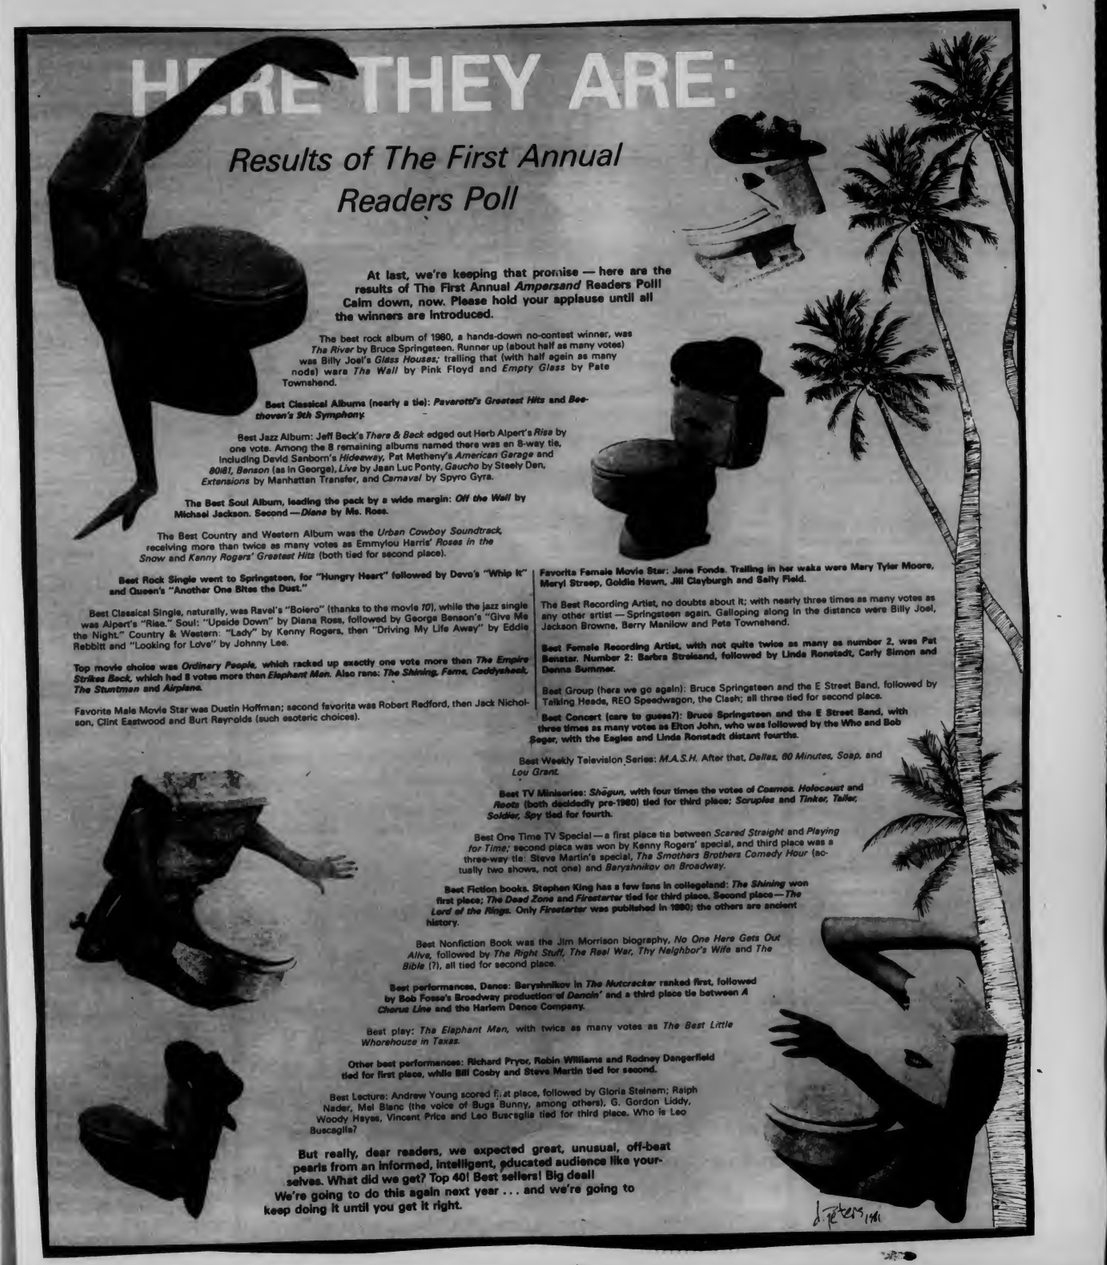
Well, fine, but, being the stylish sort you are, you're also heavily invested in the au so courant cowboy trend. What, you wonder, will the colorful natives think of your tall-in-the-saddle look?

Relax. The place is lousy with cowboys, and if you carry a battered guitar along too, you'll probably be asked for your autograph. (Sign it "Johnny Lee" and get invited to the best parties.) Not only will you score big with the locals as you saunter, legs bowed, down the Champs Elysees, but in at least two major cities, you'll find establishments made just for you.

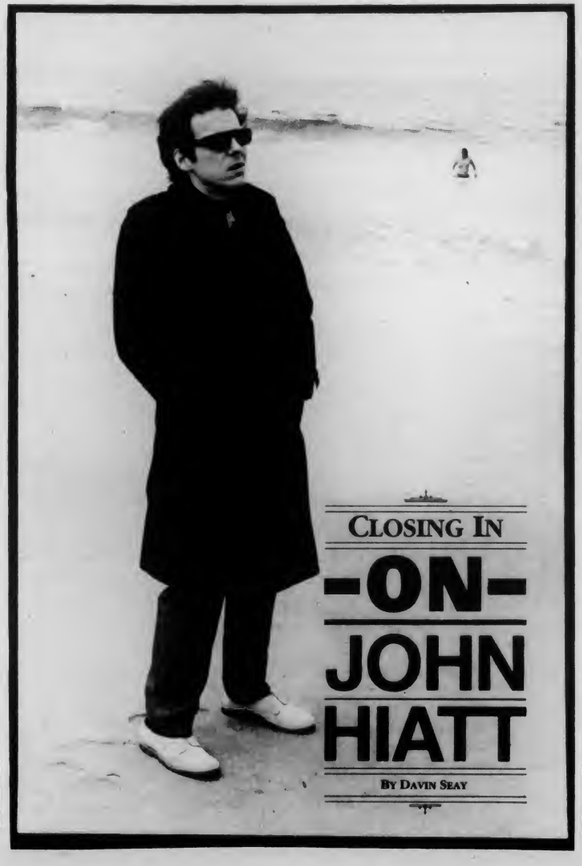
The Studio (41 Rue du Temple, Paris) is an honest-to-gosh Tex/Mex restaurant 6 blocks from Notre Dame. Run by Frank Charat, a French-born Texas-raised entrepreneur, the Studio offers chili at least as good as most urban American restaurants, and a full selection of tortilla dishes. It's also a good place to meet American peer groupers. The address is a very dark alleyway leading to an inner courtyard where the restaurant is located, but don't be put off by the darkness. The Studio is warm and friendly, and on certain nights an American bluegrass band plays later in the evening.

In Amsterdam, The Bronco (1 block from the Amsterdam Sonesta IX hotel in the Centrum) is a full-fledged Urban Cowboy bar complete with live C & W music and a bucking machine. One gets the feeling that it was hastily built to cash in on a current "trend," and will be just as hastily rebuilt to cash in on the next one. No matter. The drinks are real drinks, the waitresses are the most beautiful you'll ever see in a country bar, and while you're eating passable pizza, you can ask someone all the questions about Amsterdam everybody asks. (Sample answers: Yes, you can in some places. Yes, there are lots, at competitive prices.) While there, find out how to get to the Last Water Hole, which is a good deal rougher, but I bet that's where you'll find just what you're looking for, if you catch my waft.

Have a nice trip, and don't worry a bit about the fact that when you get back everybody over here will be wearing Lederhosen, and you won't even be able to get Goodwill to take your now worthless wardrobe off your hands.



HERE THEY ARE:
Results of The First Annual Readers Poll
At last, we're keeping that promise — here are the results of The First Annual Ampersand Readers Poll! Calm down, now. Please hold your applause until all the winners are introduced.
The best rock album of 1980, a hands-down no-contest winner, was The River by Bruce Springsteen. Runner up (about half as many votes) was Billy Joel's Glass Houses; trailing that (with half again as many nods) were The Wall by Pink Floyd and Empty Glass by Pete Townshend.
Best Classical Albums (nearly a tie): Pavarotti's Greatest Hits and Beethoven's 9th Symphony
Best Jazz Album: Jeff Beck's There & Back edged out Herb Alpert's Rise by one vote. Among the 8 remaining albums named there was an 8-way tie, including David Sanborn's Hideaway, Pat Metheny's American Garage and 80/81, Benson (as in George), Live by Jean Luc Ponty, Gaucho by Steely Dan, Extensions by Manhattan Transfer, and Carnaval by Spyro Gyra.
The Best Soul Album, leading the pack by a wide margin: Off the Wall by Michael Jackson. Second — Diana by Ms. Ross.
The Best Country and Western Album was the Urban Cowboy Soundtrack, receiving more than twice as many votes as Emmylou Harris' Roses in the Snow and Kenny Rogers' Greatest Hits (both tied for second place).
Best Rock Single went to Springsteen, for "Hungry Heart" followed by Devo's "Whip It" and Queen's "Another One Bites the Dust."
Best Classical Single, naturally, was Ravel's "Bolero" (thanks to the movie 10), while the jazz single was Alpert's "Rise." Soul: "Upside Down" by Diana Ross, followed by George Benson's "Give Me the Night." Country & Western: "Lady" by Kenny Rogers, then "Driving My Life Away" by Eddie Rebbitt and "Looking for Love" by Johnny Lee.
Top movie choice was Ordinary People, which racked up exactly one vote more then The Empire Strikes Back, which had 8 votes more than Elephant Man. Also runs: The Shining, Fame, Caddyshack, The Stuntman and Airplane.
Favorite Male Movie Star was Dustin Hoffman; second favorite was Robert Redford, then Jack Nicholson, Clint Eastwood and Burt Reynolds (such esoteric choices).
Favorite Female Movie Star: Jane Fonda. Trailing in her wake were Mary Tyler Moore, Meryl Streep, Goldie Hawn, Jill Clayburgh and Sally Field.
The Best Recording Artist, no doubts about it; with nearly three times as many votes as any other artist — Springsteen again. Galloping along in the distance were Billy Joel, Jackson Browne, Barry Manilow and Pete Townshend.
Best Female Recording Artist, with not quite twice as many as number 2, was Pat Benatar. Number 2: Barbra Streisand, followed by Linda Ronstadt, Carly Simon and Donna Summer.
Best Group (here we go again): Bruce Springsteen and the E Street Band, followed by Talking Heads, REO Speedwagon, the Clash; all three tied for second place.
Best Concert (care to guess?): Bruce Springsteen and the E Street Band, with three times as many votes as Elton John, who was followed by the Who and Bob Seger, with the Eagles and Linda Ronstadt distant fourths.
Best Weekly Television Series: M.A.S.H. After that, Dallas, 60 Minutes, Soap, and Lou Grant.
Best TV Miniseries: Shogun, with four times the votes of Cosmos, Holocaust and Roots (both decidedly pre-1980) tied for third place; Scruples and Tinker, Tailor, Soldier, Spy tied for fourth.
Best One Time TV Special — a first place tie between Scared Straight and Playing for Time; second place was won by Kenny Rogers' special, and third place was a three-way tie: Steve Martin's special, The Smothers Brothers Comedy Hour (actually two shows, not one) and Baryshnikov on Broadway.
Best Fiction books. Stephen King has a few fans in collegeland: The Shining won first place; The Dead Zone and Firestarter tied for third place. Second place — The Lord of the Rings. Only Firestarter was published in 1980; the others are ancient history.
Best Nonfiction Book was the Jim Morrison biography, No One Here Gets Out Alive, followed by The Right Stuff, The Real War, Thy Neighbor's Wife and The Bible (?), all tied for second place.
Best performances, Dance: Baryshnikov in The Nutcracker ranked first, followed by Bob Fosse's Broadway production of Dancin' and a third place tie between A Chorus Line and the Harlem Dance Company.
Best play: The Elephant Man, with twice as many votes as The Best Little Whorehouse in Texas.
Other best performances: Richard Pryor, Robin Williams and Rodney Dangerfield tied for first place, while Bill Cosby and Steve Martin tied for second.
Best Lecture: Andrew Young scored first place, followed by Gloria Steinem; Ralph Nader, Mel Blanc (the voice of Bugs Bunny, among others), G. Gordon Liddy, Woody Hayes, Vincent Price and Leo Buscaglia tied for third place. Who is Leo Buscaglia?
But really, dear readers, we expected great, unusual, off-beat pearls from an informed, intelligent, educated audience like yourselves. What did we get? Top 40! Best sellers! Big deal!
We're going to do this again next year . . . and we're going to keep doing it until you get it right.



CLOSING IN -ON- JOHN HIATT

By Davin Seay

John Hiatt takes his time. He's in no rush to bare his soul, despite the comfortable melancholia that's settled over the Santa Monica bar. It's one of those maudlin, three-quarters drunk evenings that invite world-weary philosophizing, all but forgotten by morning's light.

Slight, pale, dressed in a blue windbreaker, jeans and a pair of battered bucks, the 28-year-old Indianapolis native is not so much nervous as intensely wary. The message, couched in some masterful body language, is "not too close." He responds to questions as if they were blows, leaning into them across the table or pulling back in his chair, returning each jab with disdain, bemusement or an ominous scowl. It's all represented in his high forehead and elegantly expressive eyebrows — he's reached a few conclusions in his time, but he's not volunteering a thing.

Nothing, that is, until the waning moments of this precipitous night. Up until now he's been sticking close to the facts and, granted, it's a pretty revealing odyssey. Hiatt first looked the rock & roll beast square in the eye at age eleven.

He played guitar in the obligatory string of Midwestern garage bands, lied about his age to club owners, dreamed the journeyman's dream. It's the same old story with one important difference... Hiatt didn't know how to do anything else. He wasn't holding onto a CPA degree or a job in a rubber plant in case things didn't work out. Hardly. Tucked into the middle of the seven-member Hiatt brood, he took his single option very seriously. He quit high school at 16. At 18 he moved to Nashville.

"It was heaven," he confides, recalling those first two years in Music City. He had landed a $25-a-week staff writing job at Big Tree Publishing, lived in an $11-a-week cold-water flat and subsisted on a diet of hand-rolled cigarettes, baloney and beans. An auspicious start, but the Nashville tenancy proved ultimately a deadend. There was a certain and specific gap between his keyed up, highly personal songs and the prevailing rhinestone aesthetic. Later, of course, all sorts of people figured out he was a hell of a writer. Three Dog Night gleaned a middling hit from "Sure As I'm Sittin' Here." Conway Twitty's cut of "Heavy Tears" was number one country. There were soundtracks, a Movie of the Week score, lots of appreciation from left field, but back in those early days it was strictly, well, baloney and beans.

It was taking a lot of risks, throwing a lot of curves. Nobody knew what to do with my songs," he remarks. Then there was the matter of those two Epic LPs. The fate of Hangin' Around the Observatory and Overcoats, both released in '74, was a crash course in the ritual sacrifice the industry often performs on artists. Both were marked by a lyric whimsy that seems utterly alien to Hiatt's later persona, and both went absolutely nowhere, thanks to a studious lack of support by Epic. His subsequent wandering minstrel period — a year playing coffeehouses and folk clubs in 34 states and most of Canada — was hardly a feast for the ego either. "It was hard for audiences to deal with my kind of emotion." The remark has the ring of classic understatement. The fact was, Hiatt was no more a folkie than a good ol' boy. He had cut his teeth on R&B and what he calls "its white variant" — rock and roll — but it wasn't until he came to Los Angeles in '78 that he got down to the serious business of his destiny.

That year, LA was in the throes of its new wave seizure. The club scene was percolating nicely and the A&R Einsteins were turning up the next big thing every hour on the hour. Enter Hiatt, with a new band and a batch of songs that kicked up lots of attention pronto. A year later he released his first MCA LP, Slug Line, followed by Two Bit Monsters in October of '80.

In retrospect, Hiatt's ascent up the ladder of critical respectability has a sort of astrological inevitability to it. Jaundiced, often cynical, always unsparing, Hiatt's consummate blend of paranoia and purpose came along at just the right time. He was called the American Elvis Costello, a term which did nothing to endear its subject to the rock press, and his MCA output was hailed for pointing out new wave's post-pogo directions.

"It was a unique time," Hiatt admits. "I mean, when a guy like me could make a record and say exactly what I wanted and a company like MCA would put it out with no questions asked. Too bad it didn't work."

Both albums were, in fact, brilliant, with some direct and unembellished rock, reggae and R&B motifs and some breathtakingly risky lyric turns. Cuts like "Madonna Road," "Slug Line" and "Take off Your Uniform" from the first LP and "Back to Normal," "Face the Nation" and "Gap Party" from the second did indeed herald a significant new talent working, at last, in the proper musical setting.

The record buying public couldn't have cared less. After a dismal sales run, Hiatt switched managers, was extricated from the MCA deal and formed a new band. He also did some recording on Ry Cooder's latest, Borderline (featuring the Hiatt original "The Way We Make a Broken Heart"), that resulted in his hiring on as a member of Cooder's road band for a Euro-American tour, winding up in March.

All of which brings him to this particular juncture, in an empty bar, starling moodily at an ashtray full of butts and trying to address some pointed questions about a checkered career and an enigmatic body of work. It's not easy.

"I'm really optimistic," Hiatt has been insisting throughout most of this boozy evening in downtown Santa Monica. It's been a hard statement to support, especially in view of the positively foreboding quality of his music. "That's part of the problem," he parries, "especially with rock critics. They put too much emphasis on lyrics. It started with Dylan and I don't think I'll ever forgive him for it. I think I handle the characters in my songs with a lot of tenderness. If that means pointing out their problems, that's between them and me."

Maybe. Hiatt's positive dread of explaining his music beyond what's lying in the grooves extends to his role as a new wave weathervane. "The new wave didn't do much for me," he says with a shrug. "I mean, there was a big upheaval three years ago, but the lid's back on now — tight. Just listen to the radio. It's Kenny Rogers and Pat Benatar. And the Clash. I know everybody loves that band, but I sure can't figure out why..."

A long silence ensues. What really seems to be eating Hiatt are those constant demands for self revelation, as if he owed something to the press and public.

"I just want to be loved and adored by millions. That's part of my problem," he concedes, watching a patrol car cruise Ocean Avenue. "I mean, if selling records is the point, I'll be a perfect custodian of success. Vote for me and I'll never put out a crummy record. What else do people need to know?"

What else indeed? Well, there's Hiatt's well-publicized discontent with nearly every aspect of his recorded output, in direct contradiction to his no-crummy-product promise. "Let's face it, I'm a slow learner," he counters. "The recording studio process is still a mystery to me, after four albums. I never had enough money or time to do things right. I needed to play with a band that weren't a bunch of dogs on leashes... and where do you find a producer with a gold coke spoon around his neck?"

Abruptly, Hiatt changes tack. Yes, he concedes, he's been surrounded by a "a bunch of assholes" for a long time now, but things are different. It's looking up. He's got some high powered management, a decent group and a lot of lucrative recording offers. (Warner Bros. is a distinct possibility.) He lives in a nice house in the Hollywood Hills with his wife and cat. What could be better?

will all these good times change his music? Is he going to start writing songs about happy, well-adjusted folk instead of ones who die in motorcycle accidents, get old too fast or need desperately to escape?

Exasperation wells beneath those lowering eyebrows. Suddenly, the Critical Interview Moment has been reached. "Why should anyone care what I think?" he snaps. "Sure, everything is corrupt, except maybe my cat. Do they need me to tell them that? I write songs, that's all. I'm not even really a musician. I'm just not. I use the guitar, I don't play it. Rock and roll is a limited form of expression, but I don't object to limitations. So why should other people?"

There's no stopping him now. "If I weren't doing this, I think I could write good short stories. I like John Cheever. Walker Percy. I really like Flannery O'Conner. She wears her Catholicism well. I was raised a Catholic too. It's one of the things I'll eventually have to face in my music."

The sound of the bartender's fingers drumming on mahogany abruptly dissolves the tension. The moment has passed. The interview is over.

"I'm afflicted with guilt," Hiatt says, rising and tossing a handful of change on the table. "Sometimes, I'll do something without thinking and have to live with the consequences for a long time. Like this interview. But that's okay. I appreciate the gnashing."

It seems as close as anyone's going to get to John Hiatt's creative processes. The bartender has moved to the front door, holding it open. Hiatt, hunched against the cold air, is looking for his car keys. It's closing time. &

ON SCREEN

Tess

starring Nastassia Kinski, Peter Firth and Leigh Lawson; written by Gerard Brach, Roman Polanski and John Brownjohn, based on Thomas Hardy's novel Tess of the D'Urbervilles; directed by Polanski.

Tess (Kinski) is a beautiful young late-19th century English countrywoman, poor but proud, whose life is changed forever when her wastrel father learns the family may be connected to the aristocracy—they could be D'Urbervilles, not mere Derbyfields. Tess is sent off to meet, and extract money from, their supposed rich relations; the scion of the manor (not related after all, but a rich family that simply bought the title and land) rapes and keeps Tess until she summons the courage to leave. From that foreboding beginning, Tess trudges stoically through poverty and grinding labor, suffers the birth and death of an illegitimate child, and for a brief summer finds love and happiness and a husband (Firth, in a remarkably restrained performance) before her inevitably tragic end.

Polanski filmed Tess in France, because he feared extradition to this country if he wandered too close to England. He even recreated Stonehenge somewhere in France, and packed German-born Kinski off to live with a Dorsetshire family for a year to learn the proper accent (she didn't, quite). Polanski's landscapes are beautiful, pastoral, but always slightly threatening; he keeps reminding us, in the smallest details, that this story does not have a happy ending—and this makes the few genuinely joyful moments all the more poignant.

One scene in particular has taken root in my mind: when Tess' child (whom she loves in spite of its shameful origins) dies, she is refused the right to bury it in the churchyard. no bastards allowed near the good dead people of the village. At night, in defiance of her vicar, church, and townspeople, she buries the baby in the church cemetery and erects a pathetic little wooden cross.

Kinski, for all her sensuously innocent beauty (her resemblance to the young Ingrid Bergman is downright eerie) never convinced me she really understood Hardy's heroine. Tough and resiliant, stubborn and practical, Tess is a wonderful invention, straightforward and honest in an age when women were expected to be clinging, pious ornaments. Kinski's soulful brown eyes and sad looks are not quiet enough; Tess should have some fire and spirit, too. But while Kinski may not bring enough to the role, she doesn't detract from it.

Polanski frames his actors precisely and emotionally (but never sentimentally). He is a masterful manipulator, a man who never uses a bludgeon when he can casually slip a dagger into our hearts.

Tess may not elicit sobs in the theater, but the sadness lingers after.

Judith Sims

Every Man for Himself

starring Isabelle Huppert, Jacques Dutronc and Nathalie Baye; written by Jean-Claude Carriere and Anne-Marie Miéville; directed by Jean-Luc Godard.

In Every Man for Himself, avant-garde director Jean-Luc Godard (Breathless, Weekend) not surprisingly opts for style and mood rather than plot and characterization, but the film's style is mostly baffling, and its mood, on those occasions when the story is comprehensible, is depressing. It contains enough references to incest and anality to occupy an army of psychiatrists for years, and Godard's stylistic flourishes (stop motion, for example, and sound-track manipulations) are regarded in certain film circles as a cinematic Second Coming, but the only blessing a general audience is likely to find in this idiosyncratic work is its relative brevity (87 minutes). If not for Godard's technical skill and vaunted reputation, the movie might easily be dismissed for obscurity and pretentiousness.

The Dutronc character is blatantly autobiographical: in addition to being a director, his name is Godard, and he is hit by a car (several years ago Jean-Luc Godard had a serious car accident). But like Woody Allen in Stardust Memories, Godard lacks distance from his anger, and he too criticizes, mocks, and alienates his audience. (In a fitful and not altogether successful way, Godard may be trying to demonstrate that in a world full of whores, he alone is pure). Godard may have retreated from the excesses of his Maoist films, but Every Man indicates that he hasn't yet eschewed an essentially solipsistic and self-indulgent approach to moviemaking.

Robert L. Liebman

The Return of the Secaucus Seven

Featuring Mark Arnott, Gordon Clapp, Maggie Cousineau, Adam Lefevre, Bruce MacDonald, Jean Passanante, Maggie Renzi, David Strathairn, and Karen Trott; written and directed by John Sayles.

A handful of old college friends gather for a weekend in smalltown New England. Nothing much happens: a little basketball gets played; several pounds of hamburger are pounded into patties, fried, and then consumed; someone drinks too much and throws up. But no one dies during the course of this film, no critical decisions are made, no ideals forsaken; there's not the stuff of terror nor pity lying about here. What does occur is far more prosaic, far more realistic than the fables and characterizations we are accustomed to seeing on the screen. Again, the actors are all quite ordinary-looking, no more witty nor foolish than you, me, or any of our closest friends. And that is precisely what makes this charming, funny, talky film so irresistible.

Ten years ago, on the road to an anti-war demonstration in Washington, D.C., a small group of young college students, VISTA volunteers and dropouts found themselves waylaid and arrested (charges dropped) in Secaucus, New Jersey; thus, with appropriate self-deprecation, the Secaucus Seven. Now, continuing with their lives, they struggle to make some sense, and some joy, out of a rather different world. They teach high school, go to medical school, work for a liberal Senator, dream of hitting it big on the record charts; none of them, it should be noted, is employed on Wall Street. Their aspirations have leveled-off, or rather, focused upon good friends, good work, love, family, and some measure of justice; they are idealists in a non-heroic fashion, equipped with irony and a prevailing sense of humor. They're good company, familiar and generally admirable in words and actions.

Novelist John Sayles, author of the National Book Award-nominee, Union Dues, has written and directed a marvelous evocation of one generation's shared experience. It's roughly made ($60,000 budget, originally shot in 16 mm.), nicely cast, and beautifully scripted. What's more, the realistic eye of Secaucus Seven reminds us of how truly awful and off-the-mark were all those early Sixties exploitation films à la The Strawberry Statement and Getting Straight. Now, at last, someone has made a film about the post-Counterculture who knows what he's talking about, someone with the wit and skill to hammer it all together.

their hearts set on a romantic island dinner at one of Key West's better restaurants, the Rose Tattoo on Duvall Street offers charming atmosphere and fresh seafood.

Night life in Old Key West ranges from classy discotheques like the Monster to sleazy pool halls complete with strippers, like the Boat Bar. Other favorites of the college crowd include Captain Tony's, Sloppy Joe's, Maynard's and the Bull, all featuring live entertainment. Cover charges vary, and the price for a beer is $1, $2 or more for mixed drinks.

When a bad case of sunburn makes the beach out of the question, Key West offers a variety of interesting and inexpensive tourist attractions. One can tour the exotic house of the late Ernest Hemingway, now inhabited by the 42 cats that the novelist provided for in his will. The Historic Turtle Kraals, a small but fascinating maritime zoo, features a 750-pound loggerhead turtle—the world's largest in captivity—as well as sharks, Florida lobster, conch, sea turtles, and many other varities of fish and marine life, all explained in a lively tour by a marine biologist.

Another interesting place to visit is the Key West Cosmetic Factory, which manufactures and sells all-natural cosmetics, perfumes, and toiletries made with aloe, a tropical plant known for its burn-healing properties. A warning: those who are badly sunburned should beware of this place. From the moment a sunburn victim walks in the door, he or she is assaulted by aggressive salespeople who insist on slathering aloe lotion all over the visitor's body. The stuff does do wonders for a sunburn, but all the attention made me feel like a heel for not buying any of their outrageously expensive products. A single bottle of aloe bubble bath costs $8!

A terrific way to wind up any Florida vacation is to spend a day at Disney World in Orlando. A whole day of fun costs about $25 per person, and even the most sophisticated student will have a blast. Besides, it really helps break up the long ride back to school.

COSTA RICA IS NOT NICARAGUA

BY MANFRED WOLF

Costa Rica may seem somewhat out of the way to students planning their Easter or summer vacation, but several new possibilities for traveling to this little Central American country open up often, from occasional charter flights to low weekday fares on L.A.C.S.A. and other airlines. But however you get there, you should know a few things first:

1. Costa Rica is not Nicaragua. Some tourists have been staying away in the mistaken belief that there's trouble in all of paradise, however, the problems of El Salvador and Guatemala do not affect Costa Rica, which anyway prides itself on being as different from Nicaragua as possible—democratic, peaceful, orderly. Homogeneity has something to do with Costa Rica's oddly non-violent history: the population is almost entirely descended from Spanish and more recent European settlers.

2. Costa Rica is not Mexico. Americans often expect to find the discomforts associated with Mexican travel or the occasional anti-gringo sentiment. Neither of the above. Drink the water, eat the lettuce, and don't bother peeling the tomatoes. On that score—and on others—it's a little like roaming around Europe, especially Spain. A further pleasure is the unabashed enthusiasm for Americans that obtains in Costa Rica—macho here means blond, and a blonde woman is muy macho. Just try peddling that concept in Zacatecas or Torreon or Oaxaca!

Most Costa Ricans live in, and most tourists go to, the San José area, on the lush, cool central plateau. San José is a rather plain modern city in a beautiful setting. Its sights (National Theatre, museums, etc.) are quickly seen, but lesser known excursions out of town are hereby strongly recommended: a bus ride to the old colonial capital of Cartago, or to the university city of Heredia, or to the mountain village of Acosta. Centrally located San José will probably be headquarters, despite rising prices it's possible to find a room for five dollars a day at the Pensión Nizza, on the western end of the Paseo Colón, or at the Pensión Costa Rica, near the Morazán Park, for a little more.

Young travelers wanting to test the warmth of the Costa Ricans should know that discotheques in and around San José welcome singles mainly on week nights. Zeus in the Los Yoses area and Barocco (near the Playboy Club) were favorably mentioned by young Costa Ricans who also said that if they wanted to meet someone of the opposite sex they'd go to a dance hall, e.g., El Gran Parqueo in San Rafael Abajo or Los Molinos in Cartago. It's a measure of the modern influence on Costa Rica that there's even a singles club, Club de Solteros, which is also, strangely, San José's only vegetarian restaurant.

Most vacationers will inevitably be drawn to the spectacular tropical beaches. The Caribbean town of Limón, reached by a famous railroad through mountains and jungle, is very worthwhile but not for swimming. Go south from there to Cahuita for the beach of your dreams. On the Pacific side of the country, a short bus ride from San José, is Puntarenas, which has a fine beach—though the more adventurous folk go to Coco Beach in Guanacaste, Costa Rica's Wild West. This has become a favorite meeting place of the young. At all of these and many others, rent cabinas if luxury hotels aren't for you. Or sleep on one of the country's deserted beaches.

ON TOUR

Wilson Pickett

PRIVATES, NEW YORK

The spotlight of profitability is restless. It landed on Wilson Pickett in New York lately and that's reason to get grateful. Not to the fickle market that buried him in the Seventies, but to the Wicked One, the Midnight Mover himself. Onstage at Leber & Krebs' chandeliered new showcase called Privates, Wicked Pickett was all sex and sugar, confident, blatant, hot-shot and sweet.

And he was timely.

After seven low-visibility years, Pickett showed legitimate cheek to say, "Don't call it a comeback, I never left." In 1978, New York dance club deejays unshelved their Motown, Atlantic, and Muscle Shoals-Fame sides. In 1979 everyone opened a rock lounge with a soul-and-punk playlist. In 1980, James Brown showed Studio 54 the meaning of sequins in that club's last grasp at groove, and suddenly everyone looked for tickets on the new soul train in town. An inconstant limelight? Hell, yes; but Pickett commands it on his own terms.

Pickett showed Privates what a classic is: something with built-in merit that fashion can't dismiss. Cruising onstage like a teardrop Packard, hyped by mock delirium from his well horned band, Pickett did a whole show of greatest hits. Pickett sang like he wanted to hear the old stuff as much as everyone else. No Memorex here: just raw thrust and command.

"In the Midnight Hour." The women — punk hair and all — get visions. "Green Grass." "Everybody Needs Somebody to Love." The man beside me starts making moves. Pickett starts to embody sexual belonging. The females hear him liking women. The men remember confidence and swagger.

"In the wee hours you need somebody to hold real tight," Pickett purrs. No clinical removal. He's not discussing sperm motility and co-itus. "634-5789. I'll be right here at home/All you have to do/is pick up your telephone/and dial 634-5789." Ah, the simple prescription — the love on hand, just make your move, woman; and you know I want it.

In Pickett's presence, the language of sexuality had content. His style was playful, tough, and mildly cynical, but never vacant.

Pickett's vocal mastery, engaged drive, musicianship, and sensuality made a good case here for merging head and body, style and content, meaning and swagger. Rock and roll's giddy planned obsolescence dismisses a half generation every three months but Pickett won't be slagged so easily.

Richard Brautigan

UNIVERSITY OF OREGON, EUGENE

What does a best-selling author do when he has a new book to promote? The usual answer, taking to the road for assorted autograph parties, interviews, and talk-show appearances, may be fine for Judith Krantz, but for a former cult hero like Richard Brautigan, a promotion junket seems a bit on the tacky side. Brautigan's style demands something more dignified, say a lecture tour of college campuses. Reading to students may look classier than mixing it up with Zsa Zsa on the Merv Griffin Show, but the difference turns out to be mostly one of style.

As he was being introduced, Brautigan, resplendent in wrinkled blue jeans and a faded blue shirt, wandered onto the stage smiling beatifically like a giant pixie. He began the evening by giggling with delight at several of his own jokes and ignoring ("I just got off the plane and I can't hear") shouted requests from the audience. After he stared down an early heckler—"farting in the wind" he called the interruption — even his rowdiest admirers lapsed into respectful, if not quite reverent, silence. After offering several dozen readings from his latest book, the Tokyo-Montana Express, Mr. B. accepted an amazing series of questions from the audience. "Are you trying to make a statement?" "Have you ever actually done much trout fishing?" and (so help me, I wouldn't make this up) "Does your mother read your poetry? A few of these stunned Brautigan momentarily, but he endured them all, answering with patience and surprising good humor.

After some nineteen books, Brautigan still seems locked into the persona of the Sixties innocent. "I don't read contemporary fiction," he told one questioner, "just the National Enquirer." His reaction to the 1980 election: "I am apolitical." Somehow, by now all this seems more irresponsible than innocent. This came into focus each time Brautigan stumbled toward incoherence and then used his odd travel itinerary (Tacoma, Washington, to Eugene, by way of Meridian, Mississippi) to excuse the lapse. There was a time when a successful writer who left his Montana ranch for a lecture tour that squeezed too many miles into too few days and short changed his fans as a result would have been the subject, rather than the author, of a wryly wistful Brautigan sketch.

Echo & the Bunnymen

THE LONDON RAINBOW

Multi-colored fog, camouflage and netting smothered the stage. Above, an Arthurian castle flanked with palm trees stretched toward thousands of stars flickering on the ceiling. Welcome to the London Rainbow for Echo and the Bunnymen (and pass the Electric Kool-Aid).

Like the drug-inspired psychedelic bands of the Sixties, the Bunnymen make music for the expanded consciousness. A band to watch and absorb, but not necessarily to dance to, they hinge songs on a remote bass and a wandering, lazily arpeggiating guitar. Solid drumming is the only element that is really upfront.

Fluffy haired singer Ian McCullough affects the profound phrasing of the late Jim Morrison, yet personally resembles a furry animal more than a handsome spoiled poet. Along with deep and formidable vocals, he shares with Morrison a matter-of-life-and-death rock & roll vision, sometimes taken seriously and sometimes mockingly. "I've been in a daze for days," McCullough explains pounds to a galloping beat as "Villiers Terrace" is measured off. "Once I like crying/Twice I like laughter/Come on tell me/What I'm after," he sings in "Read It in Books."

What he and the rest [illegible] Bunnymen are apparently [illegible] form for the impending [illegible] tions of the Sixties. B[illegible] more industrial and v[illegible] than its Sixties psychedelic cousins, but it's nonetheless full of interesting tone color, idealism and moments that will make listeners feel they had too much to dream (last night).

Jeff Hays

James "Blood" Ulmer

THE STONE, SAN FRANCISCO

A capacity crowd arrived at the nondescript North Beach club, most in their early to mid-20s, wearing trendy New Wave garb and pogoing on the tiny dance floor. The only anomaly on the scene was onstage—a 38-year-old black jazz guitarist, James "Blood" Ulmer, just flown in from New York, burly, wearing African garb. He stood nearly still to play, and out came a challenging music at once similar to that of Jimi Hendrix and—in some important respects—freer.

Ulmer first picked up a guitar at age three, became a professional musician at 17, then hit the road for a ten-year stretch as a sideman in all kinds of rock, R&B and jazz outfits.

He eventually hooked up with saxophonist Ornette Coleman, whose composing and playing style (called harmelodic) became a great influence—as is quite evident on Ulmer's two recent solo albums, Tales from Captain Black (which featured Coleman as player and co-producer) and Are You Glad to Be in America?, released last summer on Rough Trade.

At the Stone, Ulmer powered through an hour of music that was as distinctive and rewarding as it was demanding and difficult. Its roots were in jazz, but it branched determinedly into fiery shoots of rock, R&B and, particularly, funk. His charged-up synthesis of various musical forms does not, however, at all resemble the bland stuff most people think of as "fusion."

Ulmer performed with only two sidemen, the brilliant rhythm section of bassist Amin Ali and Calvin Weston, a 19-year-old drumming prodigy. When a number demanded it, Ali and Weston could construct a solid, anonymous rhythm foundation to support Ulmer's cascading guitar runs. But most of his compositions call for more active, prominent participation by bass and drum, which meant Ali and Weston were often laying down a sturdy beat as well as sharing the instrumental forefront with Ulmer.

The set was heavy with turbulent instrumentals. Ulmer mixed things up a bit with the blues-flavored funk number "Jazz Is the Teacher, Funk Is the Preacher" and "Are You Glad to Be in America?," a gliding tune that could probably slip inconspicuously into a Grateful Dead set.

The latter song was also one of the few pieces laced with Ulmer's gruff chant-singing, a strange vocal style that was forceful and convincing, almost in spite of itself.

The Jensen Triax® three-way speaker system.

After Jensen invented the Triaxial® car stereo speaker system, it became the most imitated in the world. Because it was designed with one purpose: Faithful sound reproduction.

A Triax is extremely accurate and distortion free because it not only has a woofer to recreate low tones and a tweeter to capture the highs. A Triax features a midrange speaker to reproduce all those subtle sounds between low and high. The result is remarkable clarity across the entire sound spectrum.

And since Jensen hasn't had to concentrate on duplicating the Triax, we've been able to put all our effort into making it better than ever. Not with gimmicks or gadgets, but with meaningful innovations in the sound.

After studying absorption, reflection, baffle enclosures and the "closed cavity effect," a Jensen Triax interacts with the acoustics of your car for even greater clarity. We've examined road noise, car speed, sound level vs. distortion and the need for higher power handling. And driven the Triax high performance even higher.

But enough.

Come hear a Triax three-way car stereo speaker system.

After all, we know it's not all the technical talk that moves you. It's the sound.

Student Senate to oppose killer game

By KATHLEEN HOWLEY
Collegian Staff

The Coordinating Committee of the Undergraduate Student Senate came out Tuesday against a new game on campus in which students attempt to "assassinate" each other with plastic dart guns.

The committee voted to endorse a letter to the editor which said the game "should not be advertised, sanctioned or tolerated." The letter said the game is amoral and should not be tolerated in an environment already filled with violent crimes.

To play the game called "Killer," students pay $4 and receive a portfolio containing a picture and class schedule of another player. They must then attempt to "assassinate" their target with a plastic gun with three darts.

"It's exciting," said game organizer Stuart Sajdak, 19, a sophomore Business major. "You learn to be stealthy. You have to take back stairs and look before you exit or enter a classroom," he said.

Sajdak said he heard the game was being played on college campuses in other parts of the nation, and decided to promote it at UMass. He said he has decided to form a Recognized Student Organization because he found out he could not run a business from a dormitory room.

"We're in the process of writing a charter and putting it through the student government," Sajdak said. "I know a lot of people will want to get involved in something like this."

Sajdak said he believed the committee is "condemning the game without knowing the facts.

"They've already made the statement and they haven't read or heard anything about it," he said.

Sajdak said he received about 200 telephone calls Tuesday afternoon, the first day the game was advertised in the Collegian.

The rules of the game are: all "kills" must be witnessed and a report signed by an observer; no "kills" are allowed between midnight and 6:00 a.m.; no aiming above the shoulders; players must obey all school, state and federal laws.

Sajdak emphasized that no "hits" would be allowed during class time, "so the faculty won't get on our case."

Ann Ellis, 21, a junior from Brewster, Mass., said that she was excited to be participating in the game.

Participants are required to sign a form releasing the organizers from responsibility for any injuries incurred as a result of the game.

At the end of the list of rules players are admonished: "NOW GET OUT THERE AND KILL!"

Storm Warning

A storm is expected to drop more than six inches of snow on the Amherst area today and tonight.

A winter storm watch has been posted, and calls for light snow beginning this morning, and turning heavier as the day goes on. The storm is expected to continue through tonight, ending sometime tomorrow. Windy weather is also expected tonight and tomorrow.

Senate to include coed issue in SGA elections

By KATHLEEN HOWLEY
Collegian Staff

The Undergraduate Student Senate voted unanimously last night to include a referendum concerning coed bathrooms on the ballots of the Student Government Association elections to be held next week.

The wording of the referendum will be decided by the Governmental Affairs Committee which will meet Friday at 5:30. No decision was made as to whether the Commuter Collective ballots will include the referendum.

Richard LaVoice announced to the senate that UMass will be one of ten colleges in the nation to take part in a student run analysis of financial aid services.

LaVoice said the United States Student Association (USSA) was awarded $60,000 from the Fund to Improve Post Secondary Education, part of the Department of Education in Washington.

According to LaVoice, three full-time staff members of the USSA will work with students hired on the individual campuses to analyze the financial aid process.

"Financial aid being as important as it is now, I think we can improve the services," LaVoice said.

LaVoice said if the financial aid office was made more efficient, part of the money now used for staff and office expenses could go to the students.

The senate elected four senators to a committee to review a motion to recall Michael Cohen, Clerk of Courts, for "abuse of power." The committee will make a non-binding recommendation to the senate.

Senate Speaker Linda Geary called the motion a "sensitive issue" and said the senate will hear a report on it at their next meeting on March 18.

According to the senate constitution, any judge can be recalled by a vote of two thirds of the senate.

The senate voted unanimously to send a telegram to President Reagan asking that federal funds to sent to Atlanta, Ga., to be used in the investigation of the murders of 21 black children there. The telegram said the murders are "systematic of an increasingly racist trend in America."

Problems arise with new D.C. card system

By PAUL BASKEN
Collegian Staff

The Department of Food Services has found a problem with new student identification cards made to be compatible with a new computer system bought for the Dining Commons.

Director of Student Services W. Daniel Fitzpatrick yesterday said the magnetic strip on the backs of some of the I.D. cards is chipping off after being run through the computer readers. The readers are part of a system which, when implemented in September as standard equipment in the D.C.s, will replace the current system of meal books.

Walter Baron and John Rufo of Food Services said the system will read from the card a student I.D. number and display the students meal plan (10, 14, or 19) and the week's remaining meals.

The system was purchased at an initial cost of $50,000 and will cost approximately $5,000 a year to operate, said Rufo. He said the current system costs $17,500 per year including meal books and staffing. Rufo also said a conservative estimate of $12,000 is lost each semester through illegal use of meal books. The new system will eliminate these costs, said Rufo, and will pay for itself in two years.

Fitzpatrick said Avant Inc. of Acton, which manufactured the I.D. cards, said the problem probably only applies to a group of cards manufactured at one time, not to all cards.

Betty Brace, head of the loan and reserve service at the library, said the cards are used there in a similar manner with few problems. She said problems usually arise when students use the cards to open locked doors or similarly misuse them.

The card reader at the library is manufactured by I.B.M., while the reader being tested by the D.C. is manufactured by Burroughs Corp.

Baron said a trial run was conducted yesterday at Berkshire Commons in which the computer correctly read 95 percent of the cards of 129 students.

He said a trial week for the system will be conducted at all D.C.s from April 5-11.

Junta leader pledges amnesty to guerrillas

SAN SALVADOR (AP) — Junta leader Jose Napoleon Duarte said yesterday he is extending his offer of amnesty to anti-junta guerrillas and has ordered the arrest of a retired major who called on the miltary to take over the government.

Gunmen fired six shots at the U.S. Embassy from a speeding car, but no one was injured and Marine guards did not return fire, an embassy spokesman reported. There was no immediate claim of responsibility.

It was the first reported attack on the embassy since the Reagan administration announced a tripling of military aid to the military civilian junta and the provision of 20 advisers to train Salvadoran security forces to deal with the guerrilla insurgency.

Duarte, in an interview with The Associated Press, renewed his plea for up to $300 million in economic aid, vowed he would not tolerate foreign military intervention in the civil crisis and said he has no immediate plans to meet with intermediaries offering to bring an end to the violence.

On Feb. 11, Duarte announced that leftist insurgents who turned themselves in would be given amnesty. Duarte told the Defense wants more funds

WASHINGTON (AP) — Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger asked yesterday for a $32.6 billion surge in the Pentagon's budget as the down payment for a larger navy, a faster bomber and other new weaponry because "the United States cannot allow the military balance to swing further" in favor of Russia.

"I think we've fallen dangerously far behind in a number of vital areas, and I think it essential that we ... do something about this as quickly as we can," Weinberger told the Senate Armed Services Committee.

"We are asking for things that we believe are absolutely essential," he declared.

At the same time, the defense secretary warned that "this is not a one year program for summer soldiers," signaling that the Reagan administration plans a long-term and costly buildup of the nation's conventional and strategic military power.

Taking note of Reagan administration plans for deep cuts in domestic programs, Weinberger told a news conference that "some sacrifices are going to be required" to compensate for essential increases in U.S. military strength.

The administration called for a $6.8 billion addition to the Carter administration's final proposals for this fiscal year, bringing the total to $178 billion for fiscal 1981.

At the same time, it recommended a leap of $25.8 billion in budget authority for fiscal

Labor leader criticizes Reagan economic plan

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland offered Congress some of the harshest criticism so far of President Reagan's economic recovery plan, prompting some congressmen to ask whether he is out of step with the nation's millions of blue collar workers.

"The budget cuts, tax cuts, regulatory cuts and money supply cuts add up to more inflation and more unemployment," Kirkland told the House Budget Committee.

"We do not believe that the nation has been too generous in helping the poor, the disadvantaged and the unemployed," he said, adding, "We believe the administration's proposal is too generous in supporting the wealthy and the powerful."

Rep. Delbert Latta, R-Ohio, the committee's top Republican, said, "I am not surprised by this individual attack on President Reagan's proposals, but I wonder whether you speak for the rank and file members of your unions in doing so."

Rep. W.G. Hefner, D-N.C., asked: "Are we really getting an overall view of what the blue-collar worker is thinking out there?"

Kirkland replied that the AFL-CIO surveyed the opinions of rank and file workers democratically, through local union meetings and conventions.

As the AFL-CIO president addressed the budget panel, four economists debated the Reagan plan before the tax-writing House Ways and Means Committee.

The administration is asking for budget cuts of about $45 billion for 1982 and deeper cuts in the future.

Mozambique expells staffers; claims 'spying for the CIA'

LISBON, Portugal — Mozambique yesterday accused four U.S. Embassy staff members of spying for the CIA and ordered them to leave the country within 48 hours, the Portuguese national news agency ANOP reported.

In Washington, the State Department issued a written statement saying the expulsions resulted from "extraordinary circumstances" involving Cuban officials and private Americans.

The State Department did not say whether any of the expelled diplomats were CIA agents, but claimed several Americans who publish an anti-CIA publication called Covert Action recently had visited Mozambique. It mentioned Louis Wolf, who previously has exposed the identities of American diplomats abroad he claimed were CIA operatives, as one example.

ANOP quoted a dispatch from Mozambique's news service AIM as saying the Marxist government gave the expulsion order to the U.S. charge d'affairs in Maputo, capital of the former Portuguese colony. Diplomatic observers called the expulsions an unexpected setback to what had been seen as steadily improving relations between the United States and Mozambique.

The expulsion order charged four people identified as U.S. Embassy second secretaries Frederick Boyce Lundahl and Louis Leon Ollivier, communications officer Arthur Russel and political officer Patricia Russel with "proven activities of espionage, subversion and interference in the internal affairs of the popular republic of Mozambique," ANOP said.

Republican leaders appeal for citizen police patrols

BOSTON — Two Republican officeholders from Boston have asked the Legislature's Public Safety Committee to advance a bill which would establish citizen police forces in high crime areas.

Sen. William Owens, who filed the bill, said the measure would allow public housing tenant associations and community action agencies in designated areas to sponsor citizen police forces for neighborhood patrols.

He said the citizen police would be unarmed and would be required to undergo training.

Owens said at a hearing yesterday that his proposal would help make up for police cutbacks resulting from the property tax cutting Proposition 2½ law.

Digest

By the Associated Press

Also testifying in favor of the bill was Boston City Councilor John W. Sears.

The Legislature's Energy Committee meanwhile, has given a favorable recommendation to a bill authorizing the state to build an underground petroleum storage facility as a hedge against emergencies.

The measure, which would allow storage space to be sold to private companies, authorizes bonding of up to $100 million to construct the facility.

Condemned murderer opposes his own clemency appeal

INDIANAPOLIS — The American Civil Liberties Union appealed yesterday for clemency for condemned murderer Steven T. Judy, but Judy himself opposed the request and the governor said he did not plan to halt next Monday's electrocution.

The ACLU and 10 Indiana religious leaders filed a petition with Gov. Robert D. Orr and the state Clemency Commission seeking a delay in the execution and a gubernatorial commutation of the death sentence to life in prison.

But Orr said there was "no reason under the sun" for him to stay the execution, which he expected to proceed as scheduled before sunrise Monday at the state prison at Michigan City.

He said he was not sure the petition was valid, adding "it is fairly clear Steven Judy does not wish them to file this petition."

Conn. statehouse committee kills casino building effort

HARTFORD, Conn. — Casino gambling lost its bet in Connecticut yesterday, as the legislature's Public Safety Committee voted unanimously to kill an effort to legalize it.

"I think we have a sufficient number of gambling facilities now," said Rep. Dominick Swieszkowski, D-New Britain and committee co-chairman, after making the motion to ax the bill.

"I don't think social life in Connecticut would improve" if a casino opened in Bridgeport, he said.

Rep. Alfred J. Onorato, D-New Haven, agreed, saying, 'I don't think we're ready for it yet."

While supporters viewed it as a potential revenue bonanza for state government, opponents warned that casino gambling was a magnet for organized crime.

The bill's sponsor, Rep. John H. Murphy, D-Bridgeport and a committee member, said he was detained and did not get to the meeting in time to support the measure.

He said, however, that he had anticipated the committee's negative vote and added that he would "put the bill back in next year."

The bill was intended to open the way for construction of an $80 million casino hotel in Bridgeort, 35 miles northeast of New York City.

Last week the committee decided against studying the impact of legalized casino gambling in Connecticut. It also approved and sent to the Senate a bill that would extend for another two years a ban on all new gambling facilities in the state.

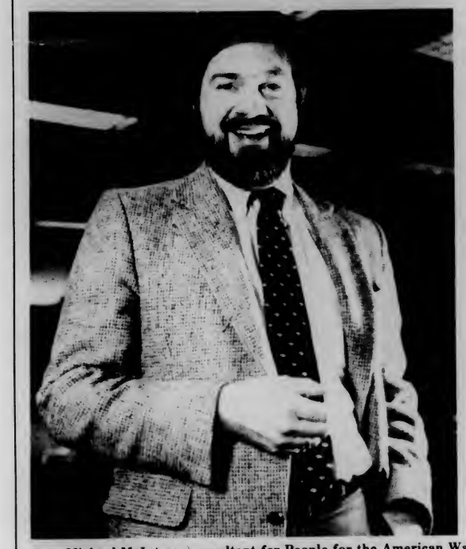
Group raps Moral Majority



Rev. Michael McIntyre, consultant for People for the American Way.

By MARK L. CURELOP
Collegian Staff

People for the American Way, a group formed as an offensive against the Moral Majority is producing television commercials to combat the negative campaigning of Moral Majority supported candidates.

The commercials are not directed against the candidate, but are intended to make the viewer think, said Rev. Michael McIntyre, a consultant for People for the American Way.

The Moral Majority, a coalition of fundamentalists that gained national attention last month when it announced a $3 million anti-homosexual campaign, has become actively involved in national politics and is considered to be a growing movement.

McIntyre said the Moral Majority sponsored commercials during the 1980 Idaho primaries that depicted the incumbent as a "baby killer" because of his support for abortion. McIntyre said the commercials were made before the candidate had even been chosen.

"All the Moral Majority had to do was wave the flag, smile, and support apple pie. The voter would automatically remember the incumbent as bad," McIntyre said.

People for the American Way was formed in 1979 by television producer Norman Lear while he was filming a satirical movie about religion in America.

McIntyre said the group is working on several commercials that it hopes will counteract the Moral Majority's work. The "American Way" is choice, and this is what the group is advocating through its commercials, he said.

McIntyre emphasized that People for the American Way is a separate organization from American Common Sense, which was formed by former South Dakota Sen. George McGovern after he was defeated in hid bid for re-election last fall. The Moral Majority is considered largely responsible for engineering McGovern's defeat.

> 'All the Moral Majority had to do was wave the flag, smile, and support apple pie. The voter would automatically remember the incumbent as bad.'
> —Rev. Michael McIntyre, consultant for People for the American Way

"We're handling the media, and McGovern's group is handling the grass roots. We're fighting the media with the media," McIntyre said.

McIntyre said the average Moral Majority member comes from lower middle class families.

"The irony is that the lower class is providing the upper class with money that the wealthy will benefit by," he said.

Professor tries to save Indian language

By PAUL GUEST
Collegian Correspondent

Zdenek Salzmann, a UMass professor of anthropology, is producing a way to save the Arapaho Indian language from extinction.

Salzmann devised an alphabet of 17 characters to represent individual sounds of this Wyoming tribe. (The character B, for example, symbolizes the sound of B as in boy. The character T symbolizes the sound of T as in toy. The Arapaho word betee (beta) means heart.)

"I think this is very important because if a group loses their language, it loses one of the most important badges of ethnic pride and identity," said Salzmann.

"The young, who are losing it, will be able to refer and maintain their cultural heritage."

The Arapaho culture was based on the hunt of the buffalo, but since that is no longer possible the culture has deteriorated.

He also said that if the language is lost, there would be problems of adjusting for the younger people, which could lead to alcoholism and possibly suicidal tendencies of some. The elderly people of the tribe still speak the language, but the youngsters were not picking it up, Salzmann said.

For the past two years Salzmann has conducted workshops at the Wind River Indian Reservation in Wyoming, where he prepared language materials for the teaching of Arapaho high school students. This material consisted of Arapaho Indian tales in both Arapaho and English so they could be compared.

"One must have a fairly good training in linguistics, phonetics, morphology, and syntax," said Salzmann in order to overcome the difficulty involved in constructing an alphabet and writing system.

In another half-year, Salzmann plans a dictionary for the people. This requires him to check with the members of the tribe in order to have agreement on the meanings and proper usage of the words.

Aside from the dictionary, in two years Salzmann plans to have an exchange of Arapaho students and instructors to do graduate work at UMass if the funding is available.

Salzmann, who received his Ph.D. from Indiana University at Bloomington, originally was involved with the Arapaho Indians while doing his doctoral dissertation in 1949. He decided on this particular group because so little was known about them.

Then, 30 years later, he was asked to attend a National Bi-lingual Materials Development Center meeting in Anchorage, Alaska, to help save the language. At the meeting there was also members of the tribe attending. Without Salzmann's effort, saving the language would not have been possible.

Central elects president

Residents of the Central Residential Area last night elected Steven Robinson, of 423 Van Meter North, as the new president of their area government.

Al Resnic, co-chair of the Central election committee, said Robinson, who ran for the office uncontested, received 266 votes, out of 351 ballots cast.

In the vice-president's race, Paul Domey, of Baker Dormitory, received 213 votes, to defeat Paul Garofoli of Van Meter North. Garofoli received 128 votes, Resnic said.

Lisa Burdan, of Van Meter North, was elected treasurer, receiving 266 votes in the uncontested race.

Resnic said the 351 ballots cast represent about 15.8 percent of the Central population. Balloting was held all day yesterday in Franklin Dining Commons.

"I would say it was a pretty good turnout," Resnic said, adding that as many as 25 percent of the population voted in some dormitories.

Resnic said Robinson, the former area vice president, had been serving as acting president for several weeks, following the resignation of former president Paul Washburn.

Resnic also said the Central Area Government is involved in many dormitory issues, and finances events, including the annual Orchard Hill-Central Area spring concert.

Larceny incidents mount; no suspects being held

A bicycle valued at $275 was reported stolen from the basement of Van Meter residence hall in the Central Residential Area where it was locked, University of Massachusetts police said. There are no suspects in the incident.

In another incident personal possessions valued at $200 were reported stolen from the North Physical Education (NOPE) building locker near the weight room, police said. Clothes, keys, a wallet, a meal book, and a watch were among the items reported stolen. There are no suspects in the incident police said.

Electrician's tools and pouch valued at $175 were reported stolen from the 5th floor of Graduate Research Tower A yesterday at 1:06 p.m. police said. A repairman apparently set the tools down for a moment, they were missing when he returned, police said. There are no suspects in the incident.

Police said a laboratory kit valued at $20 was stolen from a cabinet in Goessman Laboratory. Access was apparently gained through an open window, police said.

Groups participate in space-related studies conference

University of Massachusetts and Boston chapters of the L-5 Society, the oldest citizen sponsored space interest group in the United States, participated in a space studies conference last weekend, along with TEME (Totally Enclosed Modular Environment), an academic program at Greenfield Community College.

The L-5 Society, a national group with a membership of about 5,000, publicizes, encourages and supports mankind's move into space.

Project TEME, established in 1979, combines computer-integrated simulations and other experiential learning activities in the study of human ecology and futures of society. A five-phase program resulting in a 72 hour simulated space shuttle orbiter flight will take place this spring with a life-off date scheduled for April 25.

Students are now registering as prospective crew members and will participate in an orientation, March 10 and 11. Intensive training workshops are planned for later in March and April.

Foam will be flying tonight as Grayson holds 'froth-off'

The foam will be flying tonight as the winners of the frothing contest compete in a "froth-off" at Grayson Dormitory in Orchard Hill.

Semi-finalists were chosen from each of the 12 corridors in a contest held Monday through Wednesday, and will assemble Thursday at 11 p.m. in the main lounge beneath a poster declaring Grayson as "Home of the Future Frothing Champ."

They will line up in front of five judges with toothbrush, toothpaste, towel and fluid of their choice at hand. With these supplies students must produce as much foam as possible in 60 seconds, but cannot add anything else to their mouths once they begin.

The floors will be covered with a parachute-like material. As Bizarre Entertainment Committee Chairman Sarir Khamsi, a 21-year old junior electrical engineering major from Westboro said, "It gets pretty wild and the foam goes flying."

Khamsi said that students look like they have rabies, but for their efforts the grand prize is $10 and a tube of toothpaste.

"I expect about 120 students to show up. The dorm really gets into it and they cheer their floors on. It's so funny, I couldn't stop laughing," Khamsi said.

Video Center to conduct art production contest

The Union Video Center at the University of Massachusetts is conducting a competition of video art production as part of a video art festival to be held on campus April 9-11.

The festival and competition, sponsored by the UMass Arts Council, is open to both students and non-students in three categories: narrative, documentary and avant garde. A first prize of $75 and a runner up prize of $25 will be awarded for each category.

Entries must be accompanied by an application form and be received by UVC by March 27. More information is available from UVC, 216 Student Union Building, at 545-1336.

Assurance of rights sought

By STACEY B. KAGAN
Collegian Correspondent

A group at the University of Massachusetts is fighting to defeat the Human Life Bill and ensure reproductive freedom for women.

The Coalition for Equal Rights and Reproductive Freedom (CERRF), which organized last semester, will hold its next meeting Tuesday March 10, in Room 802 CC at 7 p.m.

The group's current project is internal education, or learning more about themselves and their goals as a team. Working with the Radical Student Union, the group is currently attempting to set objectives for itself and discover its directions, according to Tildy Turchinetz, a member of CERRF.

"As a first step," Turchinetz said, "we have to educate ourselves." The group's first meeting addressed this problem. "We want to...learn more about the attacks that are coming down on women concerning reproductive freedom and see what we can do about them," Turchinetz said.

Plans for this semester include work and discussion on defeating the Human Life Bill aimed at nullifying the 1973 Supreme Court decision legalizing abortion. They are organizing a petition to protect reproductive rights and will be circulating in the dormitories to obtain signatures for this petition. A CERRF table will be set up on the concourse at the Campus Center later this month.

CERRF members will be attending a National Network Conference for Reproductive Rights later this month. At this conference, they plan to take action state wide or nationally to defeat the state in nullifying the legalization of abortion.

Approximately 25 members of CERRF, including both men and women, operate on a non hierarchial system. Group funds are raised by selling buttons, accepting donations and sponsoring guest speakers.

Different levels of associates use their diverse educations to write and publish pamphlets. This literature expresses the problems women encounter such as racism, sexism, and the anti-abortion Hyde Ammendment to the U.S. Constitution.

The group has already worked on debates concerning abortion, and has constructed a petition to prevent the U.S. Legislature from restricting freedom of reproductive choice.

CERRF sponsored guest speaker Nancy Gertner last semester who spoke on the Doyle-Flynn Bill. This bill would cut off state funded abortions. Gertner overturned the law and succeeded in achieving state funded abortions.

When questioned about the conservative trend in America, Linda Cohen, a member of CERRF, replied, "We are a single issue group against the attacks women are facing as far as equal rights are concerned. We too, are members of society."

National recognition sought

Women's Day legislation filed

By LILLIAN SINGER
Collegian Staff

A bill to recognize International Women's Day was introduced to the U.S. Congress last month under the direction of Congresswoman Barbara Mikulski, who now awaits its presentation to the House of Representatives.

Originally brought forward on February 27 of last year by the 96th Congress, the bill, having fallen short of 40 co-sponsors, was rejected. The bill was reintroduced to the 97th Congress February 4, and 50 more benefactors are needed as of now to fulfill the quota of 220.

"We presently have 170 co-sponsors and need the additional 50 by Thursday (today)," said Carolyn Head, organizer of the bill. "If we get them, the proposal will then go through to the floor," she said.

Head said quite a few co-sponsors for the bill are from Massachusetts. Representatives Conte, Boland, Frank, Shannon, Mavroulous, Markey, Moakley, Heckler, and Donnelly are among the 170.

Mikulski, a democrat from Baltimore, Maryland, has been working for issues concerning women since her start in Congress in 1976. She is also involved in energy and commerce and serves on both the Health and Environment and the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committees.

International Women's Day has been celebrated internationally, as its name implies, since 1911. It has not, however, been unanimously acknowledged as a pertinent day of the year. This is something acceptance of the proposal will change, according to Head.

"We hope that passage of the bill will make the public more aware of the woman's role and make the woman more aware that she is being recognized and appreciated," said Head.

State Rep. Creedon appointed as Ways and Means chairman

Associated Press

BOSTON — Rep. Michael C. Creedon, a member of a prominent Brockton political clan and a Harvard graduate, was appointed chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee yesterday.

The four term Democrat, considered more conservative than his brother Robert, who preceded him in the Legislature, was named to the powerful post by Speaker Thomas W. McGee.

Robert Creedon was in the House for two terms and lost a try for the Senate by 86 votes — to Anna P. Buckley, the senator since that time — in the 1972 Democratic primary.

Creedon succeeds Rep. John J. Finnegan, D-Boston, who resigned to become state auditor, an office he assumed Tuesday.

Rep. James G. Collins, D-Amherst, was considered by many to be a strong candidate for the Ways and Means committee chairmanship, said he was looking forward to working with Creedon in a positive manner on behalf of the University of Massachusetts.

Our main challenge this year in the legislature is to positively realize the desire of the people in this state for tax reform," Collins said. "If we fail to meet that challenge, it may result in level funding for the University for the coming fiscal year."

Richard LaVoice, co-president of the UMass Student Government Association, said he feels Finnegan exerts a strong influence over Creedon, and that a better choice for the chairmanship of the committee could have been made.

Kenneth Moore, chairman of the Undergraduate Student Senate's Public Policy Committee, said he was not surprised at Creedon's appointment to Ways and Means chair.

"Our job at this point is to work with him as best we can," Moore said.

You haven't lived until you've seen Wendy O. Williams, barely clothed, cut a guitar in half with a chain saw. But fear not because your chance has arrived. For merely $6.00 you can see the Plasmatics Saturday at Stage West in Hartford. You'll hate yourself Sunday morning if you let this show go by.

If your not a big porn rock fan, don't worry because there is a diverse line-up of entertainment in the valley this weekend.

Gil Scott-Herron will be in the Rusty Nail Friday night. It should be a good one.

The Blue Wall has a full weekend planned as swing band Widespread Depression comes in Friday and Boston's Private Lightning performs Saturday.

Private Lightning has an album on A&M Records, and they had two songs ("Song of The Kite" and "Physical Speed") which received substantial FM air play last summer. It should be worth your $2.00 to see them.

Bands from Boston will be well represented in the valley this week. Along with Private Lightning at the Wall, Pastiche will be in the Nail Saturday, and The Fools will be at Hangar One Friday for the foolish cover of $5.00.

If you were hoping to see Liv Taylor Saturday at the Nail, forget it. He has been postponed till April.

In case you haven't heard, Santana has been signed for spring concert, or community day, or whatever you want to call it.

Next week Steve Forbert and the Neighborhoods will be at the Nail and up-coming shows at Hangar One include Robin Lane and the Elevators.

Lastly, if anyone cares, REO Speedwagon will be at the Springfield Civic Center next weekend (oh boy).

Foot-loose couples prepare for marathon

By JEAN ZIMMER
Collegian Correspondent

With their eyes set on the $500 first prize, couples are gearing up all over the University of Massachusetts campus to "Dance the Night Away" in the second annual Multiple Sclerosis Dance Marathon.

The 29-hour event is scheduled to begin Friday at 9 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom under the joint sponsorship of the Pi Kappa Alpha fraternity and WCCC radio.

"It says something good about us," said Matthew Knotoff, marathon co-chairman. "There's a negative image on campus toward fraternities. We're trying to dispel that," he said.

This is Pi Kappa Alpha's major fundraiser, said publicity chairman John Moran. Twenty-six of the 34 couples participating in last year's 48-hour marathon completed the event which yielded $12,000 for the National Multiple Sclerosis Society.

Stephen Sandler and Betsy Lahitine, both UMass students, danced their way to second place in the 1980 competition.

"We started out cocky as hell knowing we were going to win," Sandler said. "After we were half way through the feet started getting a little heavier, and by the end we were exhausted. But the prize money was close in hand and we felt that by dancing in this marathon we could help those less fortunate than us, so we managed to make it through to the last closing moments."

"The best thing I can say is the really, really good feeling you have afterwards, and we hope the students this semester can double the amount of dances and money raised for MS," Sandler said.

The fraternity's goal this yaer is $25,000 and to get at least 50 couples to compete, Moran said.

The Paper Dolls, a local group, is volunteering their musical talents for the contest, and a WCCC sound system will provide music for the remainder of the event.

Non-participants are welcome to come and watch the event and cheer their favorite couple on for a $1 cover charge, Moran said.

In addition to cash prizes of $500, $300, and $200, a number of local establishements have donated supllemental awards, such as free dinners and ski passes.

Two emergency medical technicians will be on hand at all times to monitor blood pressure and fatigue of participants even though last year the only problems they had were sore knees and ankles, Kontoff said.

Fifteen-minute rest breaks will take place every two hours and 30-minute meal breaks featuring food donated by local grocery stores including spaghetti Friday night and eggs and deli-type sandwiches on Saturday. Snacks will also be available for participants throughout the event.

"It's a lot of fun," said Kontoff. "You meet new people . . . Everybody wins something."

Prospective entrants may sign up outside of the Hatch in the Student Union or by calling the Pi Kappa Alpha fraternity. A $5 entry fee will be refunded to all couples completing the marathon.

Doctor Barbara Kerewsky-Halpern — UMass anthropology professor stricken with multiple sclerosis.

MS stricken woman finds new dignity in helping others

By CAROL PHILLIPS
Special to the Collegian

Dr. Barbara Kerewsky-Halpern, assistant professor of anthropology at the University of Massachusetts, experienced a variety of unexplainable sensations, muscle weakness and balance problems while on an anthropological field study in Yugoslavia in 1962.

In 1976, she rapidly lost control of her body, and within two days was hospitalized. At first her condition was considered an allergic reaction, but she quickly lost all sensation, speech, the ability to move her arms and legs and became incontinent.

This continued until Kerewsky-Halpern became a total care patient. Following numerous tests, she was told she had multiple sclerosis. The doctors advised her to accept the situation.

'My sense of self was diminished and I could see the fear in the eyes of my family and the damning trauma to their mental state and to the well-being and cohesiveness of our family," Kerewsky-Halpern said.

This story exemplifies a unique aspect of multiple sclerosis (MS): it comes and it goes. MS, a mysterious disease of the central nervous system which usually strikes young adults between the ages of 20 and 40, is a chronic disorder.

Although it is not hereditary, fatal or contagious, the cause of MS is still undetermined. There are an estimated half million people in the United States suffering from multiple sclerosis and related disorders. It is often, but not always, disabling.

MS varies tremendously from patient to patient in its symptoms, severity and course depending on the area of the nervous system affected.

People stricken may suffer from one or more of the following: weakness, tingling, numbness, impaired sensation, lack of coordination, disturbances in equilibrium, double vision, involuntary rapid movement of the eyes, slurred speech, tremors, stiffness or spasticity, weakness of limbs, and in more severe cases, paralysis of the extremities or impaired bladder and bowel function.

"My sense of self was diminished and I could see the fear in the eyes of my family and the damning trauma to their mental state and to the well-being and cohesiveness of our family," Kerewsky-Halpern said.

Finally, one afternoon when she was lying in her bed in the hospital, her six year old daughter asked, "Am I going to have YOU for a mother for the rest of my life?" Though unable to speak, Kerewsky-Halpern said she thought to herself, "By God, not if I can help it!" She said she knew then that if she was going to lick MS, she had to take charge of her life.

Through the utilization of what control she had over her eyes, Kerewsky-Halpern said she began to push beyond the normal limits and experimented with what worked.

With her eyes she followed the nurse out of the room, and one day, she heard her hair scratching on the pillow. She said she knew her head was moving, and slowly she began to work on head control and the patterns of movement.

For over two months Kerewsky-Halpern had lived as a physical vegetable. She said she quickly realized the need to be on her own turf and returned home.

Once at home, she started moving along the floor in reptilian and amphibian type movements. Then she began to crawl and slowly moved through the normal patterns of development.

Kerewsky Halpern rehabilitated herself and "still gets everything done." She walks now, doesn't run, and said she has a new focus and a new dignity. She knows and understands that she needs space for herself, and said she feels that as a result of multiple sclerosis and dealing with it, her life is fuller and more balanced.

Besides her active academic life in neurolinguistics and medical anthropology, Kerewsky Halpern works as a therapist with individuals who have neuromuscular disorders.

"Lately, people have reached out to me for help...perhaps I was meant to be a healer," she said.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Playing the First Amendment with an eye to the stands

Editor's note: This column is in response to numerous requests by Collegian readers for an explanation of the opinion-editorial section's content.

Mary people's opinions on a broad range of issues are published in this, the editorial section of the Collegian. the editorial (executive) editor is responsible for setting the boundaries of debate within certain limits of knowledge and reason, because discussions cannot proceed where illogic, misinformation and emotionalism are not excluded.

That much is obvious. Less evident is how these boundaries are determined.

All newspaper editors make the distinction between a publishable opinion and one that is not in their selection of columnists, guest writers and letters, as well as in their editorials. This does not mean editors do not publish views with which they disagree; to the contrary, editors in general go out of their way to rub one writer against another to keep the opinion-editorial pages aglow with "robust debate." Thus they fulfill their sense that a "free marketplace of ideas," afforded by the First Amendment, thrives within the paper itself, subordinate to the vast bazaar of opinion exchange which the media supposedly comprise.

But similarly to the way a referee's idea of fair play may differ from that of the players and fans, the editor's sense of fairness may not coincide with that of her contributors and readers.

The referee's and editor's positions are analogous except for one major difference: in sports the rules are explicit, only in the subjectiveness of the referee's perceptions is there room for discretion. In newspapers, the referee must make judgments based on implicit codes, to which she can give any degree of recognition depending on her real and perceived sympathies or antipathies for the society that shapes a suggestion of journalistic ethic.

I will not argue whether it is good or bad that the ethics of journalism that editors follow or reject is a product of the economy and polity in which their newspapers exist; it simply is. Sometimes the ideologies and normative tastes and prejudices of a society are bad for some people's health, and in those instances the alliance of popular and journalistic understanding seems wanting.

For example, during World War Two, American newspapers virtually dismissed confirmed reports of Nazi concentration camps and gas chambers as "exaggerated" or "preposterous," even though foreign journalists had witnessed them early in the war.

This was probably because newspaper editors had a hard time conceptualizing extermination on the scale that was being reported. And keeping to the prevailing American sentiment toward Jews at that time, editors found little reason to moderate their skepticism. Not until after the war when the survivors of the six million Jews killed were liberated did the American press acknowledge what the Nazis had done.

That was an instance where news selection was affected. The same principle holds for opinion as well.

For instance, the issue of the Vietnam War was kept on the opinion-editorial pages of the New York Times to a debate between "Hawks" and "Doves." Guest and letter writers were allowed to discuss the value and morality of the war from essentially two positions: the war was worth all the killing because it was for a good cause and could be won, or it could not be won and so the killing was in vain.

Writers of the opinion that the winnability of the war was irrelevant, that the United States had no business being in Vietnam (that the U.S. had no interest in protecting the Vietnamese from brutality and authoritarianism, but instead sought to enforce them) were not permitted to take part in the debate — their writing was rejected as "illogic," "misinformation" or "emotionalism."

What an editor chooses to believe and accept as fact or worthy opinion, then, has a lot to do with her ideology, tastes and prejudices, which are shaped by society.

Problems emerge where journalists begin to think their ethic is something more than a reflection of the more pervasive elements of society, that it is based on some ideologically inert understanding of whose facts and ideas are worthy per standards of logic, factual accuracy and emotional detachment: objectivity.

The idea that journalists are not Pure Spirits who live off air and the desire for all people to know each other's thoughts and deeds is offensive at the root of the myth of First Amendment thinking. Actually, the journalist's sense of fairness is not more or less precise than anyone else's. For the vague form of journalistic ethic is molded well outside the realm of professional journalism, in the same church where all ideas are blessed or banished. Facts and opinions that make some sort of sense ot editors and published, annointed with "objectivity." (Readers may note that objectivity is used here as a term in relation to both news and opinion. this is because newspapers do not, in practice, seem to distinguish between the two, so neither shall I.)

Newspaper editors cannot honestly claim economic and ideologic neutrality, for a newspaper's editorial policies are largely a matter of economic and political expedience. Also, news and opinion will always be selected according to the limited image, in the editor's mind, of the range of humanpossibility.

But while the journalistic ethic has sandy foundations in practice, so far as the First Amendment is concerned, it has almost exclusive regard for the altruistic sensibility toward providing a free press.

As Charles Rembar, a New York attorney who helped win landmark decisions against censorship in the 1960s, said in an article "For Sale: Freedom of Speech" (Atlantic Monthly, March 1981):

"...freedom of speech is, for most of us, an abstraction. We do not want to hear the offensive or the obnoxious. Only with considerable intellectualization, and an effort of will, do we accept the proposition that evil persons should be allowed to utter their evil thoughts. For most of us, freedom of speech means freedom for me. Except for a small minority, the First Amendment has a fragile emotional basis."

This brings us back to the opinion-editorial section of the Collegian.

The judgements of the editorial editor are personal. They reflect impressions, feelings and understandings of society, just like anyone else's. What justifies the editors position as a gatekeeper of information, as a referee who keeps debate within reasonable bounds, is a dedication to the emotional basis of the First Amendment.

Eric Janszen is the Collegian executive editor.

Letters

Honey tastes better than vinegar

As graduating seniors, we feel obligated to contribute to the controversial Nummo News and racial issue.

The Nummo News is a black militant publication. Two of its objectives are to increase the status of blacks and other minorities as well as to inform the public about the oppressive society in which we live. The University could use an organization with such admirable goals. Blacks are unquestionably victims of prejudice, discrimination and, recently with the Atlanta Tragedy, genocide. These are some of the obvious problems which Afro-Americans face.

Furthermore, the position of black people in the U.S. is precarious at best. They have a unity and a culture which other ethnic groups would be proud of. Yet, if a black individual wants to attain status in white society, they often have to give up many of the fine attributes of their heritage. Frequently, they have to weigh the advantages and disadvantages of education and economic gain. Blacks are in a no-win situation.

Two examples that the college community can surely relate to, are those of Jimi Hendrix and Reggie Jackson. Hendrix, considered to be one of the finest guitarists who ever lived, was literally starving on the streets of New York City before an English rock musician discovered him. This musician became Jimi's manager and took him to England where Hendrix was an instant success. After his initial accomplishments, Hendrix was compelled to return to New York to form an all-black band and support various black movements, such as the Black Panthers. The point is that Hendrix had to leave the U.S. and conform to English white society before becoming a success.

Reggie Jackson, whether you love him or hate him, is a baseball player who always seems to come up with the big play. He is a bona-fide star athlete and celebrity. Yet, several times after ballgames, he has traveled to uptown Harlem for a night on the town. Instead of having a good time, Jackson has been mugged more than once in Harlem. Maybe there is no relationship but this could be an example of blacks alienating themselves from their culture by "making it."

Thus, blacks are in a difficult position. This is by no means an original observation. There is much black literature on this subject and even a movie entitled Mohogany. This societal problem is something that whites can only be sensitized to but never fully comprehend.

Blacks and other minorities have every right to be bitter over the oppressive conditions in which they live. But history has shown that peaceful demonstrations have accomplished much more than violence and hatred. Dr. Martin Luther King has furthered the black cause more than any activist of recent times. Former Black Panther leader Eldridge Cleaver isn't preaching violence but racial harmony. Even Malcolm X, who in his autobiography described the white man as a devil, subdued his anger and began to believe in cooperation rather than hatred before his untimely death. To use an old expression, "honey tastes better than vinegar."

We don't have any solutions, just suggestions. The white population of UMass might at least try to understand the black position. Nummo News might try to follow the formula of cooperation which Dr. King endorsed.

We are optimistic that not only does this University have the capabilities to bring about productive changes in racial attitudes, but also our generation both white and black will move to a closer brotherhood. Bitterness and pessimism will only prove futile.

Ignorance and privilege

I am replying to Carol White's letter "Racist Label is Ridiculous" (Collegian 2/25).

She ascertains that NUMMO NEWS is irrelevant — its coverage of Third World issues is not of importance in her life. She chooses to be ignorant topically. That she chooses to be ignorant of race oppression issues she cites as her privilege. It is both ignorance and privilege that support oppression, no matter what the type. That she chooses to be ignorant of the issues of race oppression lends support to racism. To support racism in such a manner is racist.

Gregory Ara Jundanian
Amherst

Editor's note: Since February 26, six letters regarding Nummo News have appeared in the Collegian. These letters represented positions either critical or in support of Nummo or the Collegian, or both, on the issue of Third World news.

This debate has been useful in bringing the views of the Collegian readership to light, which is the purpose of the letters section. However, implicit in these letters, particularly those critical of Nummo, is the assumption that the Collegian has either direct or casual influence on Nummo editorial policy. The Collegian has and desires no editorial control over Nummo but the publication of Collegian and Nummo readers' opinions of Nummo in the Collegian borders on a transversion of the independent relationship between the two newspapers: the Collegian has a "broader" readership, and so the views it prints exert greater influence on the community, and, through the Collegian, what amounts to editorial influence on Nummo.

The value and function of Nummo News is an issue which must be decided between that newspaper, its readers and the community it serves, and not in any way by the Collegian. Therefore, all letters received by the Collegian on the subject of Nummo will, from now on, be forwarded to that newspaper.

'Killer' is not a 'game'

At a time when U.S.-funded "assasination" or "death squads" take the lives of the people of El Salvador daily, at a time when domestically, here in the U.S., the most brutal acts of violence have increased to epidemic proportions — violence against Third World people in particular, and women in general — it is almost beyond the limits of one's imagination that a "game" such as "killer" can be allowed on this campus.

Recreation and relaxation are necessary, important aspects of healthy and balanced lives. Games are one way for all of us to release tensions and enjoy ourselves. But this so-called "game" ("killer"), advertised Tuesday in the Collegian (3/3), on page two, and posted all over campus thru flyers, is to say the very least one of the manifestations of the current climate we have seen in some time.

Words like "stalk," "hit," and "assassinate" are used blithely. Is it really possible that some people actually see this "game" where the objective is to "assassinate," by "stalking," another "player" as a reasonable form of "amusement"? When real crime is escalating daily at an unprecedented rate — witness the still unsolved murders of the children of Atlanta — it is almost beyond belief that people could be so callous, cruel and depraved to engage in this sort of activity. That the organizers even came up with this idea is a serious problem in itself. That they go so far as to charge money is as sick as the notion that people would think of participating, let alone paying to do so.

Equally serious is the fact that this sort of ad is allowed to appear in the Collegian, and that meetings concerning the organizing of this activity are allowed to take place in the Campus Center.

This "game" is the new "rage" on college campuses all across this country. Dade County, in Florida, has legally banned it. We suggest this campus do the same. It should not be tolerated, advertised, or permitted the slightest form of sanction. We urge the community to express your strongest opposition and suggest that the Chancellor's Commission on Civility in Human Relations do what they can to end this less than "civil" activity.

Trashing the night away

Webster's defines trash as "anything worthless or useless." Since they are speaking of trash in the rubbish sense, they are quite correct, for most rubbish is nothing more than a rancid pile of domestic excrement that serves no good purpose whatsoever (though I wouldn't want to argue this point with an unemployed garbageman).

For thousands of us, however, the term "trash" connotes quite a bit more. Indeed, it is the buzzword for an entire lifestyle.

Many of us here at the University lead what has often been referred to as a trashy lifestyle. We smoke. We drink. We wear tight jeans with holes in them. We try to pick each other up. We swear. We scream. We sleep late. We skip classes. Sometimes we skip entire days, never forgetting that book is just another four letter word.

But we're not sleazy cretins or burdens on society. Most of us will go to an occasional class. Many of us are politically active. Some of us know who Wordsworth was. A few of us even want to "wait until we get married." But not too many. Maybe two. Most of us are actually very fine people. We simply feel that we're here to enjoy our college years, our first, and maybe our last, years of blissful independence. And since we're far too impoverished to afford highbrow entertainment, we must content ourselves with trashy fun.

Trashy entertainment can be loosely defined as anything not mainstream, prime time, middle of the road, pretentious, flashy, explicit, expensive, trendy, refined, somber, necessary, ordered, uplifting, or calculated. It is not the same as garbage entertainment. Pornography, for example, is too obvious to be trash. It is garbage. TV sitcoms are garbage. Seventies heavy metal rock bands are garbage, as are most Hollywood horror films and campy designer clothes.

Here is a partial guide to what's hot on the local trash scene:

TRASH CINEMA — Occasionally the Amherst Cinema or the midnight shows will come up with a real cracker, but one must rely primarily on local TV late shows for true trash classics. Channel 8 runs a weekly series of 50's and early 60's horror films every Friday night, including such gems as "The Incredible Shrinking Man," "Godzilla vs. Megalon," and "I Was a Teenage Werewolf." All are prodigiously funny in their technical ineptitude and moronic dialogue, especially the Japanese imports.

TRASH ROCK — To the true connoisseur, there is no other band than the B-52's. Their three chord thrashings, nonsensical lyrics, dime store apparell and bouffant hairdos make them the ultimate in trash rock. The Shaggs, three chubby sisters roundly acclaimed as the most horrendous band ever to record an album, might be the new stars on the trash horizon. As for oldies, the Backroom Record Shop in downtown Amherst is the place to find 95¢ used copies of vintage junk from such trash pioneers as the Monkees and the Dave Clark Five.

TRASH VIDEO — Every other Friday night at midnight a merry band of strung out lunatics from the UMass Union Video Center present something entitled "Last Call" on Cable Channel 3. It's a very funny live program that featues homemade videotapes from UMass students, call-in segments, an occasional musical guest, and whatever inanities the host happens to think of. For those with weaker stomachs, there's always such oldies but goldies as Leave it to Beaver, Gilligan's Island, or Batman.

TRASH BARS — Where else but downstairs at the Drake? A perfect dive, the Drake looks and smells like a Vampire hangout, and features foosball, pool, horrible pizza, sticky tables, a pretty good juke box, and cheap pitchers of beer. A wonderful, unpretentious place to get smashed or just soak up the atmosphere (not to mention the puddle of beer on your seat), this scummy paradise reigns as the place to trash out in Downtown Amherst.

TRASH CHIC — For about ten dollars you can select a natty used outfit of baggy chinos, buttondown shirt, silly cap, and ratty sneakers at the Salvation Army outlet in Northampton and be at the top of the never-changing world of trashy fashion. Add a customarily superb three-dollar haircut from Nelson in the Campus Center Barbar Shop and you're an irresistable target to amorous-minded trash lovers everywhere.

TRASH ICONS — Of course, we have our heroes. The original and still the archetypical trashy lady was Mae West. Modern sex queens may bare all and moan a lot, but they're about as sensual as a handball when compared to the voluptuous West. She was the mistress of the leer and the wink, and she used her razor wit to practically patent the earthy innuendo. Modern trashy ladies may consider the erotic value of such a Westism as "Anytime you got nothing to do — and lots of time to do it — come on up." Her male counterpart was the irrepressible Groucho Marx, sexual opportunist par excellence and master of irresistable, though incomprehensible, flattery. The mangy Groucho was particularly skilled with the wealthy and fashionable, proving that even the poorest, grubbiest, and all-around trashiest of us can still mingle with society, get the girl, and have a hell of a good time to boot.

September. School resumes. A child in Atlanta disappears. October. UMass has elections, we bicker while a chld in Atlanta dies. November, we celebrate Thanksgiving, or do we? Meanwhile another child is murdered. December we worry about finals. A mother grieves for her child. We plan for our intersession vacation — will it be Florida or the Bahamas? A father is Georgia wonders if his son is next, or will it be his neighbor's. February. We fight over "the mini-store" while the eighteenth black child of Atlanta is found dead. Next month we'll wonder where our next quarter for pinball will come from...what will they be wondering in Atlanta?

Yes, we often get too caught up in ourselves and our own little womb-like existence here at the University to be bothered with events that are occuring anywhere else. Yet "their" problem is our problem as well. We are not separate entities who do not deal with others' problems, but rather one large group, sharing each others burdens and chores, happiness and grief.

So why not, for at least a moment, stop once during the day and think of someone other than ourselves and our own problems? Take that quarter earmarked for pinball, and send a letter to a family in Atlanta showing some concern for "our" situation.

Who knows? Someday maybe one of us will get a letter from someone showing concern for one of our problems.

Taking the browse out of pass/fail

The recent debate over the existence of a pass-fail option at UMass has resulted in both sides taking a firm stand for two extreme options and a compromise is needed.

First, the pass-fail option should be dropped simply because over-crowded classes containing students who wish to browse really are unfair to those who want to learn and put forth the effort, including the teachers.

Second, the problem of non-diversity could be solved by having more double major programs set up as accredited degrees instead of a potpouri of courses accumulated over the years and requiring an umbrella term to describe them.

Third, the departments themselves must combine in order to operate more efficiently (needed in a time of budget cutbacks) and provide exposure to a greater variety of ideas to those outside of these departments. Possible combinations could include: Economics and Business, Psychology and Sociology, English and Journalism, Math and Computer Science, History and Anthropology, Language and Communications, etc., ad-infinitum.

Finally, the majority of students need diversity in the beginning of their stay at college, not at the end, so a pass-fail freshman year could be instated in order to enable students to take a variety of courses, establish outside interests and be able to decide early in their studies what they want to focus their attention on.

Having decided on a major and discovering important outside interests, a student can then wipe the slate clean and give each course the attention it deserves, eliminating the need for the pass-fair option. Such a system is already in use at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and has been shown to work effectively for both the students and the faculty.

My Bloody Valentine: A bloody bad movie

By RALPH C. HYBELS
Collegian Correspondent

A B movie this is not; this is a C/D. My Bloody Valentine has all the familiar elements of the B-class: stilted acting, obtrusive film editing, and a plot with a romantic subplot connected by means of a gimmick.

But this, and the other films in this new genre of psycopath killer-thriller films, is not the same as the familiar B-formulas of the past. The B's of the forties, fifties and sixties were innocent in intentions, if lacking in artistic credibility. The old romantic adventures and heroic melodramas sold to an audience desiring to identify with the good, if less than three dimensional characters on the screen. I was culturally weaned on those celluloid daydreams. Some afternoons my mother had to pry me loose from chanel 56 for supper. Those re runs weren't very good but their themes were respectable. They taught me the same values that I swallowed at school along with my green beans. However, this new brand of B-celluloid is a gross perversion of the old formula.

Plot and theme are contrivances useful only to obscure and excuse the main purpose which is to excite us with the thrill of sadistic killing. This is not just entertainment, these films pander to our worst instincts as a means of exploiting our wallets. Although a legitimate hero is provided, we are made to identify not so much with him as with the killer. Typically, the killer is faceless (in this case he wears a miner's gasmask and suit) and we learn very little about his personal characteristics. This leaves us free to imagine ourselves into his role. More specifically, we subconsciously identify our libidonous impulses with the faceless anti-hero who is given free resign in a two dimensional world.

The scenes of killings are filmed from the killer's point of view. The camers scans a room, locates its helpless victim, the killer-camera approaches, the victim falls, a hand is raised as if it were our own death is dealt as graphically as the special effects budget will allow. Invariably, the principal victims are women; often women who have offended men by their strength and independence. In these films women have taken off their pedestal (admittedly a position of subtle exploitation) and thrown on their backs under a psychopath's blade. The popularity of this new genre does not reflect admirable qualities in its audience.

My Bloody Valentine's thematic focus is a distortion of the relationship between love, lust and violence. Each victim's heart is cut out and later found in a box of Valentine candy, or in one case found in a boiling kettle of hotdogs. Most of the killing occurs in a mine, symbolic of the subterranean depths of the human psyche, where "no women are allowed". The killing is done with such phallic devices as a mining auger, a nail gun, and a miner's pick.

My Bloody Valentine's thematic focus is a distortion of the relationship between love, lust, and violence.

My Bloody Valentine hardly deserves its R rating, unless for vulgar film technique and explicit sensationalism. No bodily parts are displayed, other than a not bad pair of legs and bunches of human hearts. But the entire film is naked of the redeeming virtues commonly found in other types of low budget films.

Fort Apache, The Bronx rated as a mediocre flick

Fort Apache, The Bronx
By ANDREW GORDON
Collegian Staff

When Fort Apache, The Bronx, the new Paul Newman cop-movie, opened nationwide some two weeks ago, its name was already well known. For months the film had been picketed against for its "inacurate" portrayal of New York's South Bronx and its residents. Well, these picketers were wasting their time because Fort Apache isn't a good enough movie to care about one way or the other. It's strange that anyone would care how the Bronx comes across on screen anyway; there's no denying that the area's a slum and saying so probably won't drive away too many tourists.

FILM

It all doesn't matter, though, because the moment Paul Newman steps on screen and speaks in a forced Bronx accent, the film loses all credibility. Not that Paul Newman isn't a great actor, but the movie-going public knows Paul Newman, and the accent is a hard act to swallow. Newman is good in the film, but it really isn't the role for him. Ed Asner is easier to take as the precinct captain but once again his accent, this time a thick Irish brogue, makes us constantly aware that he is acting and that what we are watching is only a movie.

Fort Apache, The Bronx is essentially a slice of the lives of some New York policemen. We follow them as they work, cruising around the South Bronx, tracking down muggers and the like, and into their private lives. There is no real plot, per se; no one conflict the film addresses itself to. The audience is, at first, led to believe the film will be about the cold blooded murder of two young cops, a scene which opens the movie, but the event is scarcely mentioned again and the killings go unsolved. The only other conflict does not come until the last quarter of the movie. This lack of plot places the burden on the characters; the actors do as much with them as they can. The supporting cast includes Ken Wahl (who made an impressive debut in last year's The Wanderers), Rachel Ticotin, Danny Aiello, Pam Grier and Kathleen Beller. These actors are better than the roles they play and, more than anything, the movie features a lot of wasted talent.

The script problems can only be traced to Heywood Gould, who adapted the film from the book of the same name. Gould also adapted Rolling Thunder and The Boys from Brazil, but didn't leave as many loose ends in those films.

Mind you, the film is not quite as bad as this review may make it sound up until this point. The photography is great and there are some terrific moments, in particular a tender scene between Wahl and Kathleen Beller (the scene doesn't quite fit into the film but that's beside the point). The direction, by Daniel Petrie, is also a major asset. Petrie never received the attention he deserved for his direction of such "little" films as Buster and Billie and Lifeguard. It is too bad that now that Petrie has made it to the "big" time, all that the studios are offering him are less than intelligent scripts.

Fort Apache, The Bronx is a mediocre movie that only hard core Paul Newman fans will really enjoy; anyone else can surely find a better way to spend two hours. True police movie buffs should wait for Serpico to come around again.

Fort Apache, The Bronx is rated R for its language and scenes of brutality and is currently playing at the Mountain Farms 4 cinema.

Bacall gives dazzling performance

By JONATHAN HAMILTON
Collegian Staff

Lauren Bacall as in Woman of the Year.

BOSTON—Lauren Bacall is, well...um, Lauren Bacall. She continues to dazzle audiences with a warmth and energy that is indefatigable, Woman of the Year is a play that utilizes Bacall's vigor to the utmost, an enticing and light comedy sure to bring a smile and laugh to one's face.

The play (at the Colonial Theatre till March 14th) is an extravaganza to say the least. Lavish sets roll onto the stage before each scene with great rapidity; cinematography is used in several acts as screens are pulled down onto the stage while actors converse and sing with cartoon characters.

Without a doubt, though, it is Bacall that exhilarates the crowd from the outset. As she emerges on the stage the first spotlight envelopes her and the crowd does likewise, with a spontaneous, warm applause reserved for those few special people who grace the stage.

Bacall plays the role of Tess Harding (a close facsimile of Barbara Walters), whose life is constantly cluttered interviewing celebrities of the world. She is further cast as a commentator on a morning network news show (as was Walters). One morning, in one of her commentaries, she criticizes cartoonists, suggesting comic strips serve no real

Former Communist candidate seeks election changes

BOSTON (AP) — A former vice presidential candidate for the Communist Party wants the Massachusetts Legislature to ease requirements for getting on the ballot.

At a hearing yesterday before the Election Laws Committee, Simon W. Gerson protested the state's signature requirement for third party candidates. A committee staffer said the pending bill would reduce from about 10,000 to 10,000 the number of certified signatures needed for ballot inclusion.

"When an independent party's access to the ballot is so sharply restricted as to make a mockery of the electoral process, democracy itself is undermined," Gerson said.

AP that 1,500 have surrendered in three weeks, enough to encourage him to extend the amnesty offer one more month to April 11.

Since the New Year, the leftist guerrillas have proclaimed two "final offensives." But they do not receive popular support for general strike calls and the military claims it has "smothered" them despite their attacks on banks, military posts, cotton and coffee plantations, and villages.

The rebel army fighting and terrorist killings have chased away wealthy businessmen and investment capital, Duarte said, and he placed the blame on "the extreme right and the extreme left."

Duarte also said he has ordered the arrest of a retired major of the Salvadoran army, Roberto D'Abuisson.

D'Abuisson told foreign reporters Tuesday the army should oust Duarte and fellow Christian Democrats from the government and return the country to military rule.

He claimed the Christian Democrats were "the rightwing of the Communist Party." D'Abuisson has been mentioned by the United States in connection with two possible planned rightist coups here in 1980.

The United States has shipped $10 million in arms aid to the government and the Reagan administration announced this week it was sending another $25 million worth. President Reagan has said the additional 20 military advisers would bolster a force of 31 already here, but their role would be strictly non-combat.

1982, starting next Oct. 1. That would raise the level next year to $222.2 billion, a total never before matched in peacetime.

Only $5.8 billion of the additional budget authority will actually be spent this year and next. Most of the additional authority, which would permit the Pentagon to make contract commitments, would be "spent out" in future years as new ships, planes and other equipment, including a new form of nerve gas, are manufactured.

The vast bulk of the additional funds asked for in fiscal 1981 and fiscal 1982 will be earmarked for improving the weaponry and readiness of the conventional sea, air and land forces. The only major strategic weapons initiative is a nearly $2.5 billion request to push development next year of an advanced bomber called a "long range combat aircraft."

The Pentagon has not settled on any of several different design possibilities, but the aim is to produce a faster and less vulnerable craft than the aging B-52.

The Reagan administration's recommendations would reverse the Carter administration's procurement cutbacks and stretchouts.

About $20 billion of the $32.6 billion increase would be applied to ordering a wide variety of weapons and equipment.

'Superstar' foreseen with enthusiasm

By STEPHANIE KLEIN
Collegian Staff

Forecasted as a "phenomenal production,' Jesus Christ Superstar, a rock opera, will be presented by the University of Massachusetts Theatre Guild at Bowker auditorium, April 2-4 and 9-11.

"It'll be the best thing the guild has ever done and I can honestly say that," said Bill Collura who plays the lead role of Jesus in the show.

The Music Theatre Guild offers a two-fold experience in that it is both artistic and social, explained Greg Driscoll, producer of Jesus Christ Superstar.

"It not only offers a social outlet away from books but a learning experience. Alot of people have been bitten by the theatrical bug," said Driscoll. "Bascially, what we do is attract as many theatre minded people as possible, students and non-students from the Five College area, for on and off stage positions."

Driscoll stressed the guild's main priority is to educate people.

"Anyone qualifies who is interested in theatre," he said, "We have every major imaginable. Our working director is a Comstu major. We have fashion marketing people doing the costumes and advertising majors on graphic design."

The guild board, comprised of director, producer, choreographer and others, is reelected after being interviewed twice a year with each new production.

"This production will be fantastic. The production staff is solid and the cast is fabulous," said Miriam Sandler, freshman dance major and choreographer.

Until recently Collura said he was a little nervous about taking on the role of Jesus.

"This show in particular is difficult because everyone has their own preconceptions of Jesus. It'll be challenging to play to all of those individual images," Collura said.

In an effort to stretch his vocal range, Collura has quit smoking and has even lost 20 pounds and cut out drinking altogether.

"Whoever heard of a fat Jesus," Collura added "I even have a picture of Jesus on my wall with a slogan — "He didn't smoke," to inspire me."

Collura has become increasingly enthusiastic, partly from the praise of senior Marcy Praskin, vocal coordinator for the show. One needs no inspiration to see Jesus Christ Superstar after talking to Praskin.

"This will be a 'blow them out of their seat production'," she said.

Tickets for Jesus Christ Superstar will be available soon at the Bowker auditorium box office. Tickets are $3.00 for students and $4.00 for the general public.

intellectual purpose. This infuriates cartoonist Sam Craig (Harry Guardino) who devises a scheme to caracturize Harding in his strip. He does this, which in turn infuriates her. But when he visits her to discuss the impropriety of her editorial they become immediately attracted to one another.

Guardino plays a gentle, fun-loving man who becomes playfully in love with Tess. One may find it difficult to visualize Guardino in this role since he has often brandished a magnum in Clint Eastwood films.

The supporting cast is very strong, demonstrating the depth of the acting crew. Most noteworthy were Gerald (Roderick Cook) who played Tess' fastidious secretary, Helga (Grace Keagy) Tess' cantakerous maid and Jan (Marilyn Cooper), the homely but good-natured wife of Tess' ex husband.

The script, written by Peter Stone, music by John Kander and lyrics by Fredd Ebb give the show that added dimension of superiority. The polish with which the show went off was squeaky-clean. The strengths of the show, besides Bacall, were the musical numbers that were brought off with precision. The dancing numbers further enhanced the musical as Bacall showed some impressive stamina.

If light comedy is the penchant for the evening, if catchy music catches you and if a tireless classy woman (the former Mrs. Humphrey Bogart) gives you any sort of impetus, then for heaven's sake, go down to the Colonial and see Woman of the Year a first class performance before it heads to its rightful place—Broadway.

Eight minutes and it's over

It hardly seems worth it; to practice for months, hours each day, days a week, to starve oneself regularly to make weight, to run miles a day every day of the year. To do all this and have one's career cut short in eight minutes flat.

How can it be worth it? For a season that runs about four months (December to March), they work out year-round. They practice daily for matches that last eight minutes.

"Preparing to win isn't fun but winning is," said University of Massachusetts 158 pound wrestler Mike Carroll, who won last weekend's New Englands and is currently practicing and working out in anticipation of the Nationals March 12 at Princeton.

Donna Sullivan

For the second year in a row, Carroll, a senior and tri-captain on the team, took top honors at the New Englands and was also voted the tournament's outstanding wrestler once again.

"Alot depends on the individual," said Mass coach Dave Amato, who worked Caroll and six more wrestlers right into the finals of the New Englands. "You usually get out of it what you put into it. If you worked hard and you know you worked hard, the result isn't that important...but when they raise your hand at the end of the match...it's worth it.

"That's why I felt so bad at the New Englands," he said, "They all did the best they could...I thought we'd have four winners."

Eight minutes and it was good-bye to nine of Amato's squad, five for the season, four for good.

In less than a minute it was decided that Mass' 190 pound wrestler Bill McQuaide would not go to Princeton for the Nationals, thus ending his college career. McQuaide got off to a slow start against Rhode Island's Todd Giles, but a tremendous second half put him back in the bout. The final minute proved fatal and McQuaide's goal of reaching the Nationals for a second year was clipped.

"You gotta eat like a bird...Sometimes you go 40 hours without eating to make weight."
—Bill McQuaide

"The New England tournament is just a way to get to the Nationals. The Nationals are the goal, at least for me," said McQuaide, who finished the season with a sparkling 20-1-1 record, a second place this year, and a first place last year in the New Englands.

"The hard part is keeping motivated to win, for every match," he said.

A 12-2-4 record shows that the team keeps motivated though, in addition to subjecting themselves to what seems to be masochism, but is more commonly known as making weight.

"You gotta eat like a bird," McQuaide said, "Sometimes you go 40 hours before a meet without eating, to make weight. Ras (126 pound UMass wrestler Dana Rasmussen) runs sometimes 15 miles to make weight.'

Then there's the hours of practice every day before and during the season.

"You have to practice that long to go an eight minute match," said Mike Mitrowski, a senior on the team, "You have to put in alot of time to feel good throughout the whole match.

"Winning in this sport is more gratifying because you're more like king of the hill, you've gone out and physically beaten someone," he said.

It took just eight minutes to have five more dampers put on Mass wrestling bids for the Nationals. Rasmussen, 134 pound Charles Rigoglioso, 142 pound Kevin Murphy, 167 pound Dave McEntee and heavyweight John Allen all placed second in the New Englands. They made great showings, but final showings.

Rasmussen went into the tournament sporting a 10-3-1 record. In eight minutes, Mike Maccia of URI turned the near perfect record into history...old news. It happened to Rigoglioso and McEntee too.

For Murphy, it took less than eight minutes for the season to be cut short. Wrestling against defending New England champ Bob Eon of URI, Murphy suffered a bruised clavicle in the first two minute period.

And again, in eight minutes, some kid named Brantley from URI upset Allen in his fourth bid for the Nationals.

Worth it? Well most of the graduating wrestlers plan to continue, whether coaching or competing.

"It's pretty tough to do something for nine or ten years and then just stop," McQuaide said, "I'll probably still compete."

Credits for Florida

Project DEEP at UMass is once again offering a Sport Diving course in Key Largo, Florida, worth two credits in General Physical Education. The course is open to all certified divers, whether or not they are UMass students. The March 22-28 course marks DEEP's 20th extension course offered through UMass and promises, as always, to be informative, challenging, and most of all, a great time.

Course cost of $300 includes lodging, 3 meals a day prepared by a professional cook, instruction, and dives — including tanks and weight belt. A general meeting and slide show will be held on Friday, March 13th in Boyden 249 at 7 p.m. for anyone wishing to go on the trip. For more information, drop by Curry Hicks pool any night Monday through Thursday at 7 p.m. or contact Mary Ann Ryan, Project DEEP, PO Box 415, Northampton, MA 01060 (584-0456).

A fan who still remembers

By JIM PARSONS

Commentary

Maybe you don't remember Boobie. If you don't, then you should read this, because you really missed the magic. Alex Eldridge played some hoop at the Cage a few years back. He played at level that is unlikely to transpire here again. A level that the winds of the past can only whisper, "Doctor" for comparison. If you didn't see him, you lost out. Boobie was very special. He died suddenly this past summer. You should know about Alex Eldridge.

He packed them into the Cage for four years. I was one of the fortunate to be doing my time here during his stint. Those were rollicking nights. Capacity crowds, the band and that timely cowbell. It really is true about the lines, people hanging off the rafters. The only show in town was the Cage and Alex knew it. I only knew about him as a spectator would, in a sea of 4,500. However, I must try to relate how he projected himself to me from his spot on the court.

"The Boob" was more than a basketball star. Trying to find the right words to describe him is something that is almost out of reach. Whether you can dig it or not, he was mystical. That shy, catlike grin, the glint in his eye, it made you think that he had a true zest for life, to use an old cliche.

They want to retire Alex's number and set up a scholarship in a memoriam to him. It should be done. If there was ever a "given," then this is it.

But, don't count on it folks, at least not with this administration. They didn't like Eldridge, and others with free spirited attitudes.

People try to pass off this year's problems on the Cage. They say they can't show this place to a recruit. If you had taken any recruit to the Cage during its heyday with Alex Eldridge playing, he'd probably sign with the school on the spot.

Visiting teams feared the Cage. Alex and the fans loved it. A lot of history has passed there. The Cage should be saved. What needs to be built is a team. This article is dedicated to the "Boob," though, and of the way it once was around here.

The guy is a legend. They'll tell you that back home in the Apple. Here in Amherst, people will speak of a ball-handling wizard. Jack Leaman, Eldridge's coach said that he was second only to the Doctor. Alex had it over the Doc in certain facets of the game. The Boob was a dribbler, passer, and playmaker second to none. If he had wanted to, he could have scored more points and garnered more "Erving like" acclaim. But, the Boob would pass up an easy shot for the good pass more often than not.

Times change, faces come and go. But the memory of Alex Eldridge remains constant. You can still see the classic sequence: Claiborne inbounds the ball to Eldridge. Alex races to his left and then goes behind his back to his right. The defense, flustered, is left in a state of disarray. There's Mike Pyatt alone underneath and guess who found him? You know the answer: Alex Eldridge.

Faculty Senate favors plan for individual trustee boards

By STEVE DALY
Collegian Staff

The Faculty Senate yesterday passed a motion advising the Board of Regents to investigate the possibility of establishing individual trustee boards for "one or more" of the University of Massachusetts' campuses.

A motion to advise the Board of Regents to re-examine the need for a president's office for the University of Massachusetts was postponed indefinitely.

The vote passing the "trustee board" motion was 44 to 11.

The motion passed after a debate over a Faculty Senate Rules Committee motion and a substitute motion offered by Professor Lewis Mainzer which precipitated two amendment votes on each motion, as well as a vote defeating Mainzer's proposal.

Mainzer's substitute motion lost by a 37 to 26 count.

Paul Jennings, Faculty Senate Secretary, said the faculty "wants someone to be a campus spokesman."

"I foresee the interests of the Amherst campus taking a back seat to all the excitement of creating a new campus within the University system," said Jennings, referring to the proposed merger of UMass-Boston and Boston State College.

"I feel a need and a desirability for separate boards of trustees. We cannot speak for Worcester," said Jennings, concluding that "maybe it is time to give up our children."

Mainzer said the Rules Committee memorandum

George McGovern

McGovern to speak about Moral Majority

By TIMOTHY J. FOWLER
Collegian Staff

Former Senator George McGovern will speak this Tuesday at the University of Massachusetts about the Moral Majority, a coalition of fundamentalists considered responsible for his defeat last fall in his re-election campaign.

McGovern, 59, is the founder of American Common Sense, a grass-roots organization that hopes to counteract the work of the Moral Majority.

His lecture, which will be in the Student Union Ballroom at 8 p.m., is free to UMass students with a valid identification card and is sponsored by the Distinguished Visitors Program which will pay McGovern $2,000 for the visit. Sign language interpretation will be provided.

McGovern was a senator representing South Dakota from 1962 until his defeat last fall. During his tenure, he held positions on the Senate Foreign Relations Committee and the Joint Economics Committee.

In 1972 he was defeated by Richard Nixon in the largest electoral college victory in the history of presidential elections.

McGovern graduated from Dakota Wesleyan University, earned a doctorate in history and government from Northwestern University, was awarded the Distinguished Flying Cross for piloting 35 missions in a B-24 bomber during World War II, and was elected to the U.S. House of Representatives in 1956 and reelected in 1958.

"Guardian" correspondent speaks on 50 year Salvadoran struggle

By MALCOLM CAMPBELL
Collegian Correspondent

Robert Armstrong, a Latin American correspondent for the Guardian, a New York based independent radical publication, addressing a standing room only audience in Herter Hall last night, emphasized that the current civil war in El Salvador is a product of a popular revolt which has been developing for many years but is perennially frustrated by an increasingly repressive minority government.

"It is most tragic to characterize what's going on as a kind of struggle between the U.S. and the U.S.S.R. That characterization denies the 50 years of struggle by the El Salvadoran people to overthrow an exploitative oligarchy," Armstrong said.

"The struggle reached its greatest frustration in 1972 when the people discovered that the electoral way to power was closed," he said. The leaders of the popular movement realized that they were unable to take control of the government from the 300 families of the land-owning elite which had monopolized political and economic power for decades, Armstrong said.

Along with the historical summary of the "liberation struggle," Armstrong discussed the strategy and tactics of the guerrilla and militant movements which attempted to cultivate a broad base of mass support.

"Militants went into the slums, the countryside, the universities and worked with people on a basic level, designing projects to unite communities," Armstrong said.

Armstrong also criticized U.S. policy towards El Salvador.

"Reagan wants to make El Salvador a test case to demonstrate to the world that the U.S. will not be pushed around anymore," he said. "If it weren't so tragic it would be a joke."

Armstrong attacked the U.S. sponsored system of land reform which he described as "reform with repression." According to Armstrong, the agrarian reform was intended to undermine popular support for militants, and if the reforms fail then government search and destroy missions would be instituted to destroy any insurgent groups.

Salvadoran guerrillas attack guard outpost

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — Guerrillas attacked a national guard post in the northern town of Jutiapa before dawn yesterday and after several hours of fighting, were repulsed, the Salvadoran government said. Ten guerrillas were reported killed.

Fighting was reported in Cinquera, near Jutiapa and the government said leftist guerrillas set fire to the city hall and kidnapped two people as the left continued its push for power.

Three bombs exploded here, police said, and one seriously damaged a bank. A Salvadoran journalist was reported slain near the capital.

The bloody leftist rightist conflict has become a ground for antagonism between the United States and the U.S.S.R. Both countries declare a need for El Salvador to work out its own problems yet each accuses the other of intervention.

Committee hears high tech's plea for tax break

By THOMAS S. BROWN
Associated Press

BOSTON — The high technology industry asked the Legislature for a sales tax exemption yesterday, but the Massachusetts Teachers Association argued that Proposition 2½ makes 1981 the wrong time for any tax breaks.

John F. Cadwallader, lobbyist for Data General Corp. and the Massachusetts High Technology Council, urged the Taxation Committee to support a bill designed to protect computer programs and computer time-sharing deals from the sales tax.

Cadwallader said the measure was needed to preserve a competitive edge Massachusetts computer firms have over some out of state companies.

However, Jack Flanagan, spokesman for the teachers' union, said his organization opposes all tax-break bills this year, and the high tech measure in particular.

"Any new break means less dollars for local aid," Flanagan told the committee. He said if state aid fails to offset the property tax rollbacks mandated by Proposition 2½, as many as 12,000 of the state's 65,000 teachers will lose their jobs.

Flanagan cited a new study by the University of Massachusetts Boston to argue that Massachusetts computer firms already are undertaxed, compared to out-of-state firms. Bay State companies, he said, pay an average of 23.6 percent of their income in taxes, while companies in 17 other industrial states pay about 30 percent.

Furthermore, the Massachusetts tax burden on business has been declining twice as fast as the rates in other states, Flanagan asserted.

His figures were based on a draft study prepared by Raymond Torto and Padraig O'Malley at UMass's Center for Studies in Policy and the Public Interest. Torto, an associate of Boston Mayor Kevin White, helped lead the successful 1978 campaign for tax "classification" — the system that forces businesses to pay heavier property taxes than homeowners and landlords.

Rep. Gerald Cohen, House cochairman of the Taxation panel, said he supported the proposed tax exemption because it would encourage high tech's expansion.

Ed King proposes alternative regulations to those of EPA

BOSTON (AP) — Gov. Edward J. King asked the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency yesterday to allow Massachusetts to set its own regulation for bringing certain industries into compliance with the 1977 Clean Air Act, rather than accept more costly EPA guidelines.

The proposed Massachusetts regulation, announced at a news conference, would require companies which coat paper, fabric and vinyl to switch from high to low solvent coatings, thereby reducing emissions of volatile organic compounds.

The EPA guidelines, on the other hand, require installation of equipment that would incinerate the compounds or filter emissions. It was claimed the state's approach will cost the 70 affected companies $2 million, as opposed to $14 million under the EPA guidelines.

Commissioner Anthony D. Cortese of the Department of Environmental Quality Engineering said the EPA was aware Massachusetts was developing its own proposed regulation, and he is confident of approval.

The problem has to do with ozone levels in the atmosphere, resulting from auto and industrial emissions, and resulting in smog during warm weather.

Industry is responsible for about 30 percent of the problem, while autos produce 70 percent, Cortese said.

As for auto pollution, he said in an interview, the state plans to start requiring that emission control systems in cars undergo annual inspections starting early in 1983. Legislation authorizing the inspections was approved last year.

The cost of the regulation announced yesterday would come from equipment changes and the re-formulation of coatings to meet new specifications.

Companies must be in compliance with the new regulation by December 1982, the date required by EPA, or else demonstrate economic need for an extension. Extensions of up to three years could be granted.

It was claimed that under the EPA guidelines, some companies would be forced out of business.

Walter Cronkite

CBS's top anchor for 19 years steps down after tonight's news

By JOSEPH BARRETT
Collegian Staff

Walter Cronkite, who as CBS anchorman has brought America the evening news through six presidents, leaves his position after his 7 p.m. newscast tonight.

Maurice Shelby, a professor in the University of Massachusetts Communication Studies Department who has followed the television industry and Cronkite's career for many years, said he sees Cronkite's departure as "the end of an era."

"He is retiring at 65, but CBS is not totally happy because it will take a while to regain that prestige for anyone," Shelby said.

Cronkite, CBS anchorman since 1962, has been described as a reassuring constant in a changing world. A newsman for more than 40 years, Cronkite was a newspaper reporter and a wire service correspondent before joining CBS News in 1950. In his thirty years there, he has covered wars, natural disasters, nuclear explosions, domestic and international turmoil, and every American space flight.

Shelby said, "Although I have never met Walter personally, I have followed his career. He was let go back in the mid-fifties because of poor ratings, it was the Huntley-Brinkley team that did him in, and while he did other things such as documentaries CBS experimented.

"I remember when Walter came back, Brinkley congratulated him on the air...He has since grown to be the dean of newsmen. He is what Edward R. Murrow once was; he represents the CBS image of integrity," said Shelby.

As Cronkite used to say in his You Are There series many years ago, "Today is a day like many days, filled with those events that alter and illuminate our lives. And you are there."

But today is different as this American legend steps down. Cronkite said once: "I don't understand my impact or success; that my delivery is straight, even dull at times, is probably a valid criticism. But I built my reputation on honest straight-forward reporting. To do anything else would be phony. I'd be selling myself and not the news."

Cronkite always tried to present an accurate, unbiased account of his stories. In 1973, he defined his role in the news media: "I am a news broadcaster, an anchorman, a managing editor — not a commentator or an analyst."

A descendant of Dutch merchants who settled in what is now New York City, Cronkite was born on November 4, 1916 in St. Joseph, Mo.

Following his graduation from a Houston high school in 1933, Cronkite attended the University of Texas in Austin, where he studied political science, economics and journalism. He worked as a correspondent to the Houston Post while in college, and in 1939, took a job as a United Press correspondent.

To obtain his eyewitness accounts for U.P. in World War II, Cronkite flew on the first Flying Fortress bombing raids over Germany, parachuted into the Netherlands with the 101st Airborne division, and waded ashore with the allied troops at Normandy.

After the war he worked in Belgium for U.P., and then returned to the U.S. to work in radio.

In 1950, he joined CBS News and remained there doing news, documentaries and covering events for the next three decades.

Students sorry Cronkite's going but greet Rather as replacement

Although they're sorry to see him go, University of Massachusetts students said yesterday that Walter Cronkite will be adequately replaced by Dan Rather as anchorman on the CBS Evening News.

Cronkite, 65, prime man of prime-time TV news at CBS, will be leaving his position as anchorman tonight after nearly 20 years. Cronkite will be giving his farewell newscast at 7 p.m. locally. He will be replaced by Dan Rather, the noted investigative reporter for 60 Minutes who will be paid $8 million over five years.

Kathy Serpis, 21, a South Hadley resident, called Cronkite's leaving "a big loss to CBS" and said that "Rather is the right man to take Cronkite's place."

Mary Yeghain, 21, a visitor to campus from Attleborough, said Cronkite's leaving is a great loss "because a lot of people look up to him." She said if it were up to her, she would also choose Rather as a replacement.

Bob Braga, 22, a senior business major from Northampton, said he didn't care for Cronkite.

"I think it's good he is leaving because I didn't particularly like him...he wasn't one of my favorite people," Braga said, but did not have any comments on Rather taking over because, "I don't know anything about Rather."

Rick Reed, 24, a junior animal science major from Quincy, said it is the right time for Cronkite to retire.

"It's about time to make room for something new," Reed said. "However, Cronkite and Rather are like brothers so it isn't that much of a change."

Tricia Flynn, 21, a junior psychology major from Quincy, said "It's about time that Cronkite left...but it's too bad that they couldn't have had a woman take over."

"Cronkite will sorely be missed but all good things must come to an end. It marks the end of a great figure in broadcasting history," said Robin Fuld, 20, a junior human services major from Stoughton. But Fuld also said, "Rather will be better and more truthful."

Cronkite will continue to figure in network news plans—he will be going to the Soviet Union on assignment in the spring — but no longer will he be the "father figure" of the CBS nightly news.

Editor's panel discusses the "80's woman"

By MONICA CRONIN
Collegian Correspondent

"The women of the 80's will like themselves better, be in tune to a variety of issues and will continue to grow," said Dorothy Glasser, associate editor of "Ladies Home Journal," in a panel discussion held at Amherst College last night.

Joining Glasser were Stephanie Stokes, associate editor of "Essence" magazine and Mary Thom, editor of "Ms." magazine. According to the editors, women of today are looking for more service information than before. Women today are more interested in economy and credit issues than in fashion and beauty.

Recognizing and focusing on issues relevant to women today is an important function for the magazine of the 80's, said Thom. The editors feel the attitudinal changes effected in the 70's must be reflected in today's "women's magazine".

One area the editors found particularly challenging was that of advertising. Most of the ads that appear in the magazines come from national advertisers and do not accurately reflect the goals of these publications. "Essence" magazine has been successful in persuading their advertisers to feature black women. Stokes said that initially the advertisers were reluctant to feature blacks and ony began to do so after it was shown not to have an ill effect on their ability to sell their ads to other national magazines.

"Ms." magazine readers are especially critical of sexist advertising, said Thom. Reader response has been so strong that one national advertiser published an open letter of apology to "Ms." readers after running a club soda ad featuring the slogan "Hit me with a Club".

Women today are confident in themselves, in their purposes and in their abilities but they need to recognize that change is not something that takes place in five years, or even 20 — it is a lifetime commitment, said Thom.

"We need to recognize that we can't just change ourselves, we need to carry that change to the workplace and to institutions such as schools — that's what's going to take the energy and work in the 80's," said Thom.

Wallace urges Board to act

By GREG VOLPE
Collegian Staff

In an attempt to stimulate more student input into the future of Campus Center and Student Union renovations, Al Wallace, Student Government Association treasurer, urged the Campus Center Board of Governors last night to play more than just an "advisory" role in administrative procedures.

Wallace, who was concerned over students' lack of knowledge of how and where their money is being spent, said the board should get together with Vice Chancellor for Administration and Finance George Beatty more frequently to discuss what the administration is doing in terms of Campus Center renovations.

"You have a very good run ship, and a very good run program, but I don't think it's in the best interest of students or you, the board, if you don't have more input into what's going on with renovations," Wallace said.

William Harris, Campus Center director, agreed with Wallace's assessment of what the Board should be, but was also concerned with student's understanding of how their money is spent.

"If your operating at this Campus Center, or any of the other 3,300 campus centers around the country, the operating costs have to be borne by the students," he said.

In other business, the Board voted to accept the new Food Waiver Procedure Form, which regulates bake sales and catering events, catered by other than Campus Center Catering Services, in the Campus Center and Student Union building.

preceding the resolution was "mean-spirited" and "started at the wrong point."

"It may not be a good idea for us to take a position that appears selfish," Mainzer said. "I don't know whether now is the time to put the knife in the back of other public institutions."

Senator Dean Alfange expressed a desire to "attain the intent of the Rules Committee motion while retaining the flavor of Mainzer's resolution."

An amendment to make Mainzer's motion "operative" was proposed by Alfange and passed by a 33 to 26 vote.

A second amendment to Mainzer's motion was rejected and then the motion itself was defeated.

There were two amendments to the Rules Committee motion before it was approved. The first deleted most of the resolution's memorandum, eliminating judgements on the effect of the merger. The second changed some of the wording.

BLACK AFFAIRS

Black women's feats should be recognized

Loida John
Black Affairs Staff

The achievements of Black women in America, long ignored in the pages of history books, should be acclaimed for the indelible effect they have had on the stability of the Black family and society in general said noted authority Dr. Marianna Davis, last Tuesday in the Campus Center.

Davis's speech was the second in a series of Black History Month lectures and the message was delivered to a predominantly female audience. Her presentation highlighted the contributions of black women in the areas of the natural sciences, medicine, sports, law, business and commerce and civil rights (to name a few).

She said "We assume that history is written by white men only" but this assumption should be challenged by all women, because they have been systematically excluded from the history books. Black women in particular have been portrayed as "submissive, overly bossy, and as sexual partners."

These images, she said, act as a deterrent for black women, and since there is power in the written word, today's students should "examine the textbooks and protest if black women are not positively portrayed."

As a professor of English at South Carolina University, Dr. Davis takes pride in informing and encouraging black women to enroll in schools of law and medicine because she says "our sisters have set the path" and "we should be inspired by their success."

After asking herself what could be done for black women, she came forth with the $150,000 project to document black women's contributions. Her final research will be covered in ten books and will hopefully prove her point: that black women are the backbone of the black family and the society at large.

"If America is to be, then it must allow all of its people to determine their self definition and their destiny," said Davis.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Out of Control

Artless show

A huge college town is a great place to disappear if you like being anonymous. But being anonymous is not everybody's favorite condition. It's hard when you feel lost in a sea of random faces, especially when you want to be a part of society, a recognized member of life.

Some people are born anonymous, some people achieve anonymity, and some people have anonymity thrust upon them. It all starts when you get a vague realization that nobody around you is banging down your door for the grace of your company. Or that nobody is even tapping on your door. (Or that not even a stray vagabond passes out at your door for want of food.) It's the old "nobody gives a damn" story, only in this case, it's true.

Steve Masse

What to do, what to do. People don't realize that being anonymous taxes the personality. Most people find ways to become significant. Some turn to creative activities, like drama and dancing. Some write poetry, others make music. Some excel in a sport. Some fall in love, if the opportunity arises — others turn to busy work.

Then there are the ones who really get attention, by turning to less conventional ways of relieving their anonymity. You know — people who dye clumps of their hair green or purple and strut about in weird clothes, Moonies, Jesus Freaks, Anti-Moonies, protesters, people who own poodles, newspaper columnists — people who strive for significance at any cost.

But there's another breed of attention-getting that calls for some notice: the vandals. They are somebody to really worry about, to protest, to censure. Why do some people insist on destruction as a way of relieving their (perhaps deserved) anonymity? The other day countless people got soaked while waiting for buses across from the Fine Arts Center, because some scum sucking pig(s) decided to kick the bus shelter in.

Cars are broken into, dorm rooms get ripped off, rugs get burned, doors get splintered, windows shattered. Lawns get trampled, fences torn down, telephones ripped out by the wires, mirrors stolen from rest rooms. Why does it continue?

I realize there's room in the budget to cover wear and tear and a reasonable amount of vandalism, but UMass is always breaking records in the vandal category. It's almost as though vandalism were just another student activity. Of course you can't start up an RSO called the Vandalism Club, because smashing things apart requires the all-important state of being anonymous. How many vandals would confess their acts publicly? And yet how many of the same vandals go directly to the newspapers to read accounts of their own acts?

When you vandalize, you get the satisfaction of a job well done, plus the recognition that news coverage gives. And all this without any incrimination! The police, the town, the school administrations continue to arrive on the scene too late. They are impotent against you. (When's the last time somebody got 'thrown out of UMass, anyway?)

But there's one little drawback to vandalism — the price. Everybody must pay for the vandals, even the vandals themselves. Whenever that overburdened line, "there are no suspects in the case," appears in the news after the police reports, a few more pennies are sure to be added on to next year's bill — either the school bill or the tax bill. And from the looks of things around here — that's a hell of a lot of pennies.

Don't vandalize. If your friends are out committing horror, either leave them, stop them or report them. This place doesn't need any more burden on its already bad reputation. If you really have to break something, just make sure it's your own.

Steve Masse is a Collegian columnist.

Think it was something I said?

While sitting in the Hatch, one grey, morbid Monday morning, mulling over my New York Times and sipping lukewarm coffee, I spied my friend Eddie, the eternal optimist, moving toward my table. How would one describe this bushey-tailed, naive fool?

If Mary Poppins, Heidi and the Mormon Tabernacle Choir were rolled into one you might come close. He rises with a smile, grins after root canals and will probably die laughing. It's not that I don't like him — in fact I'm rather envious of his rose-colored view of life.

John Hudson

As he went to sit down, I prepared myself for the worst.

"Beautiful mornin', huh John?"

I turned a page of my paper and said, "If you enjoy news like this."

"Like what?"

"Gas at $1.50 a gallon and oil-company profits up fifty, sixty, and seventy percent. Just a coincidence, right?"

"Oh...c'est la vie, right?"

The look on my face showed my disapproval, and he valiantly attempted to change the subject.

"How's the old dorm these days?"

"Well, the administration spent $47,000 on the candy counter, $100 thousand on the TOC and my floor may have to raise $250 so we can partition the bathroom and attempt to keep intact the community it took us four semesters to create."

Surprisingly, the lines in his smile became weaker and weaker. Sheepishly, he tried to recover and bravely asked one last question.

"What do you think of Reagan?"

Now I was ready to pounce!

"Other than sending military aid and advisors to El Salvador, threatening to cut financial aid and Social Security, having a vice-president who thinks a limited nuclear war is feasible, a general for the top diplomatic post in the country and a wife who packs a six-shooter, everything's hunky dory!!"

His smile was gone, my Monday morning frown replacing it. He slowly rose from the table and dazedly began to walk away.

"Hey," I protested, "where are you going?"

"Back to bed," he mumbled.

Do you think it was something I said?

Cancellation seems foolish

The explanation of the cancellation of International Women's Week at UMass is full of eloquent rhetoric, but fails to explain why the Third World Women's Task Force withdrew from this week's events.

At a time when community awareness of women's issues is most needed, it seems foolish to me that you should completely cancel this week's events. There may have been differences between various groups, but is the Third World Women's Task Force unable to organize any events on its own? It may not have had the money or influence to do this, but it certainly had the influence to move you to cancel the events at UMass.

Alan DerMarderosian
Amherst

Cancellation reinforces stereotypes

The cancellation of International Women's Week activities on campus is an extremely sad resolution to the conflict of interests involved.

International Women's Week is a symbol. It is a symbol of the unity of women. The issues confronting women in our society are complex and necessitate the unification of women to overcome them. Women cannot afford to factionalize over personalities. The problems we face are comprehensive and transcend the barriers that divide us.

Women's Week is important in that it is a time to educate men and women about the issues that repress both sexes. It is not a forum for highlighting the conflicts that separate groups. The Third World Women's group may have a legitimate complaint, but the selection of Women's Week as a time to raise it is a poor one.

This is a time when we should be focusing on our similarities and our unities. We need to show the world a strong front. We need to show that we are united. The cancellation only serves to reinforce, to those who want to believe it, the stereotype of liberated women as nagging and bitchy.

The focus of Women's Week should be women. It should include in its activities the broad spectrum of interests that "women" includes, but the focus should be on the female half of the world.

I am not directly involved in the planning of International Women's Week activities but, as a woman striving to be free, I am discouraged by this loss of solidarity.

Monica Cronin
Amherst

We need open-minded exchange

For people afraid of losing their minds, UMass can be a dangerous place. Recently the Newman Center posted an undocumented article accusing the CARP student group of mind control.

While I can appreciate the Church's desire to defend my sanity, the best way to learn about the "carpies" is still to approach their table and ask a few questions, and if you want to hear their ideas go to one of their lectures.

Let's make the university a place of open-minded exchange of ideas, not a breeding place for superstition, ignorance, and fear.

The Schlitz Classic Movie Series
African Queen

Starring
Humphrey Bogart, Katherine Hepburn & Robert Morley
Directed by John Huston

Humphrey Bogart stepped out of his traditional tough-guy mold and delivered an Academy Award winning performance as the skipper of a broken-down riverboat, "The African Queen." As Charlie Allnut, the heavy drinking, survivalist captain, Bogart found a perfect foil in Katherine Hepburn, the prim spinster, sister of a missionary whose church is destroyed by invading Germans during World War I. Forced to take Hepburn along with him, Bogart finds himself engaged in a duel of wits with his passenger as she attempts to "reform" him and they both battle the elements. Laughs, excitement and drama are skillfully interwoven in this all-time classic that provides a showcase for the talents of two great performers.

BLT is not a sandwich

Captain Mike Vilardi remembers it this way:

"It was the night before the entrees were due and we were having trouble deciding on a name. It was twelve o'clock and I was down at Munchies with Ned. He looked at the board behind the counter and said, 'how about BLT?' At first we were going to call the team Bright, Little and Tough, but since we were wrestlers and most of the original guys were in the lighter weights we called it Bold, Little and Tough."

This is the story of BLT, the champion intramural wrestling team from Coolidge Tower in Southwest whose members accomplished something they'll be telling their grandchildren about.

It's the story of Vilardi, a former UMass wrestler who took more than ten guys, most of whom had never wrestled before, and showed them enough moves to hold their own with any grappler.

But mostly, it's the story of what a bunch of friends can accomplish if they have enough heart.

It all started back in October, when Vilardi decided he would like to organize an independent team for the intramural tournament in the Spring Semester. He and four other guys from the third floor of Coolidge started going over to Hoyden Gymnasium and tumbled around. It was half serious at first. After all Marc Schuback, Barry Wilkinson, Jerry Epstein and Ned Futterman had no reason to believe they might begin an intramural dynasty.

"I started showing them some moves," Vilardi said. "Everybody really took to it and liked it. Soon guys were rolling around the halls practicing their moves."

Matt Berman from across the hall expressed an interest. Larry Wolff from the 11th floor said he would like to wrestle. Soon Vilardi, and 1980 intramural champ Gary Curelop were working with the men twice a week on the mats on the 19th floor of Washington Tower. They committed themselves to not only entering, but winning the intramural tournament.

The interest didn't decline after intersession. With individual competition offered in 15 separate weight categories, they wanted a competitor in each division. John Shea from John Adams Tower at 140 pounds filled the gap for those weights under 170. What BLT needed were guys who could wrestle in the heavy weights and, ultimately, someone who could represent Bold, Little and Tough in the unlimited weight division.

I was over at the DC (Dining Commons) one night and I met Dan Maselli," Vilardi said. "He had a wrestling jacket on and I asked him if he would like to wrestle. He became our 180 pound entrant. Dan was able to get our 190 pound guy, Mike Olveria. I talked Tony Pasquale (a guard on the UMass football team) into coming out." Pasquale was the unlimited weight entrant.

"What we had was a whole bunch of guys who had never wrestled before," Vilardi said. "I had to make a team out of them in a couple weeks."

Fred Oates, a 185 pound man from the 11th floor of Coolidge, completed the squad.

"What we had was a whole bunch of guys who had never wrestled before, Vilardi said. "I had to make a team out of them in a couple of weeks."

Former manager Laurie Rogato was replaced by Karen DeStefano of Coolidge, who kept times in practice and provided encouragement.

We owe everything to Mike," Matt Berman said. "He was the only one who had the vaguest idea of what he was doing. We wouldn't have been able to hold it together without him."

Up to that point, this vagabond group of grapplers had been surviving on heart. But how well could they expect to do in a campus wide tournament that included some good talent, including some strong dudes and some men who were cut from coach Dave Amato's varsity? Delta Chi, a perennial powerhouse, had four former champions competing.

"I really thought we were going to win," Vilardi said. "I underestimated the competition to be honest with you. I figured they (the competition) weren't going to have all the moves I showed our guys. Plus we were in shape."

Wilkinson, Schubach, Epstein, Pasquale, and Berman were all defeated in their attempts to make the finals of the tourney. Pasquale's effort was perhaps the biggest gut ripper. He lost to Marco Manzanares, the eventual unlimited weight champion, only 3-0.

That meant that eight of the original 13 BLT entrants had made the finals, held before more than 100 enthusiasts at Boyden Auxiliary Gym last Tuesday.

Futterman wrestling five pounds above his weight beat Kevin Bengston, last year's champ, in the semi finals, but was pinned by Kevin Paszko in the 130 pound match.

Two other wins from Mike Oliveira (11-3, 190 pounds) and Fred Oates (pin at 185 pounds) plus second places from Wolff (1-5), Curreiop (1-4), Maselli (1-8), and Shea (1-4) made a dream come true for Bold, Little and Tough. They won the intramural championship.

"A lot of them lost, but everyone gave 100 percent," Vilardi said. "I wouldn't put anyone else on the mat because of that."

Cagers look to mow Big Green

By KEVIN CULLEN
Collegian Staff

When you roll up Route 91 into Hanover, nestled in the heart of New Hampshire's lowlands, Dartmouth College appears, almost out of thin air, in all its Ivy League splendor and all its Ivy League money.

It is there, amidst the preps and bucks, that the University of Massachusetts women's basketball team travels Sunday afternoon for a 2 p.m. game with the Big Green in the opening round of the Eastern Association for Intercollegiate Athletics for Women (EAIAW) playoffs.

UMass, seeded seventh in Region 1 A, which consists of the New York and New England areas, will take on second seed Dartmouth in what is probably the ideal draw in the eight team playoff structure. The winner of Sunday afternoon's contest will face the winner of the Queen's (New York) Syracuse game, thus bypassing first seed favorite St. John's until perhaps a playoff final.

UMass head coach Mary Ann Odarski has no special game plan, but has made a vow:

"I will guarantee one thing," Ozdarski says. "We will play better than we did during February."

February proved to be one of the least endearing months of the year for UMass. Entering the month with a 12-7 record, while ranked second in New England, UMass stumbled through a 2-6 February slump, brought on by some cold shooting and, Ozdarski believes, some cold heads.

"It (the slump) was all psychological," Ozdarski said yesterday. "So much of the game of basketball is mental toughness. We've got the physical ability; it's the mental toughness that I worry about."

UMass must also worry aobut taking on Dartmouth in Alumni Gym, where the Big Green have lost just two of 14 games all season, one to Rutgers, which is ranked second in the nation, the other to Bishop's (which also beat UMass), the top ranked team in Canada.

While it would be unfair and, perhaps, incorrect to label Dartmouth a one woman team, it is not too far from the truth. Big Green center Gail Koziara is big (6'2") but far from green. The junior from Chicopee led the nation in rebounding last year, and averaged 20.2 points and 16.6 rebounds per game this season. It was Koziara's 20 points and 30 rebounds that led Dartmouth to a 58-44 victory over UMass at the Cage three weeks ago.

"When they beat us (Feb. 11), my kids were intimidated," Ozdarski admits. "Koziara is tough. But you also have to be able to get your shot blocked and stay in the ball game. You can't give up just because one thing went wrong. And that's what we'll have to do Sunday — stay in the game."

Besides Koziara, Dartmouth has Ann Deacon, who averaged 14.5 points per game, and was named MVP in the Ivy League tournament which the Big Green ran away with. Senior forward Amy Nelson grabs whatever Koziara doesn't and has averaged 8.7 rebounds.

"This is our first appearance in post season play," Dartmouth head coach Chris Weligus said. "We have no athletic scholarships here, and the Ivy League has always had a problem with credibility, so this is very important to us."

It is equally important for UMass, which has a score to settle with Dartmouth and faces the prospect of playing their final game this season should they lose.

"Lose?" Ozdarski asks with surprise. "Oh, no. We won't lose. We're going up there to win."

Neil Connolly, here performing on the still rings, will compete for UMass Saturday as the gymnasts take on Springfield College Saturday at 8 p.m. in Boyden.

SC Chiefs visit Mass gymmen in final meet

By ELIZABETH McGOWAN
Collegian Staff

More than half of the University of Massachusetts men's gymnastics team will be competing in their last collegiate level meet this Saturday at 8 p.m. when the Minutemen take on Springfield College in Boyden Auxiliary Gym.

"This last meet will be a tribute to the seniors," UMass coach Roy Johnson said. "There are seven seniors on the squad, quite a few to have graduate in one year."

"This meet may come down to the final event, the horizontal bar. We beat Springfield last year and it sure would be nice to go out winners this year," Bob Lamb, ranked sixth in the East in long horse vaulting, said.

Statistically, UMass and Springfield have close records. Springfield, with a record of 7-4 is ranked as one of the top four teams in Division II. UMass is ranked 34th in Division I although they have a 7-3 overall record.

The UMass gymmen will be looking to beat their high score of the season, a 253.45 which they gathered against Temple University last Saturday. Springfield holds only a .15 edge over UMass, as 253.60 was their high mark of the season.

All around performers for the Minutemen will be freshman Bob Gauthier, senior Mark Flanagan and senior co-captains Hugh O'Neall and Tommy Thomson.

Other seniors performing will be Steve Craig, in the floor exercises and vaulting, Tim Barry and Paul O'Neil on the pommel horse, and Bob Lamb on the floor exercises, the vaulting and the high bar.

Women gymnasts host Cortland State

The University of Massachusetts women's gymnastics team will host Cortland State and the University of Rhode Island tomorrow afternoon in the final regular season meet of the season. The tri-meet, which takes place at 1:30 p.m. in Boyden, will be the final home appearance of two graduating seniors; Karen Clemente and Colleen Thornton.

After the meet, only the EAIAW (Eastern Association for Intercollegiate Athletics for Women) championships remain.

The gymnasts are 7-2, including their most recent win, a 131.30 to 130.30 squeaker past southern Connecticut State College.

Letters please

The Collegian sports staff adds a new feature to its pages this week. Beginning next Thursday, we will publish comments, opinions and questions from the UMass community on a weekly basis. All letters dealing with any aspect of UMass athletics are welcome and should be sent to "The Minuteman Speaks", Collegian Office, c/o Steve Freker, sports staff, or just drop your letter off at the sports desk in the Collegian office.

SGA runners debate issues

By PAUL BASKEN
Collegian Staff

Candidates for the offices of Student Government Association co-presidents spoke out last night as WZZZ-FM conducted an interview with members of the four tickets.

There are eight people running for the two positions.

The candidates, speaking in reverse order from their placement on the ballot, were allotted a total of ten minutes in which to respond to four questions. Topics for questions included co-ed bathrooms, financial aid, and control of the Student Union Building.

Richard LaVoice, who shares a ticket with Ruth Mazzola, commented on the need to increase financial aid and oppose tuition hikes, saying, "The major issue affecting students is the inability to stay in school."

Ruth Mazzola addressed the issue of co-ed bathrooms, saying, "We feel that the students should decide for themselves what they should do and how they should do it."

LaVoice expressed their opposition to the newly constructed mini-store, calling it "a tourist attraction."

James P. Nagle, running with Robert Crowley, talked of the importance of financial aid for University of Massachusetts students, citing the need for "student pressure at the state level, not the national level."

Nagle called the construction of the mini-store "ridiculous," and said such actions "could be prevented in the future by legal action against the store."

Crowley said their platform favored co-ed bathrooms with their slogan, "free for all in every stall."

Edward Lee, running mate of Nelson Acosta, questioned the proposed single-sex bathrooms, saying the load of enforcement will fall on the resident assistants.

Acosta said the problems with financial aid are occuring because "the government is not sensitive to student issues."

Acosta said he sees the mini-store as a symbol of the fact that "students do not have control over things that affect them." Referring to the Student Union Building, he said, "One of these days, the roof is going to collapse."

Kevin Mangan, speaking for himself and co-candidate Larry Kocot, commented on the issues, saying, "the most pressing is that everything is going up except for financial aid." He said, "If I didn't receive financial aid I would not be going here."

He also talked of his concern to settle the bathroom issue "according to the will of the students."

The interviews will be aired over WZZZ-FM (91.7) tonight at 8:30.

Bottoms up, so is consumption

By PAUL BELVAL
Collegian Correspondent

Since the drinking age in Massachusetts was raised from ages 18 to 20 nearly two years ago, alcohol consumption among dormitory residence has increased, several University of Massachusetts administrators said recently.

"College students are drinking more now," Field said and he believes that the higher drinking age is partially responsible.

Before the age was raised to twenty, parties with live entertainment were held and beer was sold singularly out of kegs. Field said that this way, "you could control how fast it was going out." Bartending courses were also offered on campus, and students were taught to recognize when a party was getting out of hand, he said.

But since most of the students in the dorms are underage, this type of party can no longer be held, he said.

Now, Field said, "People buy alcohol and bring it back to the dorm and drink it. There is less socialization and more consumption.

A survey done by Director of Mental Health David Craft in November, 1979 bears out Field's opinions.

Craft said, "As of that time, 18 and 19-year-olds were drinking more, not less."

Craft also said he agreed with Field that the decrease of parties with kegs, along with the inability of 18 and 19-year-olds to go to bars, is at fault.

"We removed one set of controls," Craft said. "The drinking went underground."

"Underage students did not frequent bars anymore, but that was more than offset by the number who drank in dorm rooms," he said.

Ken Burnham, Assistant Director of the Office of Residential Life, agreed.

"It's obvious," Burnham said. "There has been more and more incidence of discipline related to alcohol. A tour of the dumpsters on a Monday morning is clearly indicative of the drinking in the dorms on the weekend.

Burnham said the school's policy on underage drinking in the dorm is to leave the students alone, unless a problem arises requiring discipline.

"We don't endorse it. We know it happens. We don't go around I.D.ing people unless it gets out of hand. If they're doing it in a room, we don't invade the room," he said.

Commuter gov't elections resume

By KEN BAZINET
Collegian Correspondent

Elections for the Commuter Assembly, the area government for off-campus students, are scheduled to resume today after they were halted Friday when a candidate's name was found missing from the ballot.

The election will be held today from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. in the lobby of the Student Union Building.

Jose Tolson, spokesman for the Commuter Collective, said that a spelling error in the original ballot had occured with the name of candidate Thomas Marty.

In an effort to keep the elections uncontroversial, Tolson prepared a second ballot, this time excluding Marty's name altogether.

"It's no one's mistake but my own," said Tolson, adding that it may have been less confusing to have kept the original ballot than to stop the assembly's elections.

Before Tolson had detected the second error, he was approached by Marty, and it was decided then that it would be in the best interest to postpone the election.

"The Commuter Assembly elections in the past have gone well, but there are still problems that have to be worked out," Tolson said.

Tolson hopes that today's election will run efficiently and without controversy.

The Commuter Assembly is a 13-member policy board which functions on behalf of the commuter students at UMass.

Reagan proposes major loan cutbacks

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Reagan is proposing major curbs on the federal government's role as a low-interest money lender, a move that will mean fewer subsidized loans for home-buyers, farmers, students, small businesses and dozens of other types of borrowers.

As part of an overall plan to pare back government activity in the economy, the administration said it wants to reduce new loans and loan guarantees through 1982 by 11 percent, or nearly $35 billion, from the levels anticipated by former President Jimmy Carter.

Among the programs that would be affected are the Federal Housing Administration, which insures home mortgates; student loan programs; the Rural Electrification Administration; Farmers Home Administration; farm commodity loans; Veterans Administration; Small Business Administration and the Export-Import Bank.

Cuts also would be made in lending for foreign military sales, energy development, rural housing, consumer cooperatives, housing rehabilitation, economic development, veterans, the District of Columbia, aircraft purchase, merchant shipbuilding and credit unions.

The Carter administration projected the government would extend $154 billion in new credit this fiscal year, including $58 billion in direct subsidized loans and $96 billion in guarantees that the government will cover private-loan defaults. For 1982, the former administration projected new credit would total $149 billion.

Reagan's proposals, most of which require congressional approval, would cut credit by $13.6 billion in 1981 and $21 billion in 1982.

The immediate impact of the proposals would be that some people either would have to borrow money at higher interest rates or they would decide not to borrow because of the unfavorable terms, Reagan's budget director, David A. Stockman, told reporters Saturday.

But as loan demand falls and reduced federal lending makes more money available to private lenders, commercial interest rates will fall from their current high levels, he said.

While the lending cuts would provide some modest reductions in federal spending, said Stockman, the main reason for the action is to return greater control over allocation of credit to private markets.

He said the federal government now accounts for approximately one-third of all lending activity in the country, its outstanding loans top $800 billion — compared with $200 billion in 1970 — and new credit is being extended at a rate of $150 billion a year.

"It's in that context of just explosive growth that we feel it is critically important to begin to reassess and wind down this enormous increase in federal credit activity," he said.

50 arrested by Colombians

BOGOTA, Columbia — The Colombian military has arrested more than 50 people in its hunt for the guerrillas who kidnapped and killed American linquist Chester A. Bitterman 3rd, an army source said yesterday.

Additional arrests were expected, said the source, who asked not to be identified.

Bitterman was buried Saturday in the remote outpost of Loma Linda, said a spokesman for the Summer Institute of Linguistics, his employer. Bitterman's wife, her parents and two young daughters were present for the funeral in the windswept village on Colombia's rolling plains — about 300 miles southeast of Bogota — which serves as the institute's field headquarters. The spokeman said the family left for the United States yesterday.

Guerrillas shot Bitterman through the heart Saturday morning, 47 days after they had kidnapped him and accused him of being a CIA agent.

The guerrillas had charged that the Bible-translating institute was a front for the CIA. It demanded that the institute leave the country. But the institute refused, and yesterday, the Colombian government backed up that refusal.

"The institute does not have to leave the country," Government Minister German Zea Hernandez said.

"There is a contract, and it may have been terminated if it were up just a year from now, but I don't see any reason for the institute having to leave the country under pressure of an atrocious crime," he said.

Hijacked plane lands in Syria

DAMASCUS, Syria — The hijacked Pakistanian airliner with more than 100 hostages aboard landed early today in Damascus, Syria, and Syrian officials immediately started negotiations with the hijackers by radio from the control tower, Syrian authorities said.

Syrian officials said the plane touched down at about 1:15 a.m. local time (6:15 p.m. EST) and was parked in a remote area of the international airport. All doors of the plane remained shut, they said.

A reporter at the aiport hotel said it was too dark to determine what kind of security was present.

The departure of the plane yesterday from Kabul, where it landed last Monday, followed Pakistan's crackdown on political opponents and the government's refusal to meet the hijackers' demand for release of Pakistani prisoners.

Shortly after leaving Kabul, a Pakistani spokesman said the pilot of the Pakistani International Airlines Boeing 720 radioed to a passing PIA aircraft that he had been told to fly in the direction of Damascus. The three men who hijacked the plane on a domestic Pakistani flight last Monday have threatened their 111 hostages — including three Americans citizens and two other U.S. residents — with death.

noon detonation dealine passed without the threatened explosion. No money was paid.

State police ordered the fully booked 504-room hotel cleared for 2½ hours — the first evacuation ever of an Atlantic City casino hotel — after a would-be extortionist's letters threatened to blow up the $138 million facility.

Some 1,200 employees and 750 overnight guests were quietly asked to leave, and hundreds of morning gamblers were denied access to gaming tables and slot machines, as tight-lipped FBI agents, state troopers and policemen waited for the deadline to pass. Police also rousted several shopkeepers and scores of homeowners within a block of the casino hotel.

No bombs were found, no ransom was paid and Caesars' casino and hotel operations returned to normal by 12:30 p.m., officials said.

Foreign policy creates clash

WASHINGTON — The Reagan administration's foreign policy appears headed for stormy weather in Congress this week, with Democrats striving to scuttle a weapons sale to Saudi Arabia and pressing for curbs on U.S. military aid to El Salvador.

On the economic front, Congress will get a look at the fine print of President Reagan's proposed 1982 budget — the information it needs to begin work on administration requests for spending cuts totalling slightly more than $45 billion.

Reagan already has detailed about $34.7 billion in the reductions he wants, and House and Senate budget officials are expecting information tomorrow on the remainder — more than $10 billion.

Several Democratic senators reacted sharply to the administration's announcement Friday that it wants to sell to Saudi Arabia extra fuel tanks and Sidewinder air-to-air missiles to enhance the range and firepower of F-15 warplanes already sold to the Saudis.

Sen. Joseph Biden, D-Del., said a resolution to disapprove the sale would be introduced as soon as the administration formally submits its proposal. He and other critics charged that upgrading the offensive capabilities of the Saudi F-15s would increase tensions in the Middle East and might endanger Israel's security.

Judy vows to die by execution

MICHIGAN CITY, Ind. — Preparations for the execution of Steven T. Judy began Sunday as the convicted murderer counted the hours until his walk to the electric chair and an escape from a society he says rejected him.

Judy, 24, convicted of raping and murdering Terry L. Chasteen and drowning her three children in April 1979, was scheduled to die sometime after midnight Sunday.

He rejected all efforts to stop his execution and has said he welcomes death because he does not want to spend his life in prison and feels he is beyond rehabilitation.

Judy would be the first person executed in the United States since Jesse Bishop died in the Nevada gas chamber in 1979 and the fourth to be executed since the Supreme Court revived the death penalty in 1976.

A direct phone line was set up between the prison and Gov. Robert D. Orr in case Judy changed his mind. The governor and State Clemency Commission refused Friday to grant a stay requested by the American Civil Liberties Union, and the U.S. Supreme Court also refused to halt the execution at the request of a fellow death row inmate.

His foster parents, Mary and Robert Carr of Indianapolis, went to the prison about 8 a.m. to spend the day with him. His natural mother Myrtle L. Judy and 22-year-old brother Danny visited him Saturday.

3 dead as Israeli ship sinks

BALTIMORE — An Israeli bulk carrier ship with 35 crewmen aboard sank 96 miles southeast of Bermuda on yesterday, leaving three crewmen dead and others floundering in mountainous seas and high winds, the U.S. Coast Guard said.

Yesterday evening, Coast Guard Petty Officer Edward Girard reported 11 crewmembers had been plucked alive from the ocean, while three others pulled from the water were dead.

One man was rescued by a Navy helicopter and the others by merchant vessels that sped to the scene, but rescue operations were hampered by severe weather as night fell.

Lt. Robert Hoey, duty officer for Coast Guard operations in New York, said there was "a definite possibility" that more were dead, explaining that "we are still on the information gathering stage."

Hoey said those rescued were on different ships and it was difficult to confirm their identities and conditions.

Lt. Thomas Johns of the Portsmouth, Va., Coast Guard rescue station said crewmen of the bulk carrier Mezada jumped into two life rafts and two life boats after the ship sank at about 9:15 a.m.

Private vessels in the area, the Navy frigate Paul, a Navy helicopter from Bermuda and planes from the Coast Guard and Navy were sent to the scene, where waves were as high as 24 feet.

Sylvan gov't council formed

By BRIAN SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

After three failures to organize a student government in the Sylvan area, students have formed a transitional council to govern the area for the remainder of the semester.

The council plans to re-write Sylvan's constitution to clear up the power structure of the formal government and handle financial commitments until a permanent government can be instituted in the fall, Robert Zimmerman, meditator of the council and a Student Senator, said.

The council has been made up of two representatives from each dorm with more members being elected at large from each of Sylvan's three dormitories, Donald Atkinson, president of Cashin Dormitory, said.

Sylvan was left without a government since last May when there were no candidates for the planned election, former president Chris Ferretti said.

Two other attempts at elections failed last semester when the results were disallowed by the Undergraduate Student Senate because of election violations, Zimmerman said.

After these elections failed, Ferretti resigned due to personal reasons, leaving Sylvan without a government, Atkinson said.

Zimmerman and Atkinson said they felt part of the problem lies in apathy of residents in the area when it comes to government affairs.

"I feel the council will be successful at putting the Sylvan government back on the right course, but more student involvement is needed to keep it going," Zimmerman said.

Battle against sexual harassment to begin

By DEBORAH SANDOCK
Collegian Correspondent

An organization at the University of Massachusetts is making a drive to combat sexual harassment on campus through awareness workshops and policy recommendations.

Students against Sexual Harassment (SASH), an organization of the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy's (SCERA) Women's Issues Team, will begin a public awareness campaign before spring break, according to Elli Bagli, staff coordinator.

"We see the period before vacation as educational, then afterwards we hope to get some action and results," Bagli said.

The workshops, developed by SASH to educate students and faculty about the existing problems of sexual harassment, will be made available immediately after spring break in dormitories and classrooms, Bagli said.

These workshops, which would be for both men and women, will give definitions of sexual harassment. According to a SASH memorandum sent to all heads of residences and resident assistants, extreme sexual harassment of a student occurs, "When an individual in authority exercises or attempts to exercise that authority and power to control, influence, or affect the academic success or future career of that student in exchange for sexual favors."

Also included in the workshops will be role play situations and open discussions, Bagli said. Information will also be given about how to get involved in the fight against sexual harassment, and what to do if a student is confronted with this problem.

"Many students are afraid to or don't how to go about reporting sexual harassment," Bagli said.

A formal grievance procedure has been developed by SASH, and needs the support and approval of the Undergraduate Student Senate and Administration. The procedure will establish a student and administrative committee which would study grievances, conduct private hearings, and recommend action. Resultant findings could involve suspension or overriding the faculty member's tenure, Bagli said.

Presently, a student can bring any complaint of sexual harassment to the chairperson of the department involved, the University Ombudsman office, an officer of the Administration, or a student advocate. Situations such as these are usually handled in an informal manner, Bagli said, and the student must deal directly with the person accused of harassment. There is no protection or reprisals in these cases, and no formal procedure or standard of justice.

In addition, a bill filed in the Massachusetts State Legislature by Rep. Barbara Gray, R-Framingham is supported by SASH. According to a SASH publication, "The bill would establish a person's right to be free from sexual harassment, prohibit sexual harassment in the conduct of public employees, and establish a grievance procedure for state employees who have been victims of sexual harassment."

Paula Barnes, 20, took 40 winks during the marathon dancers lunch break Saturday, after having danced for 19 hours. The marathon, sponsored by the PIKE fraternity, brought in roughly $14,000 in pledges and donations, all of which will be donated to the Multiple Sclerosis Society.

Couples dance for dollars, raise money to fight MS

By MARK L. CURELOP

The scenes were not reminiscent of the 1920's dance marathons.

At the end of the 29 hour dance marathon for Multiple Sclerosis, 20 out of the original 36 entered couples were still dancing in the Student Union Ballroom Saturday night.

Sponsored by Pi Kappa Alpha fraternity and the National Multiple Sclerosis Society Connecticut River Valley Chapter, the marathon is expected to raise over $14,000 once the pledges are collected.

"That includes the canisters and door to door campaigning," said Rich Goldman and Matt Kontoff, co-chairmen of the event.

The marathon was part of Pi Kappa Alpha's annual community service event.

"MS provided all expenses," said Kontoff, including a disc jockey and music.

Last year 26 couples entered and 16 remained dancing for 48 hours hours totaling approximately $12,000 for MS, compared to this year's entries.

"It took the whole house to do the organizing," said Bill Silva, Pi Kappa Alpha president.

"We had the house recruiting in the Hatch, in the dorms and even in the Amherst high school," he said.

At the end of the evening when the dancers were gone, the members of the Pi Kappa Alpha fraternity watched the 11 p.m. news. When WGGB TV-Channel 40 showed clips of the marathon, the men clapped their hands for MS.

Dairy Day, Apple Day and Corn Day were held here at the Massachusetts Agricultural College during "Farmer's Week" according to the March 7, 1911 issue of the College Signal, M.A.C.'s campus paper.

At a "smoker" held that week in the Drill Hall (where Bartlett Hall is now located) cigarettes were furnished by the New England agent of S. Anargyros. Participants had their choice of dancing or card-playing at the social event.

The College Signal's "Campus Calendar" included such items as the Glee Club and Mandolin Club rehearsals, a Junior Landscape meeting and a lecture on "The Horticultural Awakening in New England."

Fatima Turkish Blend Cigarettes advertised "They cost only 15 cents for 20, which gives you 10 additional."Pennant coupons were offered with each package, 25 coupons were reedemable for a felt college pennant.

Frank S. O'Brien. Livery, Feed and Hack Stable offered "Hacks for Funerals, Weddings, Parties."

The floriculture department sold "excellent roses, carnations, violets and chysanthemums" at French Hall.

On March 8, 1968 presidential elections were beginning to make the news. New York Governor Nelson Rockefeller was considering running in the Republican presidential nomination.

A "black box containing batteries, wires, a timing device and a liquid center" were found in Whitmore. At the time of the story authorities were not sure if the bomb was real.

A new sport, "Donkey Ball" billed as the "world's craziest sport" was featured for Campus Chest Week 1968. The game was played from the backs of trained donkeys. Faculty members led by Dean of Students William Field played "Student Leaders" led by the Student Government Association presidents.

Rabbi discusses death and dying

By ELISE GREENBAUM
Collegian Correspondent

Death is the one word which is seldom discussed in our society, and fears of dying and the unknown often lead people to an unconscious belief in their own immortality, said Dr. Earl Grollman in a lecture on death and dying last week.

Grollman, a rabbi at Beth El Temple in Belmont, said he never received any type of training in methods of dealing with dying individuals and their families as a rabbinical student.

There is an urgent need for study in the field of family crisis intervention, and the inability of many adults to deal with death contributes to the confusion children experience in dealing with death, Grollman said.

Grollman, who spoke at the Campus Center, is the author of several books on the subject of death and dying, and is a member of the Bereavement Team of the Community School of Psychiatry at Harvard University.

Euphemisms used by adults when confronting a child with death are particularly alarming to the child, Grollman said. According to the results of a recent survey cited by Grollman, in almost one-half of all cases, children learn about the death of someone close to them through this indirect method.

For example, Grollman said, children often equate the death of a relative who is said to be "taking a long journey" with the eventual return home by the person.

Another example is the parent who explains the death of a family pet to a child with the euphemism of being "put to sleep", and instills fears in the child of going to bed at night.

Dr. Earl Grollman spoke on death and dying at the Campus Center last week.

Grollman said children often believe that the death of a close relative is punishment for their own bad behavior, or for wishing some sort of harm upon the person who died.

The best teaching method to help children understand and deal with death is to allow them to go through the entire bereavement process, including attending the funeral and cemetary services.

"Children understand inclusion more than exclusion," said Grollman, "and allowing them to express their feelings will undoubtedly lead to a clearer conception of death."

P.E. dept. tackles racism/sexism

"None of us is responsible for what we learn, but we are responsible for unlearning, said an associate professor Physical Education at the University of Massachusetts.

Pat Griffin, has designed and now teaches the course "Race and Sex Stereotyping in Physical education," which she said developed in part from her concern with how physical education teachers interact with the boys and girls in their classes.

The course is designed for juniors in the physical education department who will be student teachers next year. Griffin said she wants her students to be more sensitive to the human beings they will be teaching. She said she hopes next year student teachers will be more aware of racial and sexual stereotypes. "Most of us have not had much interracial experience. We're not familiar with other cultures," Griffin who received her masters in Sports Studies at UMass said.

Currently the course is an elective, but next year Griffin who also holds a doctorate from the UMass School of Education, said the course will be integrated into the requirements for student teachers. The class consists of approximately 28 students, half male, half female, all of whom are white.

Davidovich performs with sensitivity

Bella Davidovich
FAC Concert Hall, March 9, 1981

By BRIAN YANKEE
Collegian Correspondent

Last Friday night, the Russian-born pianist Bella Davidovich presented one of the finest concerts of this year's F.A.C. concert season. The program, which consisted of the Sonata in B flat by Franz Schubert and Four Ballades (nos. 1-4) by Chopin, was performed with remarkable taste and sensitivity, leaving the audience of 400 wanting more. Mme. Davidovich demonstrated the talent which has made her one of Europe's leading concert pianists. She has recently emigrated to the U.S. and is now touring extensively throughout this country; performing nearly sixty concerts this season alone.

Before the first piece, Mme. Davidovich paused for about a minute to gather all her strength; a strength which remained constant throughout the performance, giving every note played character and feeling. The opening chord of the Schubert was filled with an intensity that could be felt all over the hall. The piece itself is very melodious, and requires all the sensitivity and technical facility which only a true virtuoso like Davidovich possesses.

The second half of the concert consisted of Mme. Davidovich's specialty: the works of Frederic Chopin. Mme. Davidovich is considered to be one of the world's greatest living interpreters of Chopin's music, and one could understand why after hearing her performance of the Four Ballades. The highly technical passages that are so characteristic of Chopin's music were played flawlessly, but also very musically. All too often. Chopin is turned into one grand exercise, devoid of any emotion. Not so with Mme. Davidovich.

Hopefully, Mme. Davidovich will return to UMass in the future to once again demonstrate what it is that make a musician a true artist.

Soviet emigree pianist Bella Davidovich gave a solo recital at the FAC Concert Hall Friday.

Pan Hellenic Council elects the new executive governing board

The UMass Pan Helenic Council last week elected their new executive board for 1981-1982.

Loring Barnes, from Chi Omega Sorority, a BDIC major concentrating in Public Relations, was elected president over Leslie Hyman from Iota Gamma Upsilon sorority.

Hyman, a Human Services major, class of 1982 was unanimously elected Vice-President by the voting members.

According to the Pan Hellenic Council constitution, a candidate who lost may run for a lower office, said present Pan Hellenic president Erica Helfrich.

The Pan Hellenic Council is the governing Board of UMass Sororities with each house having one vote.

Marie Morgan, a sophomore business administration major from Alpha Chi Omega, was elected Treasurer defeating Marcy Fink from Sigma Delta Tau Sorority.

Unanimously elected secretary was Karen Wegryzyn, a sophomore political science major from Chi Omega Sorority.

Newly elected president Loring Barnes said she sees the executive board as a cohesive unit.

"I'm looking forward to work with the Inter-Fraternity Council and telling Greeks what we are all about," she said.

In related business it was announced that installation for all newly elected officers will be at 7 tonight on the 10th floor of the Campus Center.

In other business, Helfrich announced that the Greek Area would be expanding for the first time since 1963.

The national Office of Delta Zeta Sorority will be making a presentation tomorrow in room 905-909 of the Campus Center to interested members of the UMass community, she said.

UM Trustees OK Center for Aging

After three years the University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees approved plans at their last meeting in February for a Center for Aging to be established at all three UMass campuses.

The main site for the center, funded by the UMass president's office, will be the UMass Medical Center in Worcester, with offices at the Amherst and Boston Campuses, director Rosalie Woods said.

"The Center for Aging will serve as a focal point for aging on the campuses, as a catalyst for aging activities, as a conduit for information and as a means of obtaining support for aging activities," Wolf said.

Although the Center is comparable to others in the state, such as that at Boston University, Wolf said there isn't another aging center in the state in the scope of UMass' three- campus program.

It has not been determined exactly when the UMass Center will begin operating, Wolf said.

Campus committees, advisory boards and faculty members will staff the center which will use facilities already available on the campuses, Wolf said.

Depression swings The Wall

Widespread Depression Orchestra
Bluewall, March 6, 1981

F.C. Wyse
Collegian Correspondent

The Widespread Depression Orchestra brought their wares to Amherst Friday, recreating for an enthusiastic audience the spirit-and-dress- of America's heydey of artistic growth: the swing era. From the great Fletcher Henderson to Ricard Rogers, we heard the history of an art form kept alive and explained beautifully with the same vitality and direction fo the age it represents.

The band has been together for many years and save for the addition of a new singer last week, the personnel have remained much the same, even with their recent move to Manhattan. It seems they are intent on staying together and have made quite a mame for themselves.

Considering the sheer size of the Bluewall they did a magnificent job projecting acoustically across the expanse of our new "bat cave," and except for the problems amplifying the acoustic bass, they played a well-balanced and consistent show.

The band is originally from the New England-Vermont area and have been playing all the major clubs to packed houses. In and around the Boston area their name is sacred and one is fortunate to find even standing room at their concerts.

They have a pleasant stage presence, soft-spoken, friendly, yet professional and efficient, and it is clear that they enjoy performing, as it is both their passion and profession. This accounts for the driven evergy and ability to project their vitality as a group.

Polish rally to mark 1968 riots

WARSAW, Poland — With threatened industrial strikes two days away, Polish workers joined thousands of students at the University of Warsaw yesterday to commemorate riots that began there 13 years ago.

The common front was in stark contrast to the 1968 demonstrations, when police recruited workers to help quell month-long student disturbances that broke out March 8.

A spokesman for the independent labor federation Solidarity, meanwhile, speculated union leader Lech Walesa would meet with Premier Gen. Wojciech Jaruzelski today. The report could not be confirmed.

If it takes place, the meeting would be the first between the two leaders since Jaruzelski became premier in early February.

Meanwile, another ceremony with anti-Zionist overtones took place at a building in downtown Warsaw that housed security services during early Communist rule in Poland. The gathering of some 2,000 people at Rozdroze Square was organized by a new nationalist association called "Grunwald," comprised of former soldiers, wartime underground fighters and people calling themselves "victims of Stalinism."

At the university service, no uniformed police were outside the locked main gate where hundreds of passersby tried to get a look at the ceremonies inside. Student monitors checked identity cards at side gates and refused entry to anyone lacking a valid press or student card.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Talking to Ralph

One in a hand is worth . . .

An aspiring writer is always urged to avoid copying someone else's style—urged, instead, to develop one's own style, or so-called style. This is sometimes taxing, especially when you're hungover to the max on a Sunday afternoon, so it is excusable if one imitates on occasion.

The late Boston Globe columnist George Frazier was fond of compiling lists of things and people he considered bush. It is a fairly harmless way of letting off some steam on paper.

Kevin Cullen

The term bush is derived from bush-league, which is an adjective defined as "belonging to an inferior class or group of its kind."

With due apologies to Frazier, here's what I think is bush:

The Pub is bush.
Eddie Rabbit is bush.
The meatball subs in the Campus Center coffee shop are green; they are also bush.
Calvin Klein's are bush.
Springfield newscasts are bush.
Duck shoes are bush.
The Drake is so bush it's got character, but it's still bush.

Moonies are bush.
People who kick dogs are bush.
David Stockman is bush.
Whitmore is bush.
George Bush is bush.
People who stick gum under counter tops and tables in restaurants are bush.
Rita Jenrette is excessively bush.
Boston University is bush.
Rolling skating is bush.
Amherst Towing is bush.
People who leave their ski lifts tickets on their down-filled parkas two months after they've gone skiing are bush.
The entire state of Idaho, and all of its inhabitants, is bush.

Punkers are bush.
Preppies are bush.
K-Mart is bush.
Pygmies are bush men.
Poor Dick's is bush to the max.
The mini-store is bush.
Rolling Rock, Old Milwaukee, Falstaff, Milwaukee Premium, Ballantine Ale and Old English 800 are all bush.
Budweiser is not bush, but Anheuser is Busch.
Pro hockey is bush.
Curry Hicks Cage is bush.
Abba is bush.
Monogram sweaters are bush, as is anyone who wears them.

Cosmopolitan is trash—it is also bush.
Dallas is bush.
General Hospital, and everyone who watches it, is bush.
Plumbley's thinks it is classy, but it's bush.
"What's the story, Big D?" commercials so are bush.
The Valley Advocate is bush.
Pony's are cool—Nikes are bush.
Geraldo Rivera is bush.
Shrubberies are bush.

Walter Scott's "Personality Parade" in Parade magazine is bush.
The New York Yankees, and George Steinbrenner, are bush.
Chinese food is bush—unless you are drunk when you eat it, then it is all right.
Bleeding-heart liberals are bush, as are crazy conservatives.

Dan Rather is bush.
Gloria Stevens figure salons are bush.
Chicopee is bush.
Amherst College so is bush.
Ted Koppel is bush—he also looks like Alfred E. Neuman.
No Nukes bumpers stickers are bush.
More Nukes Less Kooks bumper stickers are bush, too.
The Moral Majority is bush.
Izods are bush—but they sell.

Letters

Students want professor tenured

It has come to our attention that the granting of tenure to Anne Mochon is being question by the Provost Loren Baritz. The issue involved is the quantity of work she has published, an issue the Provost has termed important for the granting of her tenure.

This is in spite of the fact that both the Art Department and the College enthusiastically support her.

Anne Mochon's reputation for excellence as a teacher is well known and reflected in the number of students who register for her classes each semester. Her level of expectation and preparedness demands 100 percent of herself and her students. She has been asked to serve on thesis committees of studio majors, for she illustrates a rare ability to integrate art history/criticism with art practice.

It is important in a large University to have a faculty of various experience to reflect and reinforce the social make-up of the student population. We have only four women faculty in the department and believe that letting Anne Mochon go would be a serious mistake.

Teaching competency is not reflected in publishing dimensions alone. Students and teachers alike stand to lose a great deal if Anne Mochon is denied tenure for having not emphasized this one consideration.

Letters to Dr. Baritz, Provost, will be extremely helpful. He must receive them by Tuesday, March 10.

Conservatism as intolerance

Setting: the Pub. Time: Saturday night. Actors: six "psuedo punks" and a barroom full of students. Circumstances: As a party theme we chose to dress in the latest punk fashion. The party was great—high spirits and some outlandish costumes. A good time. The action would have ended there had we not decided to go to the Pub. The Pub, that wonderful cultural Mecca, that oasis of the state of the art, patronized by educated, understanding, liberal-minded students—or so we thought.

Almost immediately upon our arrival the ridicule began. Our fellow students pushed and shoved us, directed vicious comments at us, told us we were "gay" and stole our hats. They seemingly felt compelled to stop the "new wave" trends—with us. How insensitive could these people be? The fact stands that we were condemned solely by our appearances, no questions asked.

There are increasing number of complaints about this country and this University reverting to the "fifties conservatism" with the Reagan administration on one hand and the banning of co-ed bathrooms on the other. Are you prepared to regress to the "dark ages?" Call yourselves students, say "we're liberal, we're conscious, we think."

Consider, however, the implications. Remember, the lessons don't stop on the weekends. It is one of the great virtues of college education which enables one to mature culturally as well as academically. If you see something different or controversial, do not condemn it, at least until you learn something about it. Saturday was a simple exercise of our rights. The rights to be different, experimental, and individual. It was sad that a bit of glitter inspired so much animosity.

Views headline with mixed motions

Friday's Collegian (3/6) contained a front page headline "Faculty Senate favors plan for individual Trustee boards." A more appropriate headline would have been "Faculty Senate spikes proposal to oust Knapp."

The original Rules Committee proposal for last Thursday's Special Meeting contained two motions. The first, as amended, recommends that:

...the Board of Regents, as they consider the proposed merger between Boston State College and UMass-Boston, investigate various governance alternatives for the University system including the establishment of individual boards of trustees for one or more of the existing components of the University system.

The second motion (which was indefinitely tabled by a vote of 33-12 read as follows:

That the Faculty Senate of UMass/Amherst recommends that the Board of Regents and the Board of Trustees re-examine the necessity of a President's Office for the University of Massachusetts system and the validity of maintaining such an office under reorganization.

If I may add a personal comment, I was distressed at the Student Senate initiative against the President's Office and the original Faculty Senate motions on grounds that both would weaken the unit of our state university with an urban, non-residential location where poorer, older, and more frequently non-white students are getting low-cost education of the quality we offer here in Amherst. Let us hang together lest we all hang separately.

Griffin said, "It's the white person's responsibility to learn about racism and teach ourselves."

The fact that "Some research shows white teachers interact more with white students," is a problem in gym classes, according to Griffin. She said certain sports are associated with blacks, like basketball and stereotypes tend to exclude them from others such as swimming.

"Often whites believe myths like a black is not intelligent enough to be a quarterback in football," she said.

In relation to sexual stereotypes, Griffin said "I wish we had men as a part of the teaching team, because I think it's important for men to take responsibility for teaching sexism," The class is currently tought by 4 females and difficulties for the lack of male teachers of the course; however two male members of the faculty attend class regularly as students. Griffin said if students had a male role model men would be more receptive to learning about sexism.

Griffin claims it is not just the teachers' stereotypes which act on the students, but students' stereotypes which act on each other. For example, boys pass the ball to boys even with girls on the team.

Griffin said she wants the teacher to take an active, affirmative stance to support all students regardless of sex, race, or athletic ability.

The objectives of the course are to make students aware of their stereotypes, and explore the effects of a racist/sexist teacher on students.

Also, the course aims to make student teachers aware of laws like Title 9 which mandates equal teams for boys and girls, and enable the student to plan a curriculum that includes a variety of activities.

They are nobody's fools

The Fools
Hangar One, March 6, 1981

By Julie Geanakakis and Timothy Tonner
Collegian Staff

Despite a stiff five dollar cover charge, 450 rock'n'rollers turned out on Friday night to see Boston's own jesting minstrels, The Fools and opening act, The Headlights.

Both bands gave their audience an impressive mixture of driving and mellow rock with the Headlights shiming on such classics as "You're Gonna Get What's Coming" and the familiar tune "Cocaine". This group continued to keep the audience on their feet and dancing beneath a tacky disco-ball that threw unnecessary glitter onto the rock and roll atmosphere.

Despite the five dollar cover, Mike Girard and the Fools receive a high-energy welcome from the crowd at the Hangar One Friday night.

Nobody seemed to mind the lighting as The Fools took the stage and sprung into "Night Out" from their premier LP entitled "Sold Out."

Surrounded by a tight group of musicians, lead vocalist Mike Girard, in bowtie and white shirt that hinted at the traditional Ray Davies get-up, shifted into a 50'style love balled with torchy lyrics called "Torture".

Girard exchange vocals throughout the performance with bass guitarist Doug Forman who proved strumming wasn't his noly talent.

The Fools deviated from their midly new wave repertoire with a reggae number "It's a Night for Beautiful Girls" and next reeled into "Psycho Chicken", the infamous and amusing hit single that featured Girard's theatrical antics with a rubber bird.

The high-energy sound of The Fools never dissipated; they carried on until 1:35 a.m. when they announced last call in the bar with the tune "That's It, Go Home".

The audience awaited an encore and summoned the boys back onstage and received such oldies as "All Day and All of The Night" with Rich Bartlett taking the guitar solo, and a funky rendition of "Mack the Knife.".

When asked about their future, bassist Forman responded, "We'll play as long as we can and when we drop, that's it." And that was it at Hangar One as The Fools and Headlights added to the rock and roll prestige that has deadened the former disco image of this establishment.

Private Lightning flashes

Private Lightning
Blue Wall, Mar. 7

By CHERYL SENTER
Collegian Staff

The Blue Wall was the eye of a storm Saturday night when Private Lightning struck the stage

As long lines started to form outside the Blue Wall a little after nine, inside, an already large crowd rocked to the catchy original new wave tunes of backup band Wavelength.

By 10:30 the Wall was packed with a diversified crowd which, in anticipation of Private Lightning, was cramming as close to the stage as possible.

At 10:40 the storm set in and Private Lightning struck the stage filling the air with music involving the intricate harmonizing of vocals, guitars and violins.

The humble New England rockers, Private Lightning, led by the Van Ness twins, Paul on Guitar and Patty on violin with; Adam Sherman, vocals; Steve Keith, bass; Eric Kaufman, keyboards and Scott Woodman, drums, play music which consists of a delicate balance of poetic lyrics and sophisticated instrumentals that flow togetner effortlessly song after song.

Patty Van Ness, an angelic looking woman, played like the devil with her bow on fire. Patty has no problem rockin' even though she was trained as a classical violinist. Due to her expertise with the instrument she does not have to use tactics such as wearing strategically placed electrical tape to get the crowds attention. Patty definitely adds a touch of class to the band.

During the tune "Bright City", Patty, with theatrical shyness, soloed showing her undeniable talent with the violin. Later in the show, Patty was joined by Eric Kaufman in a rocking violin duet during "I Can't Kiss You When Your Laughing".

Manchild, Adam Sherman, exuded intense sensual energy through his voice and facial expressions as he clung to the mike and poured his soul out to the crowd.

Saving their two radio hits, "Song of a Kite" and "Physical Speed" for the latter half of the show, Private Lightning rocked the Blue Wall audience non-stop till the lights came on. They encored twice; first with a smoking rendition of "Burning Love", which included antics such as Patty picking up a pair of sticks and playing along with Woodman, and Sherman attempting to duel guitars with lyrical genius, Paul Van Ness; and second, a boogeying tune "Hubert Humphrey Blues," where Kaufman got to display more of his keyboard talents.

After their final song, Private Lightning gathered front stage to take final bows, at which point an entourage of fans gathered to thank the band. One such dedicated fan, Carol Moore, 22, exclaimed, "In my three years at UMass, I have never been to the Bue Wall, and came tonight just to see them. I thought they were excellent, especially Patty...she makes the band." Moore's comments seemed to reflect the feelings of the entire audience.

In the world of rock, survivors will be the ones with talent. Private Lightning will survive.

Anti-Klan group out

The John Brown Anti-Klan Committee has been suspended as a Recognized Student Organization, Jim Murphy, chair of the Undergraduate Student Senate Governmental Affairs Committee and registrar of RSO groups announced yesterday.

Murphy said the group's constitution and RSO status was suspended because 10 active members did not exist. The group will be forbidden from acting or doing business as an RSO group until further notice, Murphy said.

Bomb maker speaks

John Aristotle Phillips, the Princeton University undergraduate who designed an atomic bomb from public documents for his junior thesis, will speak at the University of Massachusetts today.

Phillips, 26, who became an internationally-known figure because of his design of an atomic bomb, is vice-president of the World Federalists Association and chairman of the Fund For Secure Energy. He also has published a book entitled, "Mushroom, The True Story of the A-Bomb Kid."

Phillips will speak on "Nuclear Proliferation and the Arms Race". The event, which will be held at 8 p.m. in Campus Center room 163, is sponsored by the Commuter Collective and is free and open to the public.

Youth help sought

If you want to help disadvantaged youths in Belfast, Northern Ireland who have never had the opportunity to take a holiday in Ireland's countryside, then Simon Shields is the person to get in contact with.

Shields, a one-year exchange student from England, is organizing a group at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst to help out the Belfast-based Children's Community Holidays. He said the CCH is a charitable organization that "sponsors children between the ages of eight and 15 from both Protestand and Catholic backgrounds."

Persons interested in helping Shields raise money for the CCH can reach him at 447 Prince House in the Southwest Residential Area.

He added that Betty Williams, a Nobel Peace Prize recipient for her efforts in the peace movement in Northern Ireland, will be coming to UMass April 28 through the Distinquished Vistors Program and will also speak on the efforts of the CCH.

'Killer' worries cops

The public safety director of the University of Massachusetts said yesterday he is concerned about the "killer" game which has begun recently on campus because of the possibility of injuries.

"I don't like the idea of a game that uses guns. This is different from children playing cops and robbers," said Gerald O'Neil Director of Public Safety.

The idea of the game is to "assasinate" other players using plastic dart guns with three darts.

O'Neil said his concern was for the people who do not know about the game seeing the guns and thinking they are real.

"I don't know how realistic these guns are but at night someone might think they are real," he said.

He said UMass police have not received any calls concerning the game. He added that he did not know the rules of the game but raised the question of liability if someone was injured.

Arson on campus

An arson attempt was discovered by police investigating an incident at John Adams tower in the Southwest Residential Area yesterday at 12:46 a.m., police said. The suspects were throwing matches on a pile of newspapers in the 9th floor hall.

Also, Mike R. Willis, 19, of Greenfield was arrested Saturday at 6:30 a.m. for driving under the influence of alcohol, University of Massachusetts police said. Willis will be arraigned in Hampshire District Court today.

In another weekend incident, assaillants in an orange Chevette reportedly threw a rock at two pedestrians Saturday at 11 p.m.

The pedestrians were on North Pleasant Street near Knowlton residence hall in the Northeast Residential Area at the time of the incident, police said.

In another incident, a suspect threw coffee at two waitresses while waiting in line at the Worcester Snack Bar at 10 a.m. yesterday. The suspect said he was not satisfied with the service, police said. He apologized to the waitresses, who were not hurt, although their uniforms had coffee stains, police said.

for UMass. The hometown gymmen regained the lead, 214.20-211.40.

Nelson's dazzling high bar routine sealed the victory for the Minutemen. His 9.30 could not be beaten and his teammates combined to win the event, 43.25-41.95. Gauthier finished second with an 8.65 and O'Neall's 8.55 put him in a tie for third place with two Springfield competitors.

Stand out Gauthier, earned top laurels in the all around competition, gathering a high of 52.15. Springfield's Jeff Albert turned in second place with a 49.80 total and O'Neall hit for third place, scoring 49.20.

The last meet of the season was highlighted by a special tribute to UMass senior gymnasts. Lamb, Barry, Craig, Paul O'Neil, Flanagan, Bob Donahue (who was graduated in December 1980) and co-captained Tommy Thomson and O'Neall were presented with white letter sweaters.

Coach Roy Johnson was cited for outstanding dedication to the team and former UMass coach, Dr. Erik Kjeldson (1962-72), now a Sports Studies professor at UMass, was given the Massachusetts Gymnastics Award. This award is presented annually to the most significant contributor to the men's gymnastics program.

Hoopwomen defeated in OT, 82-73

By KEVIN CULLEN
Collegian Staff

HANOVER, N.H.—A basketball season ended yesterday afternoon, so the soda and potato chips flowed freely in the Swede Oberlander room, named after some ancient Dartmouth College jock.

To the victors belonged the soda and chips.

The victors were Dartmouth, who handed the University of Massachusetts women an 82-73 overtime loss in an opening round Eastern regional playoff game, played here among the hallowed Ivy, plaid skirts and Izods of this sleepy, preppy town.

The loss ended the season for UMass and wasted an inspired comeback which saw co-captain Julie Ready's basket with seven seconds left in regulation tie the game at 69-69.

But from there, Dartmouth's Ann Deacon scored seven of her game-high 35 points in overtime as the Big Green outscored UMass 13-4 in the OT to move on to the semi-finals of the Eastern regionals.

"When you score four points (all free throws) in overtime, you can't expect to win," said UMass head coach Mary Ann Ozdarski, whose team finished the season even, at 14-14. "Our effort was outstanding, but we didn't do the little things—we gave them too many free throws (32) and we missed some rebounds. But give credit to Deacon; she was just tougher than we were."

Tougher to the tune of 15-for-28 from the floor, 5-for-7 from the line and 25 second-half points, including 10 of her team's 14 while Dartmouth's best player, center Gail Koziara, sat on the bench for nearly five minutes with foul trouble.

"That was the key for us," said Dartmouth head coach Chris Wielgus, whose team improved its record to 20-7, Dartmouth's first-ever 20-win season. "When Gail came out, we were hoping just to hold our own and not get behind. But Ann took charge and we came through."

When Koziara sat down with four fouls with 11:36 left in regulation, Dartmouth was up by one, 42-41; when she came back 4:52 later, Dartmouth had increased their lead to five, 56-51, thanks mostly to an assortment of Deacon jump shots and inside one-on-one drives.

In the first half, Umass had led for all but 30 seconds, holding six point leads at four different intervals. UMass held a one-point, 29-28, lead at the half in a game that didn't really begin in intensity until the final 12 minutes.

With five minutes left in regulation, UMass was down by seven, 60-53, but two Ready baskets and two more from Sherry Collins, who had 10 of her 14 points in the second half, brought them within a point, 62-61, with 3:08 left.

The teams traded three baskets before Koziara, who ended with 22 points and 20 rebounds, came to the line with 27 seconds left, her team up 68-67 and a chance to kill any UMass comeback chances. But Koziara could hit only one of her fouls shots, and UMass had a life.

Ready missed a turnaround with 15 seconds left, but Collins hustled herself an offensive rebound and brought the ball back out to point guard Wendy Ward, who returned the pass to Collins. Ready then took a pass from Collins and this time made no mistake about it with an inside bank shot over Koziara that tied the game.

Dartmouth threw the inbounds pass away and, with two seconds left in regulation, UMass had a chance, albeit slim, to win the game. Ready's 25-foot bomb from the left side hit the back of the iron at the buzzer and bounced away. Overtime.

In the overtime, UMass went cold, while Dartmouth couldn't miss, as evidenced by two Amy Nelson forced shots that went in line drive-like, ala vintage Tom Heinson. Deacon added a three-point play and two ten-foot stop and pops for Dartmouth's last seven points, which laid to rest the 1980-81 UMass season.

"Before the overtime started, I told them (Dartmouth) they had to get control of the momentum," said Wielgus. "I wanted UMass playing more defense than they had been, I wanted them (UMass) to work as hard as possible, to wear them down."

The loss also maked an end to the UMass career of Ready and fellow co-captain Ginger Legare. Ready, the second leading all-time scorer at UMass with 1406 career points, finished with 21 points, while Legare had 12 to go along with 10 rebounds and a fine defensive effort against Koziara, keeping the Chicopee native out of the Dartmouth offense much of the game.

But, as has been the case several times this year, an outstanding individual effort surfaced, this one in the person of Ms. Ann Deacon, and UMass was left with nothing but the bag of Ruffles that Sherry Collins managed to clip from the Oberlander room.

Gymmen win, season ends

By ELIZABETH McGOWAN
Collegian Staff

You might say they saved the best for last. The University of Massachusetts gymmen scored their highest total Saturday night while defeating Springfield College, 257.45-253.35. The Minutemen ended their season with an 8-3 overall record.

UMass coach, Roy Johnson, had predicted a close scoring meet and was pleased with his team's performance. "It's a great feeling to hit the goal we've been going for all season, This was a good meet in which to score our season high."

Both teams opened the meet with crowd-pleasing performances in the floor exercises. Senior Steve Craig's 9.25 took first place, while teammates Bob Lamb, with a 9.15 and Mark Flanagan, with an 8.90 turned in second and fourth places respectively. Still, UMass just edged their opponents in the event, 44.20-44.00.

The pommel horse, competition, a weak point for the gymmen most of the season, proved to be no obstacle Saturday night. UMass won the event by 0.60 of a point, raising its lead to 83.05-82.25. First place went to Springfield's Jeff Wolcott's 9.15 performance. UMass freshman, Bob Gauthier pulled in an 8.85 for second place and senior Tim Barry's 8.75 tied with Springfield's Ron Knight for third place.

Ringman John McGonagle's 9.10 was good enough for third place as Springfield's Mike Viola (9.45) and Jeff Coelho (9.15) were the top two performers in that event. Springfield gained the lead for the first time after the ring competition, 126.35-126.25.

Springfield also was victorious in the long-horse vaulting, increasing their slight margin, 172.55-172.25. All six UMass vaulters scored 9.00 or higher. Although Springfield's Jimmy Chin had the top score of 9.70, Minutemen, Lamb (9.45), Criag (9.30), Hugh O'Neall (9.10) and Flanagan (9.10) all finished in the top five places.

However, the parallel bar competition proved to be the turning point for the Minutemen. Chin and Gauthier shared first place honors with 8.65 scores, while Flanagan, Bob Goulart and John Nelson swept the next three places

Spikers win

The UMass men's volleyball team brought their record to a near-perfect 13-2 Saturday, defeating Tufts, 3-1 in Boston. The only close game was the one the Spikers lost 14-16, the second game. They tallied three wipeouts; 15-4, 15-9, 15-6.

Coach Al Morel's team recently got the results back from a vote taken a week ago, by the coaches for the All-New England team. Pat Ryan was the top vote getter and made the first team along with Jack Chandler. Mark Ferrante was voted to the second team. Morel was voted coach of the year.

The team is "gearing up" to play Havard on Thursday. "We have to beat them (Havard is second in NE, UM is third) to get into the Eastern playoffs," Morel said.

McCrone qualifies for Nationals

By JAMES GRAHAM
Collegian Staff

It was the last race of a long season and junior Judy McCrone came through qualifying for the indoor track Nationals, with the talent and speed that have earned her the spot as UMass's top female distance runner. In a race against the premiere talent of the East, McCrone finished fourth in the two-mile (10:23) at the Easterns held last Saturday at Harvard University's indoor track.

McCrone went through the mile mark in 5:08 and finished seven seconds under the National qualifying time of 10:30. In the New England's held a week earlier at Boston University McCrone missed qualifying for the Nationals by less than a second when she placed second behind Vermont's Judy St. Hilaire. St. Hilaire also won the two-mile in the Easterns last Saturday.

The only other UMass runner to compete in the meet was junior Micki Callahan. Callahan ran the 55 meter hurdles in 8.7 seconds and jumped 17'2" in the long jump. She failed to make the finals in either event. In the New Englands Callahan finished second in the long jump tieing her personal best of 17'7".

Junior Cathy Petrick was scheduled to run the three-mile race in the meet, but did not compete due to illness. Petrick won the three-mile at the New Englands.

Number of missing climbs in Atlanta

The number of murdered and missing Atlanta Black children rose to 20 last week, as police added the names of two more youths, one missing and the other dead, to its investigation.

Curtis Walker, 15, is the latest youth listed as missing by the Atlanta police's special investigative task force. Walker was last seen Feb. 19 at a shopping center near his home in the northwest section of the city. Another Black child, 10-year-old Darron Glass, last seen in September, is also listed as missing. Eighteen other Black youths have been found dead since the disappearances began in July 1979.

Atlanta police still have no suspects and a few clues in the case.

The decision by Atlanta police to add the case of 10-year-old Aaron Darnell Wyche to the investigation was an acknowledgement of claims by some in the Black community of even more deaths than had been previously reported. Police had asserted that Wyche, whose body was found June 24 under a railroad trestle in neighboring DeKalb County after he apparently fell from the bridge, died accidentally. The county medical examiner said asphyxiation was the cause of death.

"We[now] feel that the evidence is sufficiently similar to the other cases to reopen it." Public Safety Director Dick Hand acknowledged.

El Salvador: A Peoples Struggle

Robert Armstrong, reporter for the Guardian

by Debbie Sicilia and Roxana Bell
NUMMO STAFF

Robert Amstrong correspondant of NACLA (North American Congress on Latin America) and reporter of the Guardian held two confrences Thursday March 5th. The first conference was sponsored by the Economic Graduate Student Organization, during the afternoon. The evening conference took place in Herter Auditorium with an attendance of over 230 persons. This activity was coordinated by Patria Libre, the Union of Iranian Students and the Western Mass. Latin America Solidarity Committee. The activity commenced with several strong declarations of solidarity with the people of El Salvador.

Mr. Amstrong began his enlighting speech by denouncing the fallacies propagated by the U.S. media. The media emphasizes the struggle of El Salvador as a war of imperialism power between the U.S.S.R. and the U.S., a fact which obliterates the 50 years struggle of the campesinos in El Salvador, of people whom have been struggling against injustice and hunger for over half a century. This propaganda denies the essence of the Salvadorean labor in their intent of producing a structural change in the country. For example the fact that 70 percent of the child population under 5 years of age suffers malnutrition, and the per capita of caloric intake is the lowest in the Western Hemisphere, have been ignored. When over 50 percent of the population is illeterate and when the rural population has an annual unemployment rate of 35 percent with a seasonal rate of 60 percent (after the 3 harvest months). It is hard to believe that what is going on in that country is a "Communist upsurge" sponsored by the Soviet Union who is spreading "evil influences" in the Western Hemisphere.

Mr. Armstrong then passed on to give a historical background of El Salvador, stressing the period of military domination of the 1930s; it was in this period that the 1932 massacre in which 30 thousand persons were killed. During this epoch the organized left was virtually destroyed. The military then began to assume functions of managerial affairs within the state affairs. Thus creating two equally oppresive forces within the elite, the military and the oligarchy.

In the 1950s the oligarchy attempted to "modernize" the Salvadorean economy which until then had been almost exclusively dependant on the export of coffee. During the Post War (World War II) period the oligarchy and the military elite, backed by "progressive" (in the capitalist sense) businessmen sought the opportunity to diversify the economy by facilitation U.S. investments in agriculture and industry. El Salvador together with other Central American countries was organized into a common market through the U.S. At the same time the U.S. began a process of strengthening military forces within the region; this arised out of the fear perceived by the U.S. from the 1954 uprising in Guatemala, which was reaffirmed later by the victory of Cuba in 1959.

In 1957 the first example of military assistance by the U.S. government took place; a training program was established and army and police forces were furnished with armaments. By 1979 approximately two thousand officers had been trained and the military forces had been provided with $16.2 million in military aid.

This atmosphere prevailing in the country before the 60s offered the bases for the organizing of the opposition forces in the country which until then had been virtually non-existant. The forming of organized peasant and labor movements, student movements and mobilization of proffesional sectors contributed to the propagation of an open opposition towards the military and oligarchy rule. This process steadily increased the construction of what today is the Frente Ferabundo Marti de Liberacion Nacional (FMLN), composed of many different sectors of the Salvadorean society. Population sectors were joined together by guerillas under community projects in non-violent tactics. These efforts were met by high strung repression on behalf of the military. Another important facet of the Salvadorean struggle is the participation of the church which is based on a liberation theology (the alignment of the poor).

The military structure organized its efforts to oppress even the religious sector, this effort was clearly illustrated by the assassination of the Archbishop Oscar Romero.

In 1979 a coup d'etat was staged by Duarte and the other members of the Junta now in power. U.S. encouraged and aided the Junta in a twofold repressive strategy of "reform". The Agrarian Reform, and the training of the military in tactics of Search and Destroy missions throughout the country. This is what is denominated as "Vietnamisation". Basically this entails the murdering of all those found "suspicious", including in this group women, children and innocent people.

The response evoked by the Salvadoreans, took the form of the Frente Democratico Revolucionario (FDR) which is composed of popular organizations, church leaders, and profesionals.

The Guardian Reporter concluded his powerful speech with an evocation for unity and support for the Salvadorean struggle.

The Nobuko Miyamota concert was given on March 5, at the Student Union Ballroom. It was well attended by an estimated audience of 200. Miss Miyamota accompanied by singer Debbie Nishimura and pianist Benny Yee played music that ranged from folk to Jazz. Interpasing her singing with poetry, she expressed eloquently her experiences growing up as an Asian on the West Coast. photo by MICHAEL CHAN

BOYCOTT CHARLIE CHAN

Charlie Chan is a racist and degrading stereotype created by white writers and movie producers. The Chan character- with his taped slanted eyes, phony Chinese accent, fortune cookie dialogue, subservient "Uncle Tom" image, and "inscrutable" manner- robs Chinese and Asian Americans of simple human dignity. Charlie Chan is the Asian "little Black Sambo". He is a historic symbol of racist attitudes towards Asian Americans. The Chan character distorts reality and has a direct influence on the mass perception of millions of Americans. He and movies of that nature are harmful. They create and reinforce existing stereotypes of Asian Americans which falsely depicts our history and contributions to America. Indeed, the racist epithet "Charlie!" and racist taunting "ah-so! ah-so!" are direct result of the Chan movies that we encounter in our daily lives.

Between 1926 and 1949, over forty-five Charlie Chan movies were made. The Asians remember this period as the enforcements of discriminatory immigration laws and of the American concentration camps. In 1971, N.B.C. planned a Charlie Chan television series starring Ross Martin. However, due to protest from the Asian American community, they were forced to cancel the series. Thus, "Charlie Chan and the Curse of the Dragon Queen" is the first Charlie Chan film since the 1940's!

We see our protests against Charlie Chan as an effort to stop Hollywood and the media from spreading lies and distortions about Asians and other minority people in America. The Coalition of Asians to Nix Charlie Chan (C.A.N. Charlie Chan) has enjoyed wide support and conducted successful protests in San Francisco and Los Angeles (the filming had to be moved from San Francisco to Los Angeles studio as the result of this.) In New York, a benefit screening of the film was recently cancelled as a result of the protests.

Million is profits have been made from the old Charlie Chan series. Today, we say. "Enough!". We have fought generation after generation for respect, equality, and human dignity. No movie company has the right to profit from racist exploitation. As well as "Charlie Chan", anti-black and anti-Puerto Rican films like "Fort Apache, The Bronx" should be stopped. Lets come together to stop these racist attacks on Asian and other minority people.

C.A.N. Charlie Chan asks you to Boycott the Film and support these demands:

1. Jerry Sherlock Productions must cancel the film showings.
2. Jerry Sherlock Productions make a public apology to the Asian American community.
3. More funding for Asian American media projects.
4. Greater funding for Asian American media projects.
5. Asian American actors and actresses to be hired in non-stereotypic roles.

KU KLUX KLAN

Maryland Incidents

The Maryland Teachers Association (MTA) has cited "an alarming increase" in attempts by the Ku Klux Klan to "intimidate and indoctrinate" the state's public school students.

MTA president Rev. Rufus Abernathy said at a recent news conference that KKK organizing in the state included the distribution in schools of racist literature and applications to white students for membership in the "Klan Youth Corps" and the wearing of white robes on school grounds, among other incidents.

To document KKK activity in the state, Abernathy announced that school employees throughout Maryland will be urged to report Klan activity to the MTA headquarters. In turn, Abernathy said, the association will collect the reported incidents and forward them to federal and state authorities.

"We will not permit the schools to be disrupted and students to be intimidated," Abernathy said. "We must combat any Klan influence on our society."

The MTA cited the Maryland counties of Harford, St. Marys and Prince Georges as areas of particularly presistent KKK activity. School superintendents and officials in those counties, however, claimed that most of the charges were unsubstantiated, according to the Feb. 4 Baltimore Sun.

"This is just a bunch of fabrications, blowing the situation of proportion," said Dr. Larry Lorten, superintendent of the St. Marys County schools. Lorten admitted that Klan Youth Corps applications were being circulated at a local high school before Christmas but said the activity "amounted to nothing but a couple of kids with a couple of pieces of literature."

MTA spokeswoman Pat LoCascio said that school officials are trying to cover up the serious nature of the KKK activity. "They are afraid," she said. " They want to keep it quiet. For many years, this type of thing has been quiet in Maryland, but now all of a sudden it's happening again."

One of the most blatant cases of KKK organizing in Maryland in recent years, according to the Sun, was the case of a white custodian at Carroll County High school who had been fired for distributing Kland literature to school employees.

Last year, a federal court jury said the custodian, Richard Savina, was unjustly fired and awarded him back pay. They jury held that Savina had been discriminated against for being a KKK member.

Anti-Black Flyers

Within the last two months, racist literature has reportedly been widely circulated in Tuscumbia, Florence and Sheffield, Alabama.

The l-page flyers, entitled "Race Traitors," claim that the U.S. is in a second revolution which will restore complete authority to people of European ancestry. The literature class for the deportation of "alien races"(Third World people)to Africa and Asia. It also warned against "those guilty of fraternizing socially or sexually with Blacks," adding that interracial couples would be killed.

The flyers were distributed by a group calling itself "The Revolutionary Government of the United States." They have been left on church steps, car windshields, doorsteps and in mailboxes in both white and Black communities in the areas. The national headquarters of the Knights of the Ku Klux Klan is in Tuscumbia.

Police officials have tried to downplay the significance of the incidents. The Tuscumbia police chief said that the only possible violation the racists have committed so far has been littering.

The Yulanda Ward Assassination

Having received two contrasting accounts regarding the race of Yulanda Ward's murderers, NUMMO followed up with a document search. It has been determined that the three assailants were Black; a published statement to this effect is available directly from the Yulanda Ward Memorial Fund in Washington, D.C. Also, the conclusion of the speech addressing Ms. Ward's death (NUMMO, 2-23-81) is printed below.

The following is a partial transcript of a speech delivered at the National Teach-In, in Washington, D.C. on January 19,1981, by a representative of the Yulanda Ward Memorial Fund. submitted by the Third World Women's Task Force

The assassination of Yulanda Ward triggered any number of events within the (Washington) D.C. community. First of all, quite naturally, the police began an immediate coverup of what happened. They wanted (persons) close to Yulanda Ward not to talk to the press and not to publicize what happened to Yulanda in an effort to cover up their role in the cover up. . . . During the 1960's we saw a collective assassination of young Black leaders. We find now, in the 1980's, that the new mandate includes a program to kill anyone, even before they become a national leader, (who) has challenged their power structure. This is the way leadership will be destroyed without national response. . . . However, we've found that whenever there is repression and oppression there will always be resistance . . . . Our people have not given up the struggle for control over our lives, and we have and always will fight back. We're going to fight back in the 1980's to make the 1960's look like they were backyard burn-outs. It is clear to us that an all out war has been planned on Blacks and other progressive people and that they have increased the number of attempts that they use to try to pacify us. It is very clear to me after (unintelligible from tape) Stevie Wonder rallying, marching and giving a concert, that Martin Luther King's birthday is going to be their next attempt to pacify us. They're going to make us feel that we've won something significant with Martin Luther King's birthday (if it becomes a national holiday); I say that the next struggle should be Malcolm's birthday!

The assassination of Yulanda just puts really into focus how far they will go to stop our movement. It is significant that Yulanda was killed at a time when the whole attention of the mass media was on the Iranian hostages and the elections. Yulanda was killed two days before the election of Ronald Reagan. Of course they meant for her assassination to go unnoticed. It is the intention of the Yulanda Ward Memorial Fund that this does not happened, that Yulanda's work in any area, where it affected students, where it affected women, where it affected children, where it affected prisoners, where it affected Chicanos, where --- I could talk forever about the things that Yulanda Ward did in twenty-two years! I'm not. I'm going to insist that we continue her mandate, that we continue the legacy of her death, and that we continue to struggle against the oppression that will kill us, that will terrorize us, but that will not defeat us! Thank you.

There are at least two other Atlanta Black youths whose deaths, Black residents say, are similar to the known dead and should be added to the investigation. In one case, the body of a 15-year-old, Patrick Rodgers, was found Dec. 7 in the Chattahoochee River just over the Atlanta border in Cobb County. The county's chief of police. J.W. Reed said that county officials and the Atlanta police believe the youth's death was not similar to the others and had decided not to add Rogers' case to the inquiry.

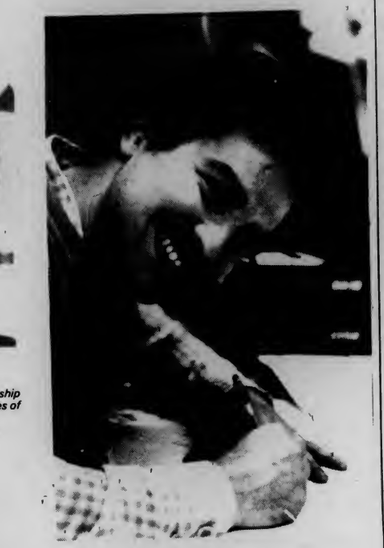
Should the United States intervene in El Salvador

Carlos Gonzlez, HUMAN SERVICES,'81
"No, because no country should back a dictatorship that murders its own people for economical advances of the few."



Miquel Punsoda, CASIAC,'82
"No, military intervention in Latin America will only create further resentment toward Americans. The imperialist protection of the economic interest of a few will not stop the liberation movements in any oppressed country."

Karin Butler CASIAC,'84
"Our, country should leave El Salvador alone; we have enough problems with proposition 2 1/2, cutbacks, and just plain Reagen without interfering with the liberation movement in El Salvador."

David Green, A Better Chance Program, Amherst Regional High School, Senior
"If the United State's objective in giving aid is to help people improve their social and economic position, they should; if the country's objective [El Salvador] is to exploit and oppress its people, they [U.S.A.] shouldn't give aid."

Now U.S. has a "reason"

by Gertrudis Garcia NUMMO STAFF

The New York Times of Tuesday, February 24, 1981 dedicated a whole page (A8) to present a condensation of a report from the States Department that states the "Communist support to Salvadoran Rebels". The report starts establishing its aim: "to present definitive evidence of the clandestine military support given by the Soviet Union, Cuba and their communist allies to Marxist-Leninist guerrillas"...

In my opinion the report is the most ambiguous piece of rhetoric that I have read. The original report needed 180 pages to say nothing that could be considered "definitive evidence". We know that the Reagan administration will find always ways to push forward its anti-Soviet, anti-Cuban, and anti-liberation in the Third World attacks.

After November 5, (when he was sure of his election as President)Reagan accentuated his attacks. He and his Secretary of State (Heig) made clear during their first official press conferences that Latin America, in this case El Salvador would be the "central testing ground of U.S. foreign policy."

The State Department report, instead of presenting evidence of "communist involvement" in El Salvador, tries to justify future actions of the United States in this country. It is hard to accept that the State Department could convince anyone of the authenticity of the information presented in the report. According to the State Department "important documents recovered from the Communist Party of El Salvador" verify what the Reagan Administration was saying about communist involvement in El Salvador.

The authenticity of the report is diminished by the fact that no important names, specific dates or events appear on it. Great portions of the reports are dedicted to describe the activities of Jorge Shafik Handal, President of The Salvadoran Communist Party. In many parts of the report expressions such as "presumably" and "possibly" are used.

In the report the U.S. government tries to "wash its hands" saying that no arms have been sent to El Salvador in the last fourteen months. (Wa know well that if this is true, it is more true to say that the military aid of the U.S.A. to Honduras has increased notably.) Honduras is probably the puppet that would be uxed not only to stop the liberation strugle in El Salvador, but also to disrupt the Sandinista efforts in Nicaragua.

The State Department wants to present the process of El Salvador as one in which external forces (Cuba and the Soviet Union) are trying to overthrow a government that has popular support. The State Department concludes the contrary of this because at this moment the masses as a whole have not yet followed the liberation forces, that means support to the junta. In this aspect the State Department is completely wrong.

In order to justify the military aid and personnel that the U.S. will send into El Salvador, the report says that hundreds of tons of arms have been introduced by communists into this country. If we accept as true the numbers that the State Department uses, then the liberation forces in El Salvador have arms to fight not only there but also in Honduras, Guatemala, and Mexico.

I think that the State Department would have to ask for the production of more authentic evidence if they want to get into El Salvador to stop the liberation process that the Salvadoran people started.

LETTERS

To the Editor:

In light of the recent racist attacks against Nummo that have been printed in the Collegian , we would like to voice our support for the paper. We unconditionally support the right of the Third World community to have and control its own publication, distinct from the white-defined papers in the Valley, that speaks to the histories, struggles, and political views of Third World peoples. Supporting this right is bottom-line for any white person who considers her- or himself progressive.

Along with the public attacks on the paper that have been published in the Collegian, in the course of our day-to-day work among the white community, we have heard a number of other people come out with similar racist statements about Nummo. What seems to be an increasing sentiment against Nummo is a threat to the whole progressive population here in the Valley. We support the paper because it speaks not only to the Third World community, but to the interests of all progressive, anti-imperialists people. The education that most of us get here, even when cloaked in Marxist rhetoric, is rooted in a white view of history and contemporary reality. Unless we as white people want to continue living with our own distorted, white supremacist view of the world, we have to recognize the valuable resource that Nummo is in struggling for a progressive consciousness for all people in the area. Nummo is one of the things that has moved us as white students not only to change our thinking, but also to begin to take action, to take up our role as white people in fighting for progressive change.

The attacks on Nummo echo the attack on Hispanic radio programming at WFCR, and the recent attacks on the Third World Women's Task Force for being the cause of the cancellation of the International Women's Week program. It is only if we are committed to white supremcy that we as white people see our interests as being antagonistic to Third World people's struggles. Again, we denounce these attacks and unconditionally support Nummo.

Gil Scot-Heron performs at Rusty Nail

by Gus Martins NUMMO STAFF photo by STEFAN RUTHERFORD

The multi-talented Gil Scot-Heron performed to a packed house at the Rusty Nail last Friday night. Along with his six man entourage, they were able to uphold the energies of all his followers who were in attendance for the hour and three quarter performance. The numbers thet he did were a combination of old and new and were well done. He allowed his band members plenty of space as they soloed on several occasions.

Although now departed with his former partner Brian Jackson, Gil has maintained very strong stage presence. He spoke of Jackson when asked and remarked,... "the difference between Brian and I right now is about three thousand miles. Brian never was extremely anxious to travel, now he's working on some things independently like producing. The opportunity presented itself and he took advantage of it. As far as I'm concerned I'm pretty much doing the same thing that I've done consistently over the last several years."

The show opened with one his more popular hits The Bottle, and then he did the number Alien \hold on to your dreams from the album 1980. The song refers to illegal aliens, usually from Mexico, sneaking past the border in search of a better way of life. The song's chorus says much of what Scot-Heron has been saying over the course of many years, "No matter the consequences, or the fear that grips your senses, you have got to hold on to your dreams."

Other numbers that were to follow were Winter in America, which featured a very intense trumpet solo and some flu*s improvisation also. A Legend in His Own Mind, one of his latest pieces, talks about a person who claims to be able to do anything one can do, but usually twice as good. Johannesburg, reveals the tragedy behind the struggle in South Africa. When I asked Gil after the show about the ongoing struggles worldwide, he said that he felt that he was winning, and that anybody with a strong Third World consciousness should feel the same way. "In the last thirty five years over forty nations in Africa have become Independent, as a matter of fact there's a hundred year old struggle for Independence that has just terminated in the last six months, I don't feel like I'm losing, I feel like I'm winning. When over eighty percent of Africa has become independent over the last thirty five years it' s encouraging. Americans tend to think of themselves as the center of the universe. I see myself as part of a world-wide struggle."

Gil spoke about El Salvador saying that, "America has always felt a compulsion to back right wing fascist dictatorships just to keep you from doing what you want to do. If Democracy is what they want, we wouldn't have to shove to shove it down their throat, they'd come and steel it, qu oting Dick Gregory."

As a musician, poet, and messenger, Gil is perhaps unrivaled. When I asked him about a principle message that he may be trying to convey, he remarked, " if you don't stand for something, you'll go for anything. People who feel as though they're lost and without direction are people who don't firmly believe in anything. There are certain things in life that are intangible, theories and concepts etc. Those are the things that make you who you are, it's not what you have but it's who you are. So I say if you don't stand for something you'll go for anything."

For those of you who are unaware, Gil Scot-Heron holds a Master's degree in English Literature from John Hopkins U. in Washington D.C. He also appeared in the no-nukes movie concert and performed his powerful piece Shut em Down. He has also written some very profound poetry criticing the many deteriorating social conditions. Apart from just being a musician he has many talents, and is very concerned about the world in which we find ourselves. To better describe the man maybe we should call him a spokesman for humanity.

Melba enchants Smith College

by Phillip Jennings NUMMO STAFF

March 6 1981 The amazing Melba Moore performed in front of a crowd of some 800 musically enchanted students, to benefit the Minnie Riperton Cancer foundation at Smith College.

After a moment of silence for the Children of Atlanta, "Lady" the announcer introduced Melba's group Steam, which has been playing with her for about 6 months. Steam played a few instrumentals showing their musical genius.

Steam consisted of five musicans, Petro Bass percussion, Wayne Brathwaite on bass, Binky Brice Guitar, Karl Jones Drums, and Barry Eastmond Piano. The five brothers, GQ'ed down in tuxedos, jammed to a funky jazz beat.

Melba then made her appearance, wearing a flashy white gown with matching turban. On stage, Melba hit the highest of high notes, holding them for minutes at a time. The audience whistled and screamed, while several of them walked to the stage and threw money at her feet. The money was gathered, as donations for the Minnie Riperton Cancer Foundation.

Melba's warm personality, theatrical steps and jestures, excited the already stimulated crowd as she encouraged their participation. Melba toasted the audience with a sincere wish for peace, perfect health and happiness.

After the concert, NUMMO went back stage to get a closer look at Melba and her "fantastic five". The group, slightly exhaused from being on tour at Las Vegas, had changed into their regular street clothes. Melba was wearing her own designer jeans called "Melba Moore Jeans", which are currently being sold for woman at Filenes in Boston.

Melba, the recepient of such prestigious awards as the Tony Award, Drama Desk Award, The Grammy Nomination, Theater World Award, and the Critics Award, is now involved in another Broadway musical called "Innocent Black" which will be appearing soon.

As a native New Yorker, Melba attended Teachers College in New York, where she studied music with an emphasis in dance and voice. She is now in the process of making a new album, which is being recorded at Melba's new recording studio in New York.

Vernon Bellecourt to speak at Umass

Vernon Bellecourt will be the first guest speaker to be sponsored by the newly formed American Indian Student Association at the University of Massachusetts. This event, open to the public at no charge is scheduled for Wednesday, March ll, at 8 pm in the Student Union Ballroom, Campus Center, University of Massachusetts, Amherst. Mr. Bellecourt, co-founder and Executive Director of the Denver Chapter of the American Indian Movement, is a member of the Tribal Executive Committee of the Consolidated Minnesota Chippewar Tribe and is currently Secretary-Treasurer for the White Earth Anishinabeg Nation Tribal Council.

As well as having appeared throughout the United States as a representative of AIM, Bellecourt (Wabun-Inini) was an organizer and participant in the First International Treaty Council held in 1974 and assisted with the drafting of the Declaration of Independence of the Sovereign Indian Nation. In 1975, along with leaders of Indian nations from both North and South America, he attended the founding conference of the World Council of Indigenous People at Port Alberni, Vancouver Island, British Columbia. In 1978, Wabun-Inini (Bellecourt) joined several hundred Indian people and supporters in the Longest Walk from San Francisco to Washington, D.C., ending a five-month journey by presenting The Longest Walk Manifest-Affirmation of Sovereignty of the Indigenous People of the Western Hemisphere-to the White House, Senate and House of Representatives.

The American Indian Association is pleased to give the Amherst community the opportunity to hear Vernon Bellecourt speak regarding the needs and rights of America's indigenous people. Quoting from the Declaration of Independence of the Sovereign Indian Nation which Bellecourt was instrumental in writing: "...Might does not make right. Sovereign people of varying cultures have the absolute right to live in harmony with Mother Earth so long as they do not infringe upon this same right of other people. The denial of this right must be challenged by truth and action ... In the course of these human events, we call upon the people of the world to support this struggle..."

The public is cordially invited to attend this meeting. There is no admission charge.

Candidates meet head on in debate

By KATHLEEN HOWLEY
Collegian Staff

The four sets of candidates for the office of president of the Student Government Association debated in the Student Union Ballroom last night about such issues as tuition cutbacks, budgetary procedure and state/level student representation.

All candidates voiced opposition to tuition cutbacks and said they believed student representation on the Boards of Trustees and Regents should be increased.

The format of the debate, which drew an audience of about 50, was changed in the middle of the proceedings, allowing the candidates to respond to each other.

During the course of the debate Richard LaVoice, the incumbent co-president, responded to charges made by Larry Kocot and Kevin Mangan that his office had run up a deficit, delayed approval of an attorney general, and had not held regular presidential Council meetings.

LaVoice, running mate of Ruth Mazzola, said these charges were misleading, and accused Kocot and Mangan of having to "resort to mudslinging."

"There is really no true deficit situation," LaVoice said. "A new accounting procedure impacted on our budget."

Mangan said that because LaVoice had only convened the Presidential Council twice this semester it could not be used to deal with "hot issues," including coed bathrooms.

"Rich LaVoice is not anyone to talk about mudslinging," Mangan added.

Mangan said rapes were up 50 percent on the UMass campus, and blamed insufficient lighting.

"We get promises and nothing comes out of it," Mangan said.

Larry Kocot, present chairman of the Undergraduate Student Senate Budget Committee, said he believed prices in the Text Book Annex should be reduced.

"Prices in the Text Book Annex are artificially inflated because of mismanagement in the Campus Center," Kocot said.

He said the Annex is part of the Campus Center complex, and said "the money is going somewhere."

Student atomic bomb designer condemns nuclear weapons race

By JOAN McKENZIE
Collegian Staff

"Congress has been voting for subsidies for nuclear power in the belief that the energy problems will go away" John Aristotle Phillips, in a speech at the Campus Center last night.

Phillips, 25, became an internationally known figure as a Princeton undergraduate in 1976 when he designed an atomic bomb from public documents.

Speaking on "Nuclear Proliferation and the Arms Race," as a member of the Democratic Party, Phillips said it is necessary to elect leaders who understand the technical side of issues such as nuclear power.

Phillips, who ran for Congress last fall on the Democratic Ticket in Enfield, Connecticut, said it is very difficult to address issues such as nuclear proliferation and the arms race in a political campaign. "How do you talk about the arms race in a year when people think the Russians are coming?" Phillips said.

Phillips said as a candidate it was not easy to convince a voter that the arms race was dangerous; especially when his or her job was at stake. "What do you say to a factory worker who knows if the XM 1 tank is not made he will be out of work." Phillips said.

"You can talk about peace, but it doesn't mean anything in the context of that job" Phillips said.

Connecticut is one of the main production sites for the MX missile system, in addition to the XM 1 tank.

Phillips described the XM 1 tank as a wasteful weapons program. "It is one of the heaviest pieces of machinery the military has ever built" Phillips said. Phillips said the machine was so heavy the military had to design a new air craft carrier to transport the weapon.

He said America's relationship to El Salvador, is cause for alarm. "It has been the policy of the American government to back who ever is the ruling party. We seek to ingratiate ourselves with the ruling regime; that's the mistake we made in Iran," Phillips said.

Phillips said the battle in El Salvador is over American public opinion. "The battle is whether the American Credit Union to increase interest rates

By PAUL BELVAL
Collegian Correspondent

As of April 1, the interest rates for all student accounts at the UMass Student Federal Credit Union will be raised .5 percent.

Mike Couch, marketing committee chairman and a member of the board of directors, said the rates will be raised to 6 percent on regular share accounts and to 6.5 percent, 7.5 percent, 8.5 percent and 9.5 percent on regular share certificate accounts.

Couch said the reason for the rate hikes was a rise in the credit union's profits last year.

"As a non-profit institution, whenever there are profits, we pass it on to the members. Last year was one of our best years, so it's a matter of passing it on to our members," he said.

The UMass Student Federal Credit Union is an entirely student operated organization run by student volunteers. It is governed by a nine member board of directors, and each area of service has its own governing committee, such as a credit committee to handle loans and an accounting committee that takes care of the bookkeeping.

There are about 100 students involved in the operation of the credit union, and there are people working there from 9 a.m. to 5 or 6 p.m., Couch said.

Students start as tellers, but after a semester of work, they usually begin working on one of the various committees. Most of the students who work at the credit union are doing it for what Couch described as "practical work experience."

The UMass Student Federal Credit Union offers a variety of services, including regular savings accounts, check cashing for students who have accounts, redemption of food stamps, and loans for members.

Cuts affect 200 programs

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Reagan applied the finishing touches yesterday to an unprecedented budget-cutting blitz which delves into more than 200 federal programs to trim $5 billion from government spending this year and $15 billion in 1982.

Reagan formally submits his reworked budgets to Congress on today. Already, he has drawn cheer from business and fiscal conservatives and outcries from the pained defenders of dozens of affected social programs. Even as he completed the final draft, for example, thousands of coal miners marched upon the White House to protest would be cuts in black lung benefits.

Reagan also planned to submit to Congress this week the details of his tax-cut proposals, which he unveiled last month when he outlined his economic recovery program.

The tax proposals include a 10 percent annual reduction in personal income tax rates in each of the next three years, and a business tax cut in the form of accelerated depreciation schedules.

The administration contends that its program of budget and tax cuts, rollbacks in federal regulation and federal lending and restricted growth of the nation's money supply will bring inflation down sharply and stimulate increased economic growth. At that, Reagan cautioned last week it could be a year before the economy takes an upward swing.

Edwin Dale, a spokesman for Reagan's budget office, said the revised budgets for fiscal 1981, which ends Sept. 30, and fiscal 1982 were "locked up" yesterday morning.

Dale said Reagan's day included signing documents calling on Congress to rescind or defer funds previously appropriated for 1981.

TMI danger to last for years

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Federal experts said yesterday the nation's worst nuclear accident should be cleaned up "as expeditiously as reasonably possible," but it could still be seven years before the Three Mile Island power plant is free of danger.

The staff of the Nuclear Regulatory Commission said contaminated waste at the site near Harrisburg, Pa., can be removed "without incurring environmental impacts that exceed acceptable risks" but the job will take at least three years, and possibly another four.

The 1,300 page report strongly rejected any notion of making the facility, where a near reactor melt-down occurred in March of 1979, a permanent disposal site for nuclear wastes.

"The location, geology and hydrology of Three Mile Island are among the factors that do not meet the current criteria for a safe long-term waste disposal facility," the report said.

In calling for a "timely" cleanup, the NRC staff said: "The cleanup operations will remove sources of potential radiation exposure that currently pose risks to the health and safety of station workers and the public."

The report noted the work involved in the cleanup will be the same whether the reactor is decommissioned or eventually put back into operation, and it did not make a recommendation on which course to take.

The "most significant environmental impact" from the clean up would be on workers involved in the project, the report said.

Miners descend on Washington to protest cutbacks

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Coal miners shut down hundreds of mines and marched upon the White House 6,000 strong with chants of "Black lung kills!" yesterday to protest President Reagan's proposed cutbacks in benefits for victims of the dread respiratory disease.

The march was the focal point of a two-day walkout, organized by the United Mine workers, that closed virtually all of the nation's major coal mines.

UMW President Sam Church called for the two-day "memorial period" as labor's response to President Reagan's claim last month the black lung benefits fund was in shaky condition because of alleged award abuses. The president called for tighter eligiblity standards and a "reasonable" coal tax increase upon mine operators.

Church vowed a bitter fight by the union, which has 160,000 active members.

AFL-CIO President Lane Kirkland joined the ensuing half-mile march to the White House. As they passed the White House, many shouted "Down with the jellybean!" referring to the president via his sweet tooth.

There was no reaction from Reagan, but an administration official repeated Labor Secretary Raymond Donovan's assertion of last weekend that his aim is to make the black lung program solvent, not deprive deserving claimants.

Yesterday's protesters descended upon the nation's capitol in cars and dozens of chartered buses from Appalachia and other coal-producing areas. Among the protestors were dozens of elderly victims of black lung, a crippling disease caused by prolonged inhalation of coal dust.

According to the Labor Department, about 350,000 miners or their widows currently receive monthly black lung checks ranging from $254 to $508 for a miner with three children.

All union mines were shut down for the walkout, which Church legally called under terms of the union's current contract with the Bituminous Coal Operators Association.

Supreme Court sets precedent with conviction of Chretien

BOSTON — In a precedent-setting ruling yesterday, the state Supreme Court affirmed the conviction of James K. Chretien for raping his estranged wife.

The decision, written by Chief Justice Edward F. Hennessey, was the first test of a 1974 statute that eliminated the common law "spousal exclusion" from a rape charge.

Since the late 1600s, this barred spousal rape charges because it was believed that the marriage contract provided irrevocable consent to intercourse.

A summary accompanying the unanimous ruling declared that a spouse who forces intercourse "is no longer free from criminal responsibility."

Condemned killer waivers before going to electric chair

MICHIGAN CITY, Ind. — Seventy-one minutes before he was strapped into the electric chair yesterday, condemned killer Steven T. Judy almost changed his mind about the execution he had wanted so much, his attorney said.

"If you ever have another client that wants to be electrocuted, talk him out of it," attorney Steven L. Harris quoted the 24-year-old murderer as saying when he was summoned to Judy's cell at the Indiana State Prison at 10:54 p.m. Sunday. Behind a curtain in the cell the freshly varnished black oak chair was ready for Judy's appointment with death just after midnight.

Air pirates threaten drastic measures if activists not freed.

DAMASCUS, Syria — Three Pakistani air pirates threatened an "extremely drastic measure" against more than 100 hostages aboard a hijacked jetliner at Damascus airport yesterday if imprisoned opposition activists were not freed in Pakistan. Three Americans and two other U.S. residents were among the hostages.

In its eighth day, the hijacking that began over Pakistan tied in duration the 1976 Entebbe incident, believed the longest ever.

Rumors of a possible Syrian commando assault to rescue the hostages circulated after Pakistani President Mohammed Zia ul-Haq was said to have phoned Syrian President Hafez Assad and given him a free hand to deal with the situation. But veteran observers doubted any storming of the plane would take place while other options remained.

House revives bottle bill; gubernatorial veto expected.

BOSTON — The Massachusetts House revived the bottle bill yesterday but by less than the two-thirds margin needed to shield it against an expected gubernatorial veto.

The lower chamber, by a 95-57 margin, disregarded the advice of its Energy Committee and advanced the measure that would impose mandatory deposits on most beverage cans and bottles.

Rep. Lawrence Alexander, sponsor of this year's version of the perennial measure, argued it would help communities cope with the Proposition 2½ tax rollback by cutting their waste disposal costs. The Marblehead Democrat estimated deposits would eliminate nearly all throwaways, reducing solid waste by 6 percent and saving Massachusetts cities and towns about $5 million a year.

Tsongas and Kennedy clear the air after apparent rift

BOSTON — Despite their similar views on most issues, Massachusetts Sens. Edward M. Kennedy and Paul E. Tsongas admit that a rift developed between their staffs last year, and a meeting was called in November to clear the air.

The strain between the two Democrats first developed after Tsongas' June 14 speech to the Americans for Democratic Action in which he questioned several of the old liberal values and approaches often associated with Kennedy.

Tsongas said the headlines that accompanied stories on the speech, such as "Is the Kennedy Era Passe?" and "Is Kennedy Style Liberalism Dead?," blurred the content and intent of the speech.

SGA candidate profiles

SGA presidential elections begin today.

By ED LEVINE
Collegian Staff

Today and tomorrow, undergraduate students at the University of Massachusetts will be voting to elect a president of their Student Government Association.

In addition to the SGA presidency, candidates for the Campus Center/Student Union Board of Governors and a referendum question on coed bathrooms will also appear on the ballot.

The SGA presidency has traditionally been divided into two positions: student trustee and campus president. The student trustee sits on the UMass Board of Trustees as a full voting member and is the student body's representative to education and legislative officials in Boston. The Campus president, who also sits on the Faculty Senate, is the student's liason with others on the Amherst campus, including the administration, faculty and graduate students.

Below is a list of the qualifications and concerns of each of the four teams seeking office, in order of their appearance on the ballot. The information was compiled from questionnaires sent to all candidates last week. In addition to describing their backgrounds, the candidates were asked to list what they see as the major issues currently facing the student body and what they see as their priorities if elected to the office.

Due to space limitations, the candidates' responses have been edited to simple phrases.

Kocot

TRUSTEE: Larry Kocot
RESIDENCE: Kennedy Tower
MAJOR: legal studies
YEAR: 1982
AGE: 20
HOME: Shrewsbury
EXPERIENCE: Three years as student senator; chair of senate budgets committee; member of senate and SCERA rents and fees committee and team.

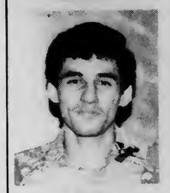
Kocot/Mangan

Kocot and Mangan list as their concerns the high cost of education, the need for outreach to the students and area governments, reorganization of higher education, dormitory and off-campus housing issues, the credibility of the SGA, students' rights, coed bathrooms, the University judiciary, and financial aid.

If elected, Kocot and Mangan say they will attempt to lower prices in the Textbook Annex, settle the mini-store issue, keep tuition and fees down, push for passage of legislation dealing with sexual harassment, energy funds, collective bargaining, a student regent, and establish a "hotline" for residential problems.

CAMPUS PRESIDENT: Kevin Mangan
RESIDENCE: Washington Tower
MAJOR: political science
YEAR: 1982
AGE: 20
HOME: Somerville
EXPERIENCE: Southwest Assembly co-president; southwest treasurer; student senator.

Mangan



Acosta

TRUSTEE: Nelson Acosta
RESIDENCE: MacKimmie
MAJOR: sociology
YEAR: 1982
AGE: 22
HOME: Holyoke
EXPERIENCE: Three years as a student senator; member of budgets and coordinating committees; MacKimmie house council.

Acosta/Lee

Acosta and Lee say their main concerns are student representation on the state Board of Regents, the cost of education, full use of all campus buildings and repairs to them, student input in residential and academic decisions, reorganization of the SGA and student coops, the lighting problem, and sexual harassment.

If elected, Acosta and Lee say they will fight for more student input into decision-making, communicate more with the student body, reorganize the tuition procedure, establish a complaint procedure for sexual harassment, and establish a "direct line of communication between students and their government."

CAMPUS PRESIDENT: Ed Lee
RESIDENCE: John Quincy Adams
MAJOR: public health
YEAR: 1982
AGE: 22
HOME: Quincy
EXPERIENCE: Two years as a student senator; member of senate finance and budgets committee; vice-president JQA upper; R.A. coalition organizer.

Lee

Crowley

TRUSTEE: Robert F. Crowley
RESIDENCE: Swiss Village
MAJOR: journalism
YEAR: 1982
AGE: 23
HOME: Acton
EXPERIENCE: Little or none listed

Crowley/Nagle

Crowley and Nagle say the most important issues facing the students are financial aid, "SGA politically dominated committees," and the language requirement.

If elected, Crowley and Nagle say they will lobby the governor for increased financial aid funds, campaign against the language requirement, and "boycott against the miserable coffee sold in the campus center."

CAMPUS PRESIDENT: James P. Nagle
RESIDENCE: Swiss Village
MAJOR: legal studies
YEAR: 1982
AGE: 21
HOME: Scituate
EXPERIENCE: High school home room representative.

Nagle

LaVoice

TRUSTEE: Richard LaVoice
RESIDENCE: Amherst
MAJOR: legal studies
YEAR: 1982
AGE: 21
HOME: W. Springfield
EXPERIENCE: Two years as SGA co-president; New England representative to United States Student Association; former president of state student association.

LaVoice/Mazzola

LaVoice and Mazzola listed financial aid, student lobbying, student voter registration, coed bathrooms, maintaining the bus system and keeping current levels of service in light of budget cuts as the major issues they see facing the students.

If elected, LaVoice and Mazzola say they will work to keep the pass/fail option as it is, push for an alternative to the foreign language requirement, attempt to prevent cuts in the area transit service and to "insure that the coed bathroom issue is settled to the students' satisfaction."

CAMPUS PRESIDENT: Ruth Mazzola
RESIDENCE: Moore
MAJOR: education
YEAR: 1983
AGE: 19
HOME: Newton
EXPERIENCE: Current Southwest Assembly co-president; former Southwest co-vice-president; treasurer of Students Advocating Financial Aid.

Prof pioneers new fuel

By STEPHANIE KLEIN
Collegian Staff

Add chemical surfactants to powdered coal and black number six fuel oil and you have coal oil slurry, a fuel mixture being pioneered by a University of Massachusetts Chemistry professor for use in pipelines and utility plants.

Surfactants developed and patented by Professor Robert L. Rowell, liquify the gooey slurry, an alternative to fuel oil, and enable it to flow in pipelines.

"It's cheaper than oil and handles better than coal," said Rowell.

Since research began a few years ago, the Salem Harbor plant of the New England Power Co. has used Coal oil slurry with good results, saving an estimate 30 percent of oil consumption, Rowell said.

Economically, coal oil slurry promises savings to both power plants and the nation, he said.

There's no new construction, said Rowell, "that's the key to the promise of coal oil mixtures. Heavy industries could switch to them quickly and at minimal expense," as the price of oil rises, he said.

Fluctuation in the economic situation, shortages of oil, and the stable price of coal have made slurries a viable alternative to oil.

Slurry is messy, black and gooey, however, and leaves an ashy residue, making it as yet unsuitable for domestic use.

"The extent of its acceptance depends upon our energy situation," said Rowell. "In the event of a crisis people will have to seek out alternatives of which slurry is one," he said.

Research is currently being done on another type of slurry which involves the use of coal, a surfactant, and water. No oil would be included in the mixture.

Water makes the mixture less flammable and cheaper than coal oil slurry, but creates other problems.

"Anything grows in water," Rowell explained. The growth of lichens may interfere with the flow of the slurry through pipelines, or hinder the burning capacity of the mixture.

Research is being done with chemical additives to eventually eliminate this problem.

Property tax changes could raise taxes by 25%

By MARK L. CURELOP
Collegian Staff

A change in property tax laws could net $318 million for the town of Amherst, it was announced at a meeting of the Board of Selectmen last night.

Principle Assessor for Amherst Richard Anderson said the current property tax could be raised 22 to 25 percent.

Presently, $29.60 is being paid on every thousand dollars of assessed property, Anderson said.

The 22 to 25 percent increase will raise the property to the full value for personal and real property, he said.

Anderson also suggested a change in the automobile excise tax which has not been changed since 1930, he said. This would alleviate the effects of Proposition 2½, he said.

The Board of Selectmen ended discussion and suggested further investigating into the change of tax laws.

In other business, Parish members of St. Brigid's Church asked the Board of Selectmen for the removal of the bus stop at North Pleasant St. and Cowles Lane in front of the church.

A discussion of moving the bus stop to Louis Foods and Augie's Tobacco shop was shot down by Board members when the difference in elevation in front of the store was considered inaccessible to elderly and handicapped people.

Board of Selectmen Chairman William Atkins proposed a motion to temporarily move the stop in front of Hampshire National Bank for 60 days for study. The motion was not seconded by any of the board members. The Board, however, did say that it would continue to look into the problem.

Journalist to speak on Polish crisis

By CHUCK KILFOYE
Collegian Staff

Journalist Daniel Singer will be the keynote speaker at a lecture entitled "The Polish Crisis" sponsored by Five Colleges Inc. and the Slavic Languages department of the University of Massachusetts this Wednesday in the School of Business Administration, room 120, at 8 p.m.

Singer, a native of Poland, is a long time eastern European correspondent for The Economist and the author of a new book on political unrest in Poland entitled The Road to Gdansk.

Along with Singer there will be two other speakers. Sociologist Jan Gross from Yale University and Marta Petrusewicz, a visiting lecturer in economic history at Harvard University. Both Gross and Petrusewicz were born in Poland and were active in the Polish political movement in 1968. They were both forced to leave the country.

Prof. Robert A. Rothstein, head of the UMass Slavic language department, said Singer was in Poland last summer during the strikes to form independent labor unions.

"He was originally about Polish politics over the last twenty years, not just last summer, but I guess that may have provided him with a new last chapter," said Rothstein.

"The reason we asked him to come here is because there is a lot of interest in the United States over the current problems in Poland and because of the large Polish population in this Valley," Rothstein said. "The Slavic department is always trying to schedule things that would be of interest to the Polish people in the areas," he said.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Editorial

Get out the vote

If you are an undergraduate student you have paid your dues and joined an organization called the Student Government Association. Today and tomorrow by voting in the SGA Presidential elections you have the chance to choose the people who will help decide how your $84 Student Activities Tax Fee will be spent.

The student government has several effective lobbying methods which represent students to the faculty, administration, trustees and legislature. Most notably, the student trustee, the campus president and the public policy team of the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy (SCERA) lobby these groups and inform them of student views.

The leverage these representatives have is proportional to the number of students who trust them to articulate their views. A strong voter turnout will tell the administration and the Commonwealth that these students do represent the majority opinion and should be taken seriously.

UMass students must give the Board of Regents and the University administration a mandate and this cannot be done unless a truly representative vote is the outcome of the election.

To make your vote and the message count, familiarize yourself with the candidates and the issues. Don't base your decision on one article, one speech or one poster. The voting, from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. each day, offers enough time. The location of ballot boxes in the dining commons and the Student Union Building makes voting convenient.

Last year less than 25 percent of the student population cared enough to vote. This year, as money and controls on student life become tighter, your vote counts even more. The reorganization of higher education, financial aid cuts and phasing out the coeducational residential system are issues that must be faced by all students. Your financial aid will be cut, your educational well-being may be lost in the shuffle among 28 other state colleges and budget cuts can only mean longer, not shorter lines for every service offered on this campus.

You can't afford not to vote.

Woman's Week striving for equity

Although the Third World Women's Task Force read its formal statement of withdrawal from Springfield, Northampton, and Amherst at a press conference on Tuesday, March 3, 1981, and presented each reporter with copies of same, an accurate account of the reasons leading to our decision to withdraw from the planning of International Women's Week at UMass has yet to be published. It must also be noted that the original statement was made not last week but almost two and a half weeks ago, on February 18, 1981, at an open IWW planning session.

It is also extremely pertinent to note that IWW at UMass has a history of not only neglecting issues concerning women of color, but poor structural and administrative functioning as well. This fact has resulted in the participation of fewer and fewer women of color each year, and is quite significant regarding the planning of an international women's week, addressing issues of international concern, concerning an international population of women, more than half of whom are women of color.

Furthermore, as was stated in a letter to the Collegian (March 4, 1981) signed by white women who are actively involved in the planning of the week, (in contrast to "sitting on the sidelines" complaining or offering unfounded "advice"), the decision to cancel International Women's Week at UMass was prompted by the Task Force's withdrawal from planning and participation, but was not a direct result of same.

We are not to be blamed for the cancelation of any of the events planned. We are, rather, to be charged with bringing to the attention of the majority of the planners of IWW, who were white, the fact that the term "women" does not refer to "white women only" in an international context. To believe the opposite is not only fallacious, it is racist, ludicrous and, at the very least, ignorant. Therefore, to have disproportionate representation with regard to decision making (which does not necessarily refer to numbers, but more importantly, voting power) of women of color greatly reduces all chances of international interests truly being served. There cannot be a myopic, ethnocentric view of the struggle of women; yet this has been the history of the women's movement in the west (the ideologies of which were challenged by women of color at the international conference of women in Copenhagen.)

Addressing Monica Cronin's letter to the editor, (Collegian, March 6, 1981), who grants that we "may have a legitimate complaint" (emphasis ours) is again to undermine the concerns of women of color. And, as to the second half of that statement, "...but the selection of Women's Week as a time to raise it is a poor one," since Ms. Cronin neither engaged in the planning of the week nor was she aware of the facts which prompted our decision to withdraw, her statement with regard to "appropriate" timing is reduced to a level of obvious bias. Moreover, as in the past, we will continue to raise issues on behalf of women of color whenever we deem it appropriate to do so.

In final reference to Ms. Cronin's letter, the fact that she is "discouraged by the loss of solidarity" begs the question: loss of solidarity among whom? If anything, the lines of communication between women of color and white women planners of the week have been opened, on very positive levels. (We will be meeting later in the semester to constructively review problems in this year's planning and look toward next year's IWW with informed, international perspectives). But perhaps Ms. Cronin was not referring to solidarity between white women and women of color. Perhaps, as some others, she would have been quite satisfied to see an international women's week, planned by white American women, addressing only the concerns specific to white American women.

Alan DerMarderosian's letter to the editor, in the same Collegian issue, assumes with blatant ignorance that the Task Force is "unable to organize any events on its own" and that we lack "money or influence" to do so. We would suggest that Mr. DerMarderosian check local listings of Task Force sponsored events (e.g., the 10 week Workshop/Colloquia series now in progress, facilitated by active members of the Third World Women's Task Force). Additionally, keep an eye out for future programming in the weeks to come (e.g., benefit for the investigation of the murders of twenty Black children in Atlanta and Third World Youth Achievements Awards Dinner for high school students in the greater-Springfield/Amherst area).

It must be re-stated that the Third World Women's Task Force left the planning of IWW, almost two weeks before its cancelation, on a positive note; we offered constructive criticism for future planning, and initiated a proposal for a conflict resolution discussion to be held later this semester. Our position, succintly stated, is that long term problems require long term solutions. Before anything can be resolved, however, those who look to criticize the input of the Third World community and are eager to put the onus of responsibility for their failings on us should follow the example of the white women planners of International Women's Week at UMass, and participate in on-going, in-depth exploration of racism, sexism and classism with with their own groups of reference.

In conclusion, the Third World Women's Task Force hopes that this letter manifests a final statement on the events centered around IWW '81 at UMass. Women interested in contributing in a constructive way toward resolutions should take part in future meetings. We prefer to get on with the business of programming and advocacy vis-a-vis institutional and attitudinal changes relating to race, sex and class oppression. And we hope that concerned others will be striving for equity in these areas as well.

Not too late to stop the trend

These next few days should prove very important for the students of UMass. What is the occasion? The presidential elections for Student Government are upon us.

During the three and one half years I spent at UMass I heard many complaints about the way Student Government operated. Although many of the complaints were valid, it seemed that noone would take the time to examine the root of the problem: student apathy and disorganization. With a student body that neither takes the time to cast a very important vote and later refuses to take an interest in the functioning of their only representative body, the machinery is going to run awry.

The results are disheartening. This trend translates into a loss of power and input into the campus process that should come from a well organized student constituency. The signs over the last few semesters have been ominous. Students' rights have been threatened, housing and university policy decisions have been made with little student input and Public Higher Education has been consistently attacked on the state wide level. And on the national level, lack of student unity is having even worse results.

However, it is not too late to stop this trend. We have the resources along with one of the most talented, capable and energenic student bodies in the country. The time to improve students' situation on this campus is now. There are many new and positive candidates looking for a chance to represent students' interests. Give them a chance by showing your support with your votes. It's time for a positive change.

Five chosen for Commuter Assembly

Five students were elected to the Commuter Assembly as a result of yesterday's election.

Peter Brown, Joseph Gannon, Rob Goetz, Asa Hilliard and Leslie Jennings won election to the Commuter Assembly out of a field of nine candidates.

Voter turn out was low, with only 200 of an approximate 6500 UMass commuters casting votes.

Sunderland bar to lose privilege

Ralph Olszewski, owner of the Seven-O's bar in Sunderland, said yesterday he has "really felt the difference" since he has been required to close the bar at 1 a.m.

The Sunderland Board of Selectmen last Thursday rescinded Olszewski's license to do business until 2 a.m. following a report by town police of overcrowding in the bar.

Selectmen Walter Storozuk said the action came after police reported counting 378 people in the bar on Friday, Feb. 26. The legal capacity of the bar is 125.

Olszewski said lost business includes many janitors from the University of Massachusetts who came to the bar after leaving work at 1 a.m. He said other bartenders who also work until 1 a.m. came over afterwards to relax.

Olszewski said he did not deny the charges, and will not appeal. He said he did not know if or when the 2 a.m. license would be reinstated.

UM police check stolen car report

A 1971 Toyota reported stolen from a P-lot at 3 p.m. yesterday was recovered in lo t 43 a half-hour later when it was towed for being illegally parked, University of Massachusetts police said. The woman who vns the car had last seen it in early February. She apparently had not been back to the car until this afternoon when she went to get a book stored in the car. Police said the ignition was damaged and part of the steering column was removed.

Ashford M. Jones, 20, of John F. Kennedy tower in the Southwest Residential Area was arrested by UMass police on a default warrent from Hampshire District Court at 7:55 a.m. yesterday, police said.

In yesterday's police report, the attempted arson in John Adams tower was incorrectly reported to have occured on the 9th floor. The arson attempt actually occured on the 7th floor.

Nomination papers due for town meeting

Nomination papers for people interested in running for town meeting members must be filed with the town clerk by 4:30 p.m. today.

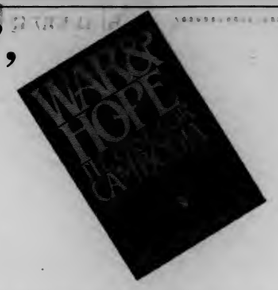
'War and Hope', a lost effort.



War and Hope (Pantheon)
By Prince Norodom Sihanouk

By LYNN RZESZUT
Collegian Correspondent

After the events and publicity in recent years concerning Cambodia, it was just a matter of time before a comprehensive work surrounding the tragedy would be published. As far as I'm concerned, it is still a matter of time.

War and Hope, Prince Norodom Sihanouk's new book, about Cambodia though interesting, is poorly organized and far from objective. More than once I found myself backtracking to clarify some confused and seemingly contradicting statements, and more often than not, I remained confused. I suppose I could have been the unwitting participant in a drug experiment, but I think not. It would be far more likely to state that Sihanouk is a poor historian and even worse technical writer.

Yes, literary fans, the book is another Brethren, though using a far more acidic ink. Sihanouk's ultimate conclusion of a happier Cambodia, including himself as head of state, is the final blow to a dismal disappointment. My suggestion is to leave this book to Sihanouk's biographers, who will doubtless find it more enlightening than the general reader, myself included.

'Barbin' a graceful narrative

Herculine Barbin*: Being the Recently Discovered Memoirs of a Nineteenth Century Hermaphrodite (Pantheon Books)
By Herculine Barbin
intro: Michel Foucault

By LYNN M. RZESZUT
Collegian Correspondent

Books

When given a copy of Herculine Barbin, the dime novels that line drugstore bookshelves in the summer came to mind. You remember, those cultural gems we spent time; great works, such as Swedish Fly Girls Visit the Black Hole of Calcutta, and Pussy Galore Meets Pouch Man; visions of Liza Minelli's Divine Decadence with a Victorian bend worthy of de Sade.

Had I read Foucault's introduction first, (as is the style here at UMass), I probably would have returned the book posthaste. All too often, introductions are either brutally condensed plots or insipid apologies for the main work, and this is no exception (Sorry Michel). Luckily, I had the sense to discover this remarkably well written, graceful narrative; piece by pastel piece.

Through Barbin, our author-narrator, we are introduced to the world of convent education as seen through the eyes of a bright and loved child; a hermaphrodite (combining the characteristics of male and female) classified female. The recollections she gives us are bright scenes whose details are sharp, and whose implications are clear. The author gives the impression of being nothing more than a trusting and objective spectator to the events which take control of her life. It is this fragile innocence which is the true beauty of the book.

The tract itself is short, 115 pages, and is supplemented by the medical and legal documentation surrounding the pivotal events of her life. For those who really need a hook to buy a book, Foucault has also included a piece of pure German smut, "A Scandal at the Convent," which was a period piece scraped from the gossip surrounding the incident. I highly recommend this book to anyone and everyone. It is a touching work which raises questions of sexual identity in a changing society, and documents a world of pseudo-social justice. Herculine sketches her true story in an age strangely reminiscent of our own.

Acosta and his running mate, Edward Lee, said they believed there should be one board of Trustees for the three University of Massachusetts campuses, saying that separate boards would put the campuses in "direct competition."

"One board would unite all the students together," Lee said. "It would be power in numbers."

Bob Crowley, who is running with Jim Nagle as "a vicious alternative," told the audience "all this is over our heads."

"I don't even know what the United States Student Association is," Crowley said.

A video tape of the debate will be shown all day today on the video monitor in the Student Union Building. It will also be broadcast Tuesday at 5:00 and 8:00 p.m. on Sylvan cable channel two.

government is going to align itself with the people or with the ruling regime; if we are going to keep giving weapons to the Host regime, or back the people," he siad.

Phillips also said the increase in the military budget will be beneficial in economic terms to certain parts of the country such as Connecticut which he said will see a "boom" in jobs. He said the increase would be disastrous in other parts such as New York City which will experience a severe cut in human services.

Phillips said the simple solution designed to deal with economic tension is to go to war. He said it is important for young people to get involved in the political process. "The arms race has got to be solved by this generation, who can still remember the horrors of Hiroshima and Nagasaki" Phillips said.

Amherst's Moss launches NU into NCAA's

BOSTON — The mood at the Cabot Gymnasium has turned decidedly somber.

Northeastern's fans have begun to sense the impelling doom as still another Holy Cross Crusader stepped up to the free throw line in this, the final championship game of the Division One ECAC North Conference.

The Huskies had not performed well this evening at their home base and the fans were well aware of this fact.

Holy Cross had seemed a tentative rival for the crown in the first half. Northeastern had not outplayed them, the Huskies were uncharacteristically sluggish themselves. Both teams were subpar. However, in the second half, the Crusaders began to resemble the old Minnesota Purple People Eaters more than a basketball team.

NU was outhustled and outmuscled by the larger Holy Cross squad and the Huskies big-gun board man, Chip Rucker, was virtually neutralized by a Holy Cross forward named Charlie Browne.

The sellout, largely partisan Huskie crowd, which had been strident in their support for most of the game, was quieted by a series of plays that put the Cross on the top 75-73 with six seconds left on the clock and a jubilant Eddie Thurman on the line ready to hammer the final nail into NU's coffin.

Thurman, who had come to Worcester via Lynn Classical and Wake Forest to start in George Blaney's backcourt this season, had a right to be happy. After all, he had brought Holy Cross to this point in the game with a few choicely gunned moonshots that swished past the face of NU captain Pete Harris. Thurman had been an anathema for Harris all night, sticking two shots in the 2000-point scorer's eye and disturbing the overall flow of the Huskie offense.

Now Thurman stands at the line, having made the front end of the one-and-one, ready to bury Northeastern's hopes with a free throw that would give the Cross an insurmountable three-point lead with seconds left in the game. He has a big grin on his face and the game in his pocket. He dips, shoots and . . . misses. Chip Rucker gets the rebound, his biggest of the night by far.

The small Holy Cross cheering section begins their victor's chant, "Five, four, three, two . . ."

The NU fans pick up their coats as Rucker throws a desperation pass to Perry Moss who is about two feet over the halfcourt line in enemy territory.

". . . one, zer- . . ."

The sequence is perfect. The form is perfect. The end result is perfect and when The Shot is replayed on every sports segment of every news telecast in New England later that night, Moss' form, everything, it's still perfect.

Perry Moss, of Northeastern University by way of Amherst, Mass., had just launched a 52-foot bomb that hardly touched the net as it was going through the twine and tied the game at 75 apiece with no time left in regulation.

"It was definitely a prayer," Moss said. "You just don't practice shots like that. Ever. Chip (Rucker) got me the ball and I just heaved it and hoped."

It took a full second for the crowd to react to the miracle. They were stunned. Awestruck. When they did finally break through the fuzz and realize what happened, it was something to see. Euphoria is probably the best word to describe it. Some may call it pandemonium. About two thirds of the stands emptied onto the court en masse to congratulate their team. It's a stroke of luck for Northeastern that none of their players were injured by the exuberance of the crowd as they mobbed the team from starters to benchwarmers.

The Holy Cross bench was distraught. Thurman's "we're number one" single raised finger quickly lost its meams of support and his arm now hung loosely by his side. Coach Blaney looked like someone whose brand-new BMW got hammered by an uninsured 1967 Buick station wagon just as he was driving it out of the showroom.

"After I realized that the shot was good, I knew that we were gonna win somehow," Moss said. "All we needed was that one lift."

Moss was as accurate with his post-The Shot prediction as he was with The Shot itself—right on the money.

Pete Harris lived up to his nickname (Iceman) and iced in two clutch free throws with 30 seconds left in the overtime period. The Northeastern Huskies, whose record now stands at 22-6, held on for the win and the ECAC North crown, beating the Crusaders in overtime 81-79.

When the game was over, Moss, who was named Most Valuable Player of the game, knew exactly what he wanted to do. He ran over to the hoop and started cutting down the net. The crowd roared.

Northeastern is playing Fresno State in the NCAA playoffs next week and Perry Moss will certainly be there. Maybe he has something up his sleeve.

Swimmen place ninth at NE's

By ANNA ROELL
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's swim team brought 15 swimmers and three divers to compete in the New England Intercollegiate Swimming Association's competition last Thursday, Friday, and Saturday at Springfield College and placed 14 out of the 33 colleges competing.

Close to 1,000 swimmers and 42 divers were at Springfield to represent their schools from Divisions 1, 2, and 3. Williams College won the overall competition, Boston University took second, and UMass pulled in 14 with a total of 109 points.

To compete in the New Englands, swimmers and divers have to make qualifying times and scores, but the big thing is not just to qualify, but to place once they're there. The top 16 places in each event score points toward the team. The top six of those 16 race in the finals, and the next 6 race in the consolation finals. Any of these times, if they're good enough, can qualify a swimmer for the Nationals.

UMass did not do as well as they had hoped. "I was really surprised at the level of competition," said coach Russ Yarworth, "it improved so much in one year's time."

The highlights of the meet were Brian Spellman, and senior diver Dan Anthony. Spellman placed 7 in the 50 freestyle with a time of 21.7 in the consolation finals. His time, however, was the third best time there and broke a school record. Spellman also took third in the 100 freestyle with a time of 47.7 in the finals.

Anthony was remarkable on both the 1 and 3 meter diving boards. He placed 8 on 1 meter, and 9 on 3 meter. Every year the outstanding senior diver at New Englands is given the Hugh McCurdy Award for the highest point accumulation in four years of competition. Anthony brought it home this year to UMass.

Tom Lowry and Dave Swenson also swam exceptionally well over the 4-day weekend. Swenson swam the 1650 yard freestyle and his 1,000 yard time broke the school record. His total time also broke the 1650 record for UMass and put him in 12th place at New Englands.

Lowry swam the 400 individual medley and placed 10, but was disqualified for an illegal flutter-kick in butterfly on Thursday night. He came back in the 200 breast and placed 11 with a time of 2.16:4 and a 16 in the 200 individual medley with a time of 2.05:4.

Injuries and illnesses affected the team all season. Swenson had been in a sling with tendonitis for the last four weeks. Jack Fuchs has been out with a broken collarbone. And Lowry and Chris Porter had also been battling with injuries and illnesses all season. Diver John McCurdy injured his shoulder during the 1 meter diving event. "I was pleased at the way our guys swam, but I think a few of the guys were a little flat," Yarworth said.

Equestrian team has strong debut

By TRACY MCDONALD AND DIANE MACBETH
Special to the Collegian

The University of Massachusetts Equestrian Team competed at the Shallowbrook Hunt Club in Somers, Connecticut, in the first intercollegiate horse show of the spring season Saturday.

The event, which was sponsored by American International College, fielded a strong league of 26 intercollegiate horse show teams from the New England region. Massachusetts rode to a successful team finish in second place with 26 points. Dartmouth College led the field with 28 points.

Coach Patty Carbone's team has been unable to do any serious training as of late due to inclement weather and the lack of an indoor arena.

However, the strategically selected point riders of the day faired well enough in their respective divisions to hoist the UMass riders to their second place finish. Five point riders are chosen by each team's respective coach to have their place points (first place is worth seven points, sixth place is worth one point) tallied towards their team's final score.

Point riders Tracy McDonald and Kate O'Malley placed first in their divisions while Vicki Fairchild, Diane Macbeth and Karen Lynch placed third in their brackets.

Other outstanding efforts were made by Ken Whelihan with second and fourth place finishes, Laurie Palmer, who had two fourth places and Kelly Flynn, who contributed a third place finish.

All Massachusetts riders are working to qualify for the New England Regionals which will be held on April 25 at Mount Holyoke College. The next horse show, sponsored by Tufts University, will be held April 4. The University of Massachusetts hosts its own show, April 18, at Tilson Farm.

McGovern at SUB attacks Reagan, right

By BRIAN SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

Former South Dakota Senator George McGovern warned a crowd of over a thousand last night in the Student Union Ballroom of the threat to the nation by the New Right and the policies of President Reagan.

McGovern said the highly organized assault on Senators and Representatives by the Moral Majority posed a threat to both the nation and religion.

The New Right's use of superficial arguments and influence in the religious realm to further their own political dogma must be met by clear thinking Americans, McGovern said.

"They muddy and confuse the waters so it is hard to focus on common sense," he said.

Being one of the Senators defeated by the New Right's campaign, McGovern said he will use his time out of office to work on a new organization called Americans for Common Sense (ACS).

The ACS will use the New Right's tactics of direct mail fund raising and use of the media to counter attacks against Liberal office holders targeted by the New Right.

"We want to have informed people stand up for the facts. How can one candidate answer a blizzard of charges?" McGovern said.

McGovern also condemned President Reagan's policy toward El Salvador as the same old arguments used before the Vietnam War.

"If military advisors and support to El Salvador isn't stopped, I have no doubt people in this auditorium will be involved there," McGovern said.

Reagan's proposed educational cuts were also attacked by the former Senator who called them a threat to the quality of education in the United States.

McGovern said the Liberal defeat of 1980 may be a good thing by giving the public the chance to test conservatism and allowing liberals time to find better answers to the old issues.

Neither party had solutions that were satisfactory he said. McGovern cited the fact that half the population refused to vote as proof of this.

"Voter dissatisfaction is a wide open invitiation to demagogues," he said.

McGovern warned listeners not to give up symbols to the New Right either. "In the sixties they took the flag as their symbol, in the seventies they took the family now in the eighties they want God," he said.

"My father was a minister and he never told me God was a right wing reactionary," McGovern said.

The Senator also questioned the conservative policy of deregulation of government when they were deciding issues such as abortion.

Student Government election turnout heavy

By KATHLEEN HOWLEY
Collegian Staff

The first day of voting for the Student Government Association (SGA) presidency and the Campus Center Board of Governors ended at 6:00 p.m. yesterday with a heavier than usual turnout, according to Jim Murphy, chair of the Undergraduate Student Senate Governmental Affairs Committee.

Murphy said close to 3,000 ballots were cast which, if duplicated tomorrow, would indicate a ten percent increase in turnout over last year.

Murphy said he believed the heavy turnout would show UMass administrators that students are not apathetic about events affecting their education.

"Just the fact that the turnout was more will impress the administration," Murphy said.

Murphy said there was a problem with ballots getting stuck in the opening of the ballot boxes and estimated that he fixed the ballot boxes in each of the six polling places twice.

"Aside from the machine problems, things went as smoothly as could be expected," Murphy said.

He added that in his opinion no election goes smoothly, and expressed appreciation to the 45 people who volunteered time to staff the polls.

The polls will be open from 10:00 a.m. to 6:00 p.m. tomorrow at the following locations:

- Berkshire Dining Commons for residents of John Adams, John Quincy Adams, MacKimmie, Patterson, Washington, Cance, Pierpont and Moore Dormitories.
- Hampshire Dining Commons for residents of James, Melville, Thoreau, Kennedy, Prince, Crampton and Coolidge Dormitories.
- Franklin Dining Commons for residents of the Orchard Hill and Central Residential Areas.
- Worcester Dining Commons for residents of Northeast and Sylvan.
- In Front of the Hatch in the Student Union Building for all Commuters and Greeks.
- In Butterfield Dormitory for all residents of the building.

Students must present a valid UMass identification card in order to vote.

Housing crunch makes apartment hunting dismal

By PATRICK HAFEY
Collegian Staff

If you're going to be living off campus next semester, or if you're already living off campus but planning on finding a new apartment for September, then the time is right to begin your search.

"To insure yourself housing for next September, it would be best to start looking in April. If you put it off any longer you'll find there won't be a lot available," said Jackie Racette of the Amherst Town Planner's Office.

For students in the five-college area who have attempted to locate an apartment off-campus, the housing crunch is a hard reality. Waiting lists, high rents, inadequate facilities, and the list goes on.

Rolling Green Apartments, with 204 units available, has a waiting list of 250. Village Park Apartments has 200 units available, and a waiting list of 175. Townehouse Apartments have 96 units and a waiting list of over 500.

It all sounds a little dismal if you're not sure where you're going to be living next fall.

There are nine major apartment complexes in the Amherst area with a combined total of almost 2,000 units. There are no vacancies at any of these apartment complexes.

"Students looking for housing should get three or four people together to offset the high costs and the short supply," said one Northampton area realtor.

The listings in local daily newspapers were often mentioned as reliable sources for apartments and houses for rent.

"Check the listings in the classified ad sections of the newspapers, and contact some of the local realtors. Many of these offices have a courtesy rental book available," said Mike Yazel of the Northampton Office of Community Development.

Roughly half of the rentals in this area require the occupant to pay their own utilities. Others will cover a portion of these costs, and others will cover all utilities. The cost of the apartment or house should be commensurate with the portion of utilities paid by the occupant.

But the first and most important step is to get an early start on the housing rush.

World and national news

King says college students to support themselves

By THOMAS S. BROWN
Associated Press

BOSTON — Gov. Edward J. King defended his proposed cutback of welfare for college students yesterday, saying they are old enough to support themselves.

"Anyone 18 to 21 and ablebodied should be able to find, either on campus or offcampus, enough money to support themselves," King told an anti-poverty forum attended mostly by high school students.

Addressing a panel sponsored by Action for Boston Community Development, the governor emphasized that the idea of that particular cutback was his own.

"That's me... I initiated that," King responded when a spectator inquired about the aid item that has been dropped from the fiscal 1982 budget.

According to the state Human Services office, Massachusetts can save about $6.4 million on its $1.8 billlion welfare program if it stops giving assistance to parents for 18-21-year-olds in school. Welfare families presently can collect about $65 a month for each child in that category. Elimination of the aid is expected to close 625 welfare cases, and reduce assistance for 5,160 others.

King also defended the recent doubling of Boston's mass-transit fares, saying that users of the system had been paying too small a share of its cost — less than 25 percent. When a questioner suggested that the fare hike hurt poor people, King disagreed.

"We hear that the poor are not working, so they may not be riding the MBTA," King said. The remark drew a chorus of groans from the audience of about 300 people.

Several spectators asked King to explain why he supports the Reagan administration's efforts to trim social service spending while increasing military outlays.

King said he endorses the "general thrust" of the Reagan program, but not all of it. For example, he said, he wanted the federal government to continue earmarking at least 20 percent of the oil windfall profits revenue for fuel assistance.

When a questioner asked King if he supported Reagan's goal of "dissolving the minimum wage," the governor said he wasn't sure.

"There may be some merit in the suggestion that the minimum wage has discouraged employers from employing people," he said. "I may well be a supporter of that but I don't know."

King said his administration's effort to help poor people has centered on helping the private sector create more jobs. About 137,000 more people have been added to Massachusetts payrolls over the past two years, he noted.

Reagan explores CIA operations

By BARRY SCHWEID
Associated Press

LANGLEY, Va. — A top official of the Central Intelligence Agency said yesterday a "changing world" has prompted the Reagan administration to explore whether to rescind some limits to CIA spying within the United States.

The administration has launched an intensive study of legal and other barriers to intelligence operations to see if some can be removed by the summer to combat terrorism, deputy CIA director Bobby R. Inman said at a rare public briefing at CIA headquarters.

The survey is known to include consideration of expanding authority for the CIA to use break-ins, physical surveillance and covert infiltration of American groups and businesses.

However, Inman said, "there hasn't even been the slightest hint, from anyone, of using a covert action capability in a domestic situation."

Cuts threaten minorities

BOSTON—A delegation of city and town leaders urged the King administration yesterday to decide quickly how to override seniority and thus shield minorities from municipal layoffs required by Proposition 2½.

Gov. Edward J. King received the plea from the Local Goverment Advisory Committee in a meeting at the Statehouse. The panel told him communities were unsure how to reconcile affirmative-action rules with the state Civil Service law, which requires a "last hired, first fired" approach.

King agreed the problem was "indeed complex" but did not offer any solution. However, he promised to include the community officials on a task force that is studying the situation for the Massachusetts Commission Against Discrimination. King said he would name labor union officials to that task force.

Cambridge City Manager James Sullivan said a policy is needed quickly because many communities will have to order layoffs July 1, the start of the next fiscal year. The Proposition 2½ tax rollback requires virtually all cities and larger suburbs in the state to reduce their property levy by 15 percent when the new fiscal cycle starts.

Hostages held in Syria

DAMASCUS, Syria — Hijackers holding more than 100 hostages on a Pakistani airliner sealed down their demands yesterday but threatened to blow up the plane and all aboard unless Pakistan met a Wednesday deadline for freeing political prisoners, Syrian and Pakistani officials said.

Negotiators sought a compromise settlement that would free hostages and political prisoners simultaneously. The Boeing 720, seized nine days ago over Pakistan and taken first to Kabul, Afghanistan, and then Damascus, rested on an auxiliary runway here surrounded by Syrian police cars.

Three Americans and two alien U.S. residents were among the hostages, described as increasingly nervous as the ordeal continued.

Revised budget cuts $48.6 b.

WASHINGTON — President Reagan laid before Congress yesterday a $695-billion budget he claimed would return government to "economic sanity" through overall cuts of $48.6 billion despite a bolstered military.

Reagan's revised fiscal 1982 program would boost defense spending by $4.8 billion and slash 300 domestic programs from the projections left by Jimmy Carter.

The budget contained $13.8 billion worth of newly announced cuts, including deeper reductions than previously sought in welfare, water projects, job programs, public housing, food stamps and education. First-time reductions in veterans programs, loan subsidies and dozens of social services also were proposed.

O'Leary sentenced to prison

BOSTON — Former Boston School Committee member Gerald O'Leary was sentenced to 18 months in prison yesterday after pleading guilty previously to charges he tried to extort $650,000 from a school bus contractor.

U.S. District Judge David Nelson also gave O'Leary a three-year suspended sentence and assigned him to probation for two years following his release from prison.

Soviet maneuvers worry U.S.

WARSAW, Poland — The Soviet Union and Poland yesterday announced joint Warsaw Pact military exercises will begin in Poland later this month. The announcement followed a one-hour strike in Lodz, the first major work stoppage in more than a month in this Communist nation beset by economic and labor troubles. U.S. officials were concerned by the manuevers.

The Polish news agency PAP said the exercises would take place in Poland, East Germany, Czechoslovakia and the Soviet Union in the second half of March. Some Western observers said the exercises were expected at this time of the year, but U S. State Department officials last week expressed concern about reports of such maneuvers.

Reagan jeered in Ottawa

OTTAWA — Jeered by Canadian demonstrators, President Reagan met yesterday with Prime Minister Pierre Elliott Trudeau on problems that come between two historically friendly and interdependent neighbors.

Reagan took the protests in stride, but they annoyed his host. Trudeau professed to love hecklers but appealed for his countrymen to show better manners during Reagan's 28-hour visit, his first presidential trip outside the United States.

The two leaders, who had never met, sat down for a 15-minute introductory chat in Trudeau's oak-paneled office on Parliament Hill. Then they called in their aides for a discussion of El Salvador, East-West relations and the potential impact of Reagan's economic program on the United States' closest and largest trading partner.

Harlem Renaissance said to revitalize black history

By MONICA CRONIN
Collegian Correspondent

The Harlem Renaissance was an effort to create a new black identity using black folklore and provided a new social setting for blacks and whites.

This view was presented yesterday by University of Massachusetts English PhD candidate Judith Brazenburg who is also a member of the Women's Studies department advisory board.

Yesterday's discussion was one of a series sponsored by the Women's studies department.

The Rennaisance occured after World War I when blacks who had fought for the rights of self determination and democracy decided they were entitled to the privileges they had fought for. The push for self determination included a revitalization of black history and black culture.

Two schools of thought arose from the revival of black history said Brazenburg. One group of writers, including W.E.B. Dubois, thought that the "talented 10 percent" of the black population had an incumbent responsibility to "put the best foot forward for blacks." The other group of writers focused on black folklore and African traditions and promoted the separation of black culture from white culture, said Brazenburg.

After the shock of World War I Harlem provided an alter ego for upper class whites, said Brazenburg. Harlem allowed the whites to "'eternalize their baser selves" without taking responsibility for their actions, she said.

The Harlem Renaissance deals with blacks' attempts to reconcile the split between mind and body in a society that equates consciousness with white males, said Brazenburg.

In her discussion Brazenburg concentrated on the works of Jessie Faucet, Nella Larsen and Zora Neele Hurston. The three authors represent each of the literary groups prevalent in the Renaissance, which took place approximately 1920-1935.

Faucet was a representative of the popular school of thought promoted by Dubois and his followers, said Brazenburg. Faucet resolves the mind and body split by aligning blacks with the white values of the Puritan ethic, she said.

Larsen was less popular than Faucet because she could find no positive aspect to black life said Brazenburg. Hurston wrote her novels after the Renaissance but was a member of the Harlem community at the time she based much of her work upon traditional black folklore said Brazenburg. Hurston was the first to focus on the positive aspects of blackness, altering the saying "white is to black as mind is to body" to "black is to black as mind is to body" said Brazenburg.

Genetic inquiry advanced by UMass professors

By PAUL GUEST
Collegian Correspondent

Today there are advances being made in genetic research and the University of Massachusetts is keeping pace with the efforts of Dr. Maurille J. Fournier, associate professor of biochemistry, and Dr. Mark Mount, associate professor of plant pathology.

"At the turn of the century came the industrial revolution, during the 60's and 70's we had an electronic revolution, in the 80's and 90's there will be a biological revolution," said Associate Dean James Shaw of the College of Arts and Sciences.

From the start, a dark cloud has hung over the possible side effects of this controversial research. Owing to early concerns over possible hazardous clones, the scientific community with the National Institute of Health developed guidelines for performing genetic research. Weakened strains of bacteria, that could not survive even if they got out, were studied.

"At first there was an overreaction by scientists and many in the public sector as well," Fournier said.

"Physical and biological containment risks were played up by the media and in many cases research was delayed unnecessarily," Fourner said, "but useful guidelines and safety surveillance procedures have been developed."

In Amherst, there is an Institutional Biohazard Committee that is made up of seven members from the town and seven members of the faculty that oversee genetic research.

The advances of genetic research facilitates the manufacturing of vaccines, insulin for diabetes, human growth hormones for dwarfism. interferon for the treatment of cancer, and the enzyme urokinase for the treatment of blood clots, Fournier said.

Biochemistry studies life at a molecular level. The biochemical makeup of a person has major influences on the emotional and behavioral makeup that he or she expresses. This is the reason why behavioral disorders can be treated chemically. The biochemical makeup also determines our physical charateristics.

"The goal of this research is to understand and study the synthesis, structure, and function of nucleic acids," said Fournier.

"The goal of biochemistry is to generally reconstruct the molecular process in vitro, i.e. in the test tube, and with regard to gene structure. An important appraoch is to study isolated genes," said Fournier.

Genes consist of strands of the chemical deoxribonucleic acid (DNA) that dictates what every cell manufactures and ultimately how every human being will turn out. DNA is the building block of the cell that determines what cells will turn into our skin, eyes and organs.

Recombinant DNA is the process of taking a gene from one organism and splicing it into a small DNA molecule that can be reinserted into another organism. The organism receiving the new genetic information is a gene clone or a recombinant cell. The small DNA vehicle will be reproduced in the new host cell.

"One important advantage to cloning is that one can make lots of copies of the gene under study," Fournier said.

With isolated genes, detailed studies on gene action can be carried out.

"This approach is especially useful in understanding genetically based diseases," Fournier said.

There is also classical genetice research taking place in plant pathology by Dr. Mark Mount.

"We are trying to identify virulent factors in organisms that cause a plant disease called soft rot," said Mount. "plants with a high resistance to disease would try to be developed." Mount said this would be favorable because it would mean less use of pesticides and a higher yield for farmers.

"In the future we will use techniques utilizing isolated protoplasts (cells) that can regenerate to ne plants."

Mount said they will also be studying natural defenses to plant disease.

Fat investigated at UMass by nutritionist and students

By MICHELLE MURRAY
Collegian Correspondent

In an effort to publicize National Nutrition Month, Dr. Kenneth Samonds of the Food Science and Nutrition Department and a group of nutrition students were helping students determine their percentage of body fat at Berkshire Dining Commons yesterday.

The procedure involves taking skin-fold measurements on certain areas of the arm, back and abdomen with a caliper and then feeding these measurements into a microcomputer, along with the subject's age, sex, and weight. This microcomputer, programmed by Samonds, would then calculate the person's percentage of body fat, pounds of body fat, and amount of excess pounds of fat. Applying these results to a chart, a person could determine whether he or she were normal, overweight, or obese.

Samonds said the purpose of the project is twofold: it is an exercise "in service to the community" and it provides the "chance for my students to get experience in measuring skin-fold thickness." The project will be held at Faneuil Hall Marketplace this weekend as a part of a health conference.

Samonds said of the experiment that it "has shown us here and at the Mall that people are really interested in how much body fat they have" and that "people are much more interested in nutrition when it's related directly to them." He estimated that approximately 120 students participated when the experiment was held at Worcester Dining Commons last week and estimated the same amount at Berkshire. "That's a lot of students to measure in two hours," he said.

Student response to the experiment was enthusiastic. "I'm perfect," said freshman engineering major Matt Saunders as he walked away with his results. Asked why he participated, he answered, "I was interested. I didn't think I was overweight."

Samonds said the experiment would be in Franklin Dining Commons Tuesday, March 17 and that a date for holding the experiment in the Campus Center Concourse is being considered so that commuter students and University staff may participate.

Several thefts & break-ins reported by campus police

Two speakers valued at $600 were reported stolen from the Campus Center operations room media lockers yesterday, University of Massachusetts police said. There was no sign of a break-in, police said.

The speakers had never been used and were still in the boxes, said Dudley Bridges, Campus Center building operations manager. They had been purchased several months ago and stored since then, he said.

The boxes were still there but without the speakers. The theft was discovered when the speakers were needed at the Top of the Campus restaurant, Bridges said.

A checkbook, credit card and currency valued at $420 were reported stolen from a dormitory room in John F. Kennedy tower in the Southwest Residential Area at 4:41 p.m. Monday, police said. The door of the room had been kicked in, they said.

A short wave radio and an AM/FM tape player valued at $325 were reported stolen at 8:08 p.m. Monday from John Adams tower in the Southwest Residential Area. Police said the door of the room had been kicked in.

A copy machine in the Graduate Research Center received $30 damage when someone apparently tried to remove the coin box police said. The incident was reported at 11:56 p.m. Monday.

American Indian Movement spokesman to address issues

Vernon F. Bellecourt, co-founder and Executive Director of the Denver Chapter of the American Indian Movement (AIM), will address contemporary issues facing Indian tribes tonight at 8 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom.

Bellecourt is the first guest speaker to be sponsored by the newly formed American Indian Student Association (AISA) here at UMass.

The major objective of AISA is to provide an academic and moral support group for American Indians coming into the five-college area, said Sharon Smith, a group member.

As a representative of AIM, an organization uniting native people in their struggles, Bellecourt will focus upon the genocide of Indian peoples by the American government. Other issues will be the misuse of Indian land, health care, education and unemployment.

As well as touring the United States as a representative of AIM, Bellecourt has participated in numerous demonstrations and walks to convey an accurate and positive image of Indian people. He has also worked to defeat anti-Indian legislation in the United States Congress.

This evening's event is open to the public at no charge.

Acosta and Lee
A Neccessary Ingredient

To The Third World Community:

This is the final day for UMass students to vote for their future representatives in the Student Government Association. With fours sets of presidential candidates to choose from, many students are still undecided.

It is the opinion of Nummo News that Nelson Acosta and Ed Lee will best represent not only the needs of the Third World community but the entire population as well.

Together, Acosta and Lee represent five years of experience within the SGA. Each have been actively involved in the student community and are the first Third World team in the history of this university to campaign for the co-presidency of the SGA.

Acosta and Lee have been the only team to lobby for Third World Community support. They have established a relationship of service to the community; they have asked members of the community what can be done for us, as students, rather than telling us what they will do.

Without our vote they are helpless.

Both Lee and Acosta are known for their straight forwardness and their honesty, a necessary ingredient for any community representative. Thus, a community that needs presidential representatives must vote for those who are closest to it. In our opinion this would be Nelson Acosta and Ed Lee.

ATLANTA—March 9—A group of marchers stand on a street corner adjacent to the federal building in Atlanta after a Monday march seeking additional federal funds to help solve the deaths and disappearances of 21 black children.

Gov. defends aid cuts

BOSTON — Gov. Edward J. King defended his proposed cutback of welfare aid for college students Tuesday, saying the young men and women are old enough to support themselves.

"Anyone 18 to 21 and able-bodied should be able to find, either on campus or off-campus, enough money to support themselves," King told an anti-poverty forum attended mostly by high school students.

Addressing a panel sponsored by Action for Boston Community Development, the governor emphasized that the idea of that particular welfare reduction was his own.

"That's me...I initiated that," King responded when a spectator inquired about the aid item that has been dropped from the fiscal 1982 budget.

According to the state Human Services office, Massachusetts can save about $6.4 million on its $1.8 billion welfare program if it stops giving assistance to parents for 18-21-year-olds in school.

Welfare families presently can collect about $65 a month for each child in that category. Elimination of the aid is expected to close 625 welfare cases, and reduce assistance for 5,160 others.

King also defended doubling of Boston's mass transit fares, saying that users of the system had been paying too small a share of its cost — less than 25 percent. When a questioner suggested that the fare hike hurt poor people, King disagreed.

"We hear that the poor are not working, so they may not be riding the MBTA," King said. The remark drew a chorus of groans from the audience of about 300 people.

Asked if he supported Reagan's goal of "dissolving the minimum wage," the governor said he wasn't sure.

"There may be some merit in the suggestion that the minimum wage has discouraged employers from employing people," he said.

King said his administration's effort to help poor people has centered on helping the businesses create more jobs. About 137,000 more people have been added to Massachusetts payrolls over the past two years, he claimed.

When the governor urged low-income people to support coal-burning to reduce utility costs, a young man in the audience wondered if King was trying to enhance his private investment in a southern coal company.

King dismissed the comment as a "cheap shot."

"None of that coal is being sold in Massachusetts, and I don't see anything wrong with it if it is," King responded.

Atlanta police files combed

ATLANTA — Detectives investigating the slayings of 20 black children have combed nearly 10 years of police personnel files, trying to determine whether a former policeman might be linked to the killings, law enforcement authorities said.

The Atlanta Journal today quoted unidentified authorities as saying hundreds of files on police officers who have resigned or been forced to quit in the past eight to 10 years have been examined by the special police task force.

Police are not convinced the killer or killers came from their own ranks, and officials said the canvass of the files was only one of many investigative strategies, according to the report.

Investigators were looking for clues that a former officer might be avenging himself against the police force by crimes against children, the newspaper said.

In another development yesterday, Atlanta police canceled a lookout for a black child reported missing Monday night. John Billups, 12, was picked up by Fulton County authorities and taken to a juvenile detention center, police said. His case had not been turned over to the special task force.

Meanwhile, the city prepared for a benefit concert to raise funds for the task force investigation.

The concert, featuring Sammy Davis Jr. and Frank Sinatra, was scheduled for Tuesday night in the Atlanta Civic Center. Davis said Monday that ticket sales and corporate donations had generated more than $140,000 for the investigation.

The task force has been probing the slayings of 20 black children and the disappearance of one other since July 1979, even though a number of the bodies were found in other police jurisdictions.

One other black child, 15-year-old Joseph Bell, has been missing for more than a week, but his disappearance is being investigated by the city police missing persons unit rather than the task force.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

You can't drink, but you can die

If you've gotten complacement about the risks you take using illegal drugs, it might be time for you to think about what the conservative governmental trend will mean for you in terms of the increased repression of drug culture. The recent 13-month jail sentence for possession with intent to sell (a dime bag) that a local 72-year-old judge meted out to a 24-year-old man may or may not be an isolated incident, but in any case, more and more of that kind of thing is bound to start happening as conservative politicians appoint conservative judges and powerful authorities in social service agencies.

Jackson Katz

The significance for young people of this potential crackdown is obvious. Illegal drugs are an integral part of our sub-culture. And whereas many people associated drugs in the sixties with the radical counterculture, virtually our entire generation grew up with drugs as more or less a regular part of our lives.

Therefore, as a result of both the countercultural movement and the widespread acceptance and use of drugs in our generation, young people today in general have a much more mature attitude toward drugs than do most older people. What this means in terms of the rise of the New Right and the cultural repression bound to occur as a result is that the "generation gap" may again come into clear focus around key issues such as drugs.

It's not that we don't have our problem with drugs. It's obvious that on the whole we have a lot to learn about the constructive and responsible use of all sorts of drugs. But our problems with drugs can be dealt with, if they were only approached in a positive way, and not in the close-minded, drug-negative way that so many older people approach the issue of drugs with.

You rarely hear educators or politicians or even "concerned citizens" speak of "drug use." Instead, whenever drugs and young people are discussed, they're discussed in terms of "drug abuse," and the implication is clear. This society does not accept the younger generations' progressive attitude toward drugs.

The hypocrisy of conservatives and "anti-drug" older people is not lost on young people, however. We all know that cancer-causing cigarettes are a multi-billion dollar, legal industry, and the comparisons with the official posture concerning marijuana are unavoidable. Alcohol, not traditinally considered a drug in the same sense that other drugs are, is so widely used in this society that it is quite literally a part of everyday life for tens of millions of people. Yet adult use of alcohol and other legal drugs such as valium and sleeping pills are condoned and even actively supported while young people go to jail for getting high.

If you don't agree, and you also don't think that the drug issue is a generational conflict thing, ask some middle-aged legislator why 18 and 19-year-old men can die in the army but cannot drink beer legally.

One positive aspect (if it can be called that) of the attempt at cultural repression of younger generations is that more young people will be able to clearly see the difference between their real wants and needs and our government's responses to these. More of us will see that the decision-makers in this country are not considering the rights and legitimate aspirations of young people, but instead "represent" us only when it's politically beneficial to.

Letters

Let's work on realities

In a recent letter to the Collegian, two students urged me to help get this school's name changed to Massachusetts University at Amherst—or MUA, for short.

This way, the writers said, since we'll no longer be the University of Massachusetts, we'll no longer be called UMass for short and thus we won't be open to getting tagged as ZooMass.

The letter was well-written, well-argued, and well-documented, but I can't buy its basic point: namely, that a new name could, with the stroke of a pen, turn around the UMass, or ZooMass, reputation. What people think of us is likely to shape what they call us, and not the other way around.

Take the case of Haywood Sullivan. Is it his name, or his judgement as an owner, that leads us to tag him as Wayward Sullivan? I'd say it's his poor judgement. If his name were William Sullivan, we'd call him Three-Dollar Bill. If his name were John Sullivan, he'd wind up as Toilet Head. And so it goes.

If we show the same face to the rest of the state, but call ourselves MUA, we may kill off the ZooMass tag only to see it supplanted by *Moo*Mass. We fought the cow college image for long enough, without inviting its return.

The bottom line is this: Let's work on the realities, and the appearances will begin to take care of themselves.

Ralph Whitehead, Jr.

Name makes groups uneasy

We, the organizers of the game advertised as "Killer," would like to respond to the controversy it has raised.

We believe that it is the name and stereotype associated with the word "killer" that has made many groups uneasy. (Perhaps changing the name to "Survivor" will eliminate some of the negative connotations of the game). We would rather see the tensions and aggressions of students safely vented in a game of tag with rubber darts than in the displays of antisocial behavior that plague our campus.

Care has been taken to organize the game so that a healthy attitude is preserved in the proceedings. Some examples: The plastic dart guns are painted bright orange to distinguish them from real weapons. The game will not be played between midnight and six a.m. No tagging attempts can be made in the presence of more than three witnesses. (This is to accomodate those uninterested in the game). The honor system applies to all participants. Disputes will be ruled on by the Board of Directors.

We also feel that the Student Senate has overstepped its bounds in endorsing the letter to the editor attacking the proceedings of our group. The insinuation that this game harbors an attitude which perpetrates or sympathizes with violent and brutal acts against women and Third World people is absurd and totally contrary to the intent of the game. There are no racial or sexual overtones in this game. Anyone who wants may play "Survivor."

The point made about "Killer" being banned in Dade County, Florida should be clarified also. Dade County has one of the highest violent crime rates in the country. There are an average of two murders each day. Dade County police have enough on their hands and students playing "Killer" could interfere with their investigations. Amherst is not comparable to Miami or Dade County. The UMass Police will be kept up to date on the status of "Survivor."

The allegation in the Senate letter that "...they go so far as to charge money is as sick as the notion that people would think of participating..." implies that anyone even thinking of participating in "Survivor" is sick. Does choosing to play a game that is safer than playing rugby or football make a person "sick" or "depraved?"

One Student Senator on the Senate Coordinating Committee was quoted as saying "We'll probably find out that the game was started by the CIA.." Is this the type of person who represents the students interests in the SGA? If the Senate had bothered to obtain a copy of the rules, and read up on the game, they might have found that playing "Survivor" will be an enjoyable and imagination stimulating pastime. Currently, they appear intent on reducing the students' choices of social recreation. We feel that the Student Senate should spend their time preventing the fiscal abuses of the University and stop trying to divert our attention from their inability to do so.

Think about getting involved

It would seem that in this time of tightening budgets and tax reforms that the funding of public higher education is not one of Massachusetts' highest priorities. In fact, the newly created Board of Regents has made it clear that institutions should assume in their planning that there will be a real decrease in funding. This, coupled with the projections of a nationwide decline in enrollments, has led many schools to start a process of retrenchment and prioritizing of programs. UMass is among the schools in the process of review.

The impact of such a process on the student body could be felt next. Class sizes increasing, availability lessening, and the limiting of the variety of majors are just a few of the ways students will be affected. To avoid such actions, the University must be able to articulate its needs to the Commonwealth, and have people rise up to its defense. So far, the students have been the University's most eloquent spokespersons, its most steadfast defenders. The only thing we lack is more of them. Today as you vote in the Student Government election think about the candidates and the issues, but think too about what you can do to get involved and to preserve the quality of your education.

AFL-CIO union president attacks Reagan's budget cuts

By JOSEPH BARRETT
Collegian Staff

At a regional conference of the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations (AFL-CIO), Union President Lane Kirkland attacked President Reagan's proposed budget cuts and economic plan.

Reading from a prepared text in front of representatives of the AFL-CIO in the Sheraton Independence Ballroom in Boston, Kirkland said "something is wrong with a program that, in the name of supply- side economics, helps the wealthy at the expense of middle-class workers and the poor."

Characterizing Reagan's belief that budget cuts would reduce tax burdens and improve living standards as a "fantasy," Kirkland also said "I am not comforted by the President's assurance that his budget cuts will not hurt the 'truly deserving needy.' I have difficulty grasping the distinction between the 'needy' and the 'truly deserving needy.'"

Kirkland said labor "also has a stake in the revitalization of the American economy," but felt the Reagan proposals were no cure.

"If you stopped the world, froze the federal budget, and balanced it overnight, you would reduce the inflation rate, as recorded in the consumer price index, by less than one-half of 1 percent for a full year," said Kirkland.

Explaining labor's economic proposal, Kirkland said "Why not instead decrease the unemployment rate by 1 percent and, thus, bring about a $30 billion reduction in the federal deficit? A one percent drop in unemployment would be enough to balance the original budget for fiscal year 1982. It would also alleviate the national disgrace of a jobless rate at 7.4 percent."

Kirkland asked whether the people "voted to cripple themselves; he saw crippling effects in proposed cuts in the areas of: education and welfare programs, unemployment insurance and trade adjustment assistance, Medicaid and health planning, mass transit, child nutrition programs, student assistance programs, alternative energy programs, urban aid and economic development programs, environmental and subsidized housing programs.

Kirkland also attacked the tax-break aspect of Reagan's economic plan, saying "it is simply wrong to develop an entire economic program based on the premise that budget cuts are needed to finance tax cuts that constitute an income transfer from those who are less well-off to those who are more well-off."

Kirkland called Reagan's 10 percent across-the-board tax cut a "facade of equity," and instead called for a 20 percent tax cut on Social Security taxes. "The issue here is tax justice," said Kirkland.

Kirkland said that labor wanted money to be invested in industrial areas and industries that could be targeting for revitalization, saying this would stimulate the economy and help battle unemployment.

"We will not support indiscriminate tax breaks applies across the board to highly profitable industries, or to those who would expand in the Sun Belt by closing facilities in (New England)," said Kirkland.

KKK rally planned in support of police

MERIDEN, Conn. (AP)—Local leaders of the Ku Klux Klan decided Monday night to go ahead with a planned rally in support of the Meriden police, who are under scrutiny over the shooting death of a young black man by a white officer.

After meeting with Klan leaders earlier in the day, Police Chief George Caffrey had said that he was discouraging the rally but would not ban the racist organization's planned demonstration.

William Bohndorf, a leader of the state branch of the Invisible Empire of the Ku Klux Klan, one faction of the Klan, said he believes the police officer involved in the shooting, Eugene Hale, "acted correctly" in the incident.

Hale shot and killed 24-year-old Keith Rakestrau of Hartford on Feb. 24 after a reported attempted theft in a Meriden shopping plaza.

British student compares women's issues here and there

By LISA PEDULLA
Collegian Correspondent

Comparing the women's movement in England and the United States, an exchange student from London said she thinks American women tend to hurt the movement by always speaking out so loudly.

Lesley Maclean said in England women seek rights, "in a quieter fashion, not so out in the open." Maclean said, "Women in the U.S. go too far, which hurts the movement rather than betters it."

English women seek rights "in a quieter fashion...Women in the U.S. go too far which hurts the Movement rather than betters it."

Maclean said people don't hear as much about the women's movement in England. There are not as many people involved making it less forceful than in the U.S.

She said women in England are receiving more equal pay and treatment, but there is also a stigma because employers expect them to get married and have children.

Maclean, a 24-year-old American Studies major, described the cultural differences between America and England as "the hardest thing to come to terms with. You just can't be prepared for the cultural shock," she said.

Maclean, who is on compulsory exchange for her major, said of her first view of UMass, "It is so huge and diverse that you don't get one impression." Maclean said the University of Kent, where she goes to school in England, is much smaller and has fewer facilities than UMass.

Higher education in England is more selective. Only about four percent of the people attend college, and they must pass entrance exams to gain admittance, Maclean said. She said there is also a big difference between the two countries on the issue of financial aid. In England the government pays fees and tuition costs for everyone who attends a public university. They also pay the living expenses of anyone who has worked for more than two years. Like colleges in the U.S., Maclean said England's universities have suffered cutbacks, and students face high rates of unemployment when they graduate, "People are idealistic the world over, but more and more graduates are setting their sights lower."

Although there is no entertainment on campus at Kent, Maclean said most students enjoy the same activities as those at UMass, going to movies and pubs. Unlike the U.S., England strictly enforces drinking hours.

At UMass, Mclean said she enjoys yoga, swimming and playing squash at Amherst College.

Maclean who worked five years said she would like to return to the U.S. in a few years, to visit friends and relatives. She said she can not really form an impression of her stay until she is back in England, but she does appreciate friends and home more.

Sighting the main differences between England and the United States, Maclean said, "Basic human needs are different in England." She said England is less materialistic, and lifestyles are slower to change.

'Real information' vs. 'rhetoric'

It is very important that students at UMass be informed about issues which affect humanity, and that we take an active part in stating our views and in working to change what we consider to be immoral or unethical policies of the United States.

On the other hand, organizations which attempt to manipulate us through the creation of an atmosphere of hate and intolerance should be avoided. I am referring to the John Brown Anti-Klan Committee.

While I agree with many of the ideas which this group has expressed, after seeing the literature they have passed out and the demonstrations which they have held in front of the Student Union building for the past few Fridays all I can feel is disgust for the group which seems to have as its only true purpose the creation of as much hate as possible. Never have I seen any factual literature come from this group, and most of what they say is rhetorical.

I believe that when students are provided information we can make good choices. I think that most students on this campus are not in support of the KKK or White supremacy, and I hope that groups like the John Brown Anti-Klan Committee will learn that only real information, and not rhetoric, will give students the basis and the incentives to work to make the world "right."

Is cheering condoning?

On March 3, a friend and I attended a viewing of Clockwork Orange. I was briefed beforehand on the movie's social value and warned about it's extreme violence. Knowing this, I felt prepared to view the movie. What I was not prepared for was the audience's response. Throughout the violence and rape scenes the majority of the crowd was cheering and clapping.

I am not suggesting that the movie should not be shown, for I realize it's social comment. I do, however, find it extremely frightening to see so many people get excited by watching intense violence and explicit rape. If people can react in this way toward a movie of this sort, are they capable of committing crimes of such a nature?

Let's turn the tables on 'Killer'

Let's turn the tables on "Killer." What better way than a new game with an opposite meaning—"Lover." Perhaps this new game could include some basic rules of "Killer": a picture of your "lover," class schedules, etc., but without a dart gun.

What prize does the player get who is caught first? How about a nice kiss, a cup of coffee, and some conversation? With a new friend this could be very enlightening. No worries about getting "Killed"—only the pleasant anticipation of being "Loved."

Community Day budget approved by committee

By BRIAN SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

The Undergraduate Student Senate Coordinating Committee voted last night to endorse the final Union Program Council budget for Community Day.

The budget of $169,625 will cover the various activities planned for this year's Community Day, including a concert and a speaker on a theme not yet announced, Andrew Gordon, UPC treasurer said.

In an effort to make this a campus wide affair, UPC will attempt to have the area concerts planned for the week before Community Day aligned to the same theme, Gordon said.

The committee also voted to endorse efforts to secure money for buses to Washington for the Young People's Lobby for Jobs which will take place in Washington on April 14.

The April 14th rally will protest President Reagan's cuts in social programs, with the emphasis on cuts in the area of jobs and financial aid, Gregory Tarparian spokesman for the Students United for Public Education said.

The Committee allocated $162 from the Communications budget to Students Against the Draft (S.A.D.) for a benefit concert featuring Bright Morning Star

Spokeswoman for S.A.D. Judy Wiess said the concert's benefits will go to the Traprock Peace Center in Deerfield, which has done work in the area of draft counceling and nuclear disarmament.

A review board has also been set up to gather information for the senate in the case of recalling Student Clerk of Courts Michael Cohen. The student senate will vote on the recall next week.

SGA fights tax bill

Members of the Public Policy Committee of the Undergraduate Student Senate and Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy (SCERA) will be testifying against a bill which would allow cities and towns to impose an excise tax on students attending institutions of higher education within the town's boundaries. According to the legislation, such a tax would cost each full time student up to $75 and each part time student up to $20.

Military spending up while social programs cut drastically

By EVANS WITT
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Ronald Reagan's answer to the classic either-or question on government spending is a resounding "Guns."

Reagan, in fact, advocates a richer life for consumer America. And he would lower, not raise, federal taxes even as he seeks a military buildup.

But he would cut out $2.3 billion in food stamps for thousands of Americans and, in effect, use that money as a down payment on a new nuclear-powered aircraft carrier, a new cruiser and new submarines for the U.S. Navy.

He would reduce unemployment insurance benefits by $1.5 billion, and ticket that amount for McDonnell Douglas, General Dynamics, Sikorsky Aircraft and others to buy more F-15 and F-16 fighter planes, dozens of new helicopters, and new tankers to refuel them.

And he would cut back the student loan program and use that $700 million or so to speed up purchases of the new XM-1 tanks.

These few examples underscore the most dramatic theme of the Reagan budget for the 1982 fiscal year: the shift of billions of dollars in social spending to re-arm the Pentagon.

Night
Long Distance* (Planet)

Night is a group full of potential. Each member of the band has an impressive background to boast of, most notably the two lead vocalists—Stevie Lange and Chris Thompshon. Ms. Lange did background vocals for Bad Company and Elton John, while Thompson gained prominence with Manfred Mann's Earth Band. His gutsy lead vocal on the group's rendition of Springsteen's "Blinded By The Light" helped push it up the charts to number one in America.

Their debut album (Night) was released in May of 1979 on Planet Records. Touring as the opening act for the Doobie Brothers, they captivated audiences with their energetic repertoire and dynamic stage presence. One single off the album, "Hot Summer Nights," made the Top 20 immediately and by fall of that year another cut, "If Your Remember Me," (theme song from the motion picture The Champ had joined the ranks.

Long Distance, their second effort has recently been issued. A long distance from their initial momentum is just what this album represents. A group should be seeking it's own identity on their second album to avoid being absorbed into the ever-increasing abyss of homogeneous rock.

Long Distance is nothing more than a compromising conglomeration of numerous strains of influence (Bruce Springsteen, Fleetwood Mac, Doobie Brothers, and even Blue Oyster Cult). It is well produced, technically very strong, but who want to buy an album they could swear they've heard somewhere else before done better? It appears that Planet's deadline came up faster than Night could turn out some original material, therefore by the request of contractual obligations, let me present to you yet another commercial clone of rock'n'roll.

—David Nelson

Psychedelic Furs
Psychedelic Furs* (Columbia)

A little bit different, a little bit twisted, and very interesting. That's the Psychedelic Furs, an English band that combines the lazy, spacey, acid damaged San Francisco sound of the late 60's with the hard biting beat and cynicism of the avante-garde punks.

Produced by Steve Lillywhite (who has done amazing things with XTC) the record's most outstanding and distinctive feature is the sound itself. Lillywhite has taken a somewhat typical punk band format and embellished it with tons of reverb and other studio effects, the guitars providing a dreamy, airy backdrop, as the drums and bass charge along unimpeded.

Also contributing to the overall spacey sound is the unique way in which the saxophone is used. The sax takes the place of a mellow, eerie lead guitar, winding through and around the sparse chord patterns. There are no snappy background lines or fast fingers routines, and the only solo played consists of not more than five notes. It's rare for a sax player to show such restraint (and yes, the guy can play).

The singer is credited with "words" and nothing more. Indeed his whole function seems to be to alternately chant, scream, and sing long, obscure monologues about things like love, the acid generation and exotic foreign countries. In this way, his thickly accented voice becomes part of the overall sound, fitting into, and embellishing the mood that the music has created.

Okay, fine, this record is definately different, and definately twisted, but what does it all mean? The best answer I can give is that I don't really know, and that I don't think the Psycho Furs want anyone to know. Not really. Let's look at what we really have here:

On the surface, the record sounds great. The heavily reverbed guitars, vocals, and sax create a wash of sound that is refreshing because it's so different. On the surface the lyrics catch the ear and create moods: "Susan comes in colors you are black and white and won't say I love you/ that would be a lie." But if you try to dig any deeper meanings out of this concoction, questions arise. Like for instance, why did they make this record? Why are they so concerned with twisting the drugged idealism of the 60's into the cynicism of the 80's? Are they serious? The answers are not here, only a lot of carefully planted clues, like an album cover showing six demented and determined looking individuals, and a lyric sheet in which the words all run together as if to create one flowing sentence, but at the same time obscure the meaning.

This record can be a critics trap, designed to keep people guessing and critics writing. But only if you take them seriously. I suspect that the Psychedelic Furs want desperately to be taken seriously, but I'll give them the benefit of the doubt. At any rate, their definately worth a listen.

—Dave Wildman

The University of Massachusetts men's volleyball team will be hosting Harvard University tomorrow night at 8 p.m. at NOPE gym. The Mass spikers (3rd in New England) will be looking for revenge against a Harvard team (2nd) that beat them in the finals of last year's NECVL (New England College Volleyball League) finals. The Minutemen beat Harvard fairly easily during last year's regular season.

Following tomorrow's home meet, Mass travels to New Jersey Institute of Technology in Newark on Saturday and to Amherst College on Sunday.

Carroll gears up for Nationals

By DONNA SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

"Fire out of there!" hollered the coach. "That's it Michael, that's the way to move."

"You're locking hands," said Michael, who couldn't quite escape the grasp of his wrestling opponent.

"I didn't lock hands," said the opponent who went through one more drill then left the mat as another wrestler walked on.

After going through escape drills with two more wrestlers, Michael falls on the mat for a five minute break "let's do that again," he says.

Michael is the University of Massachusetts 158 pound wrestler Mike Carroll who has been practicing daily since the New Englands to prepare for the Nationals which begin tomorrow morning at Princeton University.

He has been practicing with coach Dave Amato and members of the team who range in size from his own weight class to the 190 pound class, every day.

"If you want it bad enough, you put the time in," says Carroll during one of his five minute breaks. He then goes to the middle of the mat and works on the ride with his roommate, 190 pound Bill McQuaide.

At the end of 25 seconds, McQuaide's brother Scott, who, at 158 pounds, is closer to Carroll's own weight class, goes 25 seconds with UMass' only representative to the Nationals this year. After Scott, it's another wrestler in his own weight class — Mike Mitrowski, who works on riding time with Carroll...and then another.

Toward the end of the workout, which has left them all sweating and tired, Bill McQuaide tells everyone to show up tomorrow...to run through it all again.

158 pound Mike Carroll will be making his second trip to the Nationals tomorrow, when he travels to Princeton for the double elimination tournament.

Carroll, a senior, is making his second trip to the Nationals. Last year he was accompanied by Bill McQuaide and heavyweight John Allen. This is the second year in a row that Carroll has been voted as the outstanding wrestler of the New England championships by the New England coaches. During his four year Massachusetts wrestling career, Carroll has compiled a 35-6-10 record, his best wrestling has come in the past two years. His record is 9-2-1 this year and was 12-1 last year.

"Every match will be like wrestling in the finals of the New Englands," said Carroll as he referred to the competition he'll be facing at Princeton tomorrow. "Only the winners (of the NE's) go, but a lot of our guys came in second and they could win," he said.

Six Mass. wrestlers placed second in the New Englands, thus narrowly missing the trip to Princeton.

But Mike Carroll will be there for all of them.

The Collegian sports staff adds a new feature to its page this week. Beginning Thursday, we will publish comments, opinions and questions from the UMass community on a weekly basis. UMass Baseball:

Youth is the pitching story

By KEVIN CULLEN
Collegian Staff

This is the first in a series on the UMass baseball team, which leaves for its spring trip to California next week.

Long ago, and only God knows where, some ancient manager, with cobwebs on his cap, said it, and it has been the most oft repeated cliche ever associated with the sport of baseball.

Pitching is 70 percent of the game.

Talk to University of Massachusetts head coach Dick Bergquist and he'll tell you, cliche or not, it's true, especially with his 1981 Minuteman team.

"It (pitching) is definitely 70 percent of the defensive game," says Bergquist, whose club compiled a 19-13-2 overall record last season and returns as defending Eastern Eight champion. "And pitching is what is going to be the story for us this year."

It goes almost without saying for every team, every year, that pitching is the story, but perhaps more so for UMass than in any recent year. UMass lost four pitchers through graduation last year, who accounted for 176 of 258 innings pitched. Experience, therefore, is not a strong point.

"It's true," Bergquist admits. "When you see only one guy on our roster having pitched more than 17 innings, you know that we're inexperienced.

That one guy with experience is senior tri-captain Chuck Thompson, who returns as somewhat of the grand old man on a young pitching staff. Thompson, coming off a quiet, solid year (5-4, 3.36 ERA) is the only pitcher who Bergquist could hand a ball to tomorrow and call him a starter. Beyond Thompson lies a sea of young talent, little of it with any varsity experience.

Besides Thompson, righthander Vin Todd returns with 17 innings pitched last year, while Steve Drelick appeared in two games and lefty Steve Cramer got into one.

"Beyond Chuck, the jobs are wide open," Bergquist says. "The key to the (West Coast) trip is for the pitching to take shape. I've got to be able to come back here with four or five pitchers who can pitch college baseball."

Bergquist and assistant coach Jim Bedard can afford to be so overly concerned about pitching because of a solid defense, led by the return of the entire infield, and a team which promises wo be, at the very least, a good hitting club.

Defensively, UMass could be as solid up the middle as any team they'll face this year. Tri-captain Vin Bonnano returns at shortstop, while second baseman Dean Bennett helps form a better-than-average double play combination.

"We do have the ability defensively," Bergquist says. "And it keys around Vinnie and Dean. Vinnie's range has improved and he plays hitters better (ala Ed Skribiski), while Dean's quick and can turn a double play. We're confident there."

Bergquist is as equally confident with the rest of the middle, including center fielder Mark Litano, who returns as a .321 hitter, and the catching situation, which presents itself as one of the nicest "problems" Bergquist has had to deal with in recent years.

In tri-captain John Kraham and Jim Aulenback, UMass has two catchers who could start anywhere and be among the best in New England, both defensively and offensively. As of now, Bergquist hopes to shuttle both, playing one in left field when the other is catching.

"We want both of them in the line up," Bergquist says. "Both can be power hitters, and the pitchers are used to them enough so that it will be no trouble shuttling them behind the plate."

Third baseman Barry Bennett (Dean's brother) and first baseman Warren McReddie complete a solid infield, while the right field spot will probably be platooned with Steve Hennessy, Joe Larkin and freshman Keith Lovelette.

But, as Bergquist stressed, all is subject to change, like skin pigment under the San Diego sun, which will beat down on UMass for 11 days as a young pitching staff tries to get some experience in a hurry.

Defeat incumbent LaVoice in large voter turnout

By KATHLEEN HOWLEY
and ED LEVINE
Collegian Staff

Larry Kocot and Kevin Mangan were elected last night to the presidency of the undergraduate Student Government Association, defeating incumbent Richard LaVoice and his running-mate Ruth Mazzola.

Students approve coed bathrooms by an overwhelming 94 percent

Kocot and Mangan easily defeated LaVoice and Mazzola, capturing 2,384 popular votes, or 40.9 percent, compared with the incumbent's 1,892 votes, 32.4 percent.

Challengers Nelson Acosta and Ed Lee finished third with 1,279 votes, or 21.9 percent, followed by Robert Crowley and James Nagle with 278 votes, 4.8 percent.

The undergraduate students also overwhelmingly voted to keep coed bathrooms, with 4,955 students, or 94.5 percent, favoring the situation and only 288 students, 5.5 percent seeking a change.

Results for members of the Campus Center Board of Governors were not available at press time.

This year's turnout, 5,833 students, represents about 33.3 percent of the approximately 17,500 undergraduates at the University. Last year, about 21 percent of the student body cast ballots in the presidential elections.

"I'm psyched," Kocot said. "We owe it all to our organization. There's no way we can re-pay them."

When asked what he was going to do first, Kocot replied, "The first thing I'm going to do is sleep."

Mangan was equally ecstatic about the victory and also thanked their campaign organization.

"It really hasn't sunk in yet," Mangan said moments after the official results were known. "It took a lot of people who wanted to see change. You can tell from the turnout that there's a lot of people who want to see change. I think it's going to consolidate student government."

Mangan also said it would take him time to get used to the job, but he would be ready to take over on April 1.

"It will take a while to get used to the office, to get used to how it works," Mangan said.

None of the other candidates could be reached for comment last night.

Kocot, who will assume the position as UMass students' representative to the University's Board of Trustees, is a three-year veteran of student government, having served as a senator in the Undergraduate Student Senate. He also served as a member of the senate's Rents and Fees Committee and is currently chair of its Budgets Committee. The 20 year-old legal studies major, a Shrewsbury native, is a resident of Kennedy Tower.

Mangan, 20, a junior political science major from Somerville, is currently co-president of the Southwest Assembly and previously served as the area's treasurer. He has also been a member of the Undergraduate Student Senate.

During their campaign, Kocot and Mangan said they would attempt to lower prices at the Text Book Annex, settle the Student Union mini-store issue, keep tuition and fees down, push for passage of state legislation dealing with sexual harassment, collective bargaining, student regent and energy fund issues, and establish a "hotline" for residential-related problems.

Jim Murphy, chair of the Undergraduate Student Senate Governmental Affairs Committee, which coordinated the elections, said he was pleased with the way the elections ran and with the high voter turnout.

"In the past, the administration has helped with the staffing of the ballot boxes and it says a lot that there was such a large turnout," Murphy said. "I think it's really good that we pulled off this election without their (the administration's) help and we did it really well."

Senate Speaker Linda Geary, who assisted with the ballot counting, echoed Murphy's remarks, expressing satisfaction with the election.

"It (the turnout) was great. A lot of people think the referendum brought a lot of people to the polls," Geary said, but added that very few ballots contained votes only for the bathroom referendum, indicating that many people also wanted to vote on the presidency.

Ribbons given in memory of murdered children

By PAUL BASKEN
Collegian Staff

The Anti-Racism Team of the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy yesterday began distributing green ribbons in an effort to increase awareness of the recent murders of 20 Black children in Atlanta.

Marea Wexler of SCERA said the idea was shared by an elderly woman in Philadelphia who began wearing a green ribbon during the Iranian hostage crisis. She said the women wore the ribbon in memory of the murdered children and as a response to the national trend of wearing yellow ribbons for the hostages. Wexler said the woman explained, "green stands for life."

An estimated 600 ribbons were handed out yesterday, said Douglas McCrae of SCERA.

The team is also collecting donations to send to the special task force in Atlanta which is set up to investigate the murders.

Wexler also said the ribbons are an expression of outrage over the rise in racism. She said the elderly woman believed a nation showing concern for hostages should also show concern for murdered children.

Mimi Turchinetz, a social thought and political economy major from Amherst, pinned on a ribbon, and said, "It's about time...it is genocide to Third World people and nothing was done."

She called the behavior of people concerned about the hostages and complacent over the murders "an explicit show of racism."

Campus remained in darkness after power restored elsewhere

University of Massachusetts officials are investigating why a power failure that left several area towns without electricity for seven minutes kept major parts of campus in the dark for an hour and a half.

Physical Plant Engineer Howard Fay said yesterday that the Orchard Hill substation was unable to distribute electricity from Northeast Utilities after power was restored to the area.

About 2,200 customers in Amherst, Pelham and Hadley lost power at about 3:15 p.m. yesterday when a circuit malfunctioned during maintenance work on power lines in Amherst, said Western Massachusetts Electric Co. spokesman Mack Jacobs.

Power was restored to the area at 3:22 p.m. but many UMass buildings remained in darkness until 4:45 p.m.

Campus Center officials are checking the building's emergency generator because it did not come on until 15 minutes after power was lost.

Building Operations Manager Dudley Bridges said the generator usually comes on about two seconds after a power failure to run emergency lights and elevators.

Two people were trapped in an elevator until the generator came on, he said.

Jonathan Tuttle, supervisor of the Campus Center Loading Dock said this was the second time in ten years the generator did not come on immediately.

Bridges also said if power had not been restored by dusk, he would have implemented a standing plan to evacuate the building.

Other buildings without power included the Sylvan and Orchard Hill Residential Areas, Morrill Science Center and University Health Services.

A receptionist at Health Services said emergency generators in that building came on shortly after the power failure and only outgoing phone calls and the computer system were affected.

In the Campus Center, people ran around with flashlights and some lanterns supplied by the UMass Outing Club.

On the lower level, where there are no windows, people stumbled into each other in the darkness, which was penetrated only by a few cigarette lighters and the struggling flames of matchsticks.

Hijackers give deadline to Pakistani gov't

By KATE DORIAN
Associated Press

DAMASCUS, Syria — The fathers of two of three hijackers holding a Pakistani jetliner with more than 100 hostages aboard flew here from Pakistan yesterday to plead with the youths to free their captives, officials said.

The hijackers meanwhile extended to 11 a. m. EST today a deadline to blow up the plane and all aboard unless the Pakistani military government frees political prisoners.

Syrian Foreign Minister Abdul Halim Khaddam said the hostages, who include three Americans and two U.S. resident aliens, were all "physically well but psychologically tired" from the 10-day-old ordeal, history's second longest hijack drama. Palestinian guerrillas held 12 Israelis hostage for five weeks aboard an Israeli jetliner they hijacked to Algiers in 1968.

Officials in Karachi, Pakistan, said the fathers of Salamullah Khan Tippu and Abdul Nasir Khan flew to Damascus via Jidda, Saudi Arabia. Pakistani authorities were seeking the parents of the third hijacker, Arsad Butt. Tippu has been identified as the leader of the hijackers.

One report said a brother of one of the hijackers also flew to Damascus. Another unconfirmed report was that two of the hijackers were brothers.

The fathers flying to Damascus had been arrested after their sons went into hiding following a Feb. 26 clash at Karachi University in which a student was killed, Pakistani officials said. The hijackers are members of a dissident group named after Zulfikar Ali Bhutto, former president who was hanged in 1979.

Pakistani authorities said that 30 detainees whose names appeared on a list of 55 persons whose freedom was demanded by the hijackers were ready to fly to Damascus as soon as a settlement was reached for the release of the hostages. The number of hostages was estimated variously at 102-122.

Social Security cuts sought

By DAVID ESPO
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The chairman of the Senate Budget Committee and Congress' top economist suggested surgery yesterday on annual cost-of living increases in Social Security benefits.

Although President Reagan has not recommended such a move, Sen. Peter Domenici, RN.M., said he doubted the president "could afford to be critical" if Congress voted changes in Social Security cost-of-living increases as part of a package of spending cuts.

Changes such as those suggested would affect 10 million people or more a year and could cut spending by more than $3 billion in 1982 alone.

Domenici and Dr. Alice Rivlin, head of the Congressional Budget Office, both suggested changes in the government's basic retirement program as Democrats on the House Budget Committee sharply challenged the administration's rosy forecasts of lower inflation and interest rates and higher growth.

The administration says its package of spending and tax cuts will help lower inflation to about 11 percent this year, slightly over 8 percent in 1982 and about 6 percent in 1983. It also predicts rapid decline of interest rates and sharp economic growth next year.

"We are not going to put out a budget based on mirrors and magic. We are not going to put out a budget based on assumptions which six months or a year from now will be held up to ridicule," Rep. James Jones, D-Okla., the panel's chairman, told Murray Weidenbaum, chairman of the president's Counil on Economic Advisers.

Jones said Americans "will rise up in anger" if they

Police continue search for Greenfield escapees

GREENFIELD — Police, aided by dogs and a helicopter, searched the hills of western Masssachusetts yesterday for four men, including one charged with murder, who escaped from the Franklin County Jail.

Franklin County Sheriff Donald McQuade said the four apparently gouged a hole in a second-tier cell wall, crawled out onto a roof and dropped one story to the ground.

The men, who had been allowed to roam freely through the second-tier area, were reported missing after a 9 p.m. cell check Tuesday, McQuade said.

They were identified as William Hamilton, 31, originally from Manchester, Conn.; George Douglass, 24, of Clinton; William Griffith, 19, of Gardner; and Glen Lauryns, 18, of Worcester.

Police said shortly after the break three men described as Hamilton, Griffith and Douglass, broke into the Greenfield home of Samuel Hamshall with tire irons. Police said the men tied up Hamshall and his wife, dressed themselves in Hamshall's clothing and drove off in Hamshall's light blue Volkswagon Dasher.

Police in West Springfield said a car matching the description of the Dasher was spotted in that city shortly before 8 a.m. yesterday, but eluded police.

According to McQuade, Lauryns, arrested in Reno, Nev., was serving a 2¼ year sentence on breaking and entering charges and awaiting trial on a series of other burglaries in Hampshire and Hampden counties. The three other men were awaiting trial.

Reporter held in contempt; refuses to reveal sources

BOSTON — Boston Herald American reporter Paul Corsetti was found in contempt of court yesterday for refusing to testify at the Middlesex Superior Court murder trial of Edward R. Kopacz Jr. of Lowell.

Judge Robert A. Barton sentenced Corsetti to 90 days in jail and gave him 48 hours to take care of personal business before surrendering to the Middlesex County sheriff.

Corsetti's attorney, Thomas Troy, said he will appeal the conviction, a move which could keep the reporter from being jailed, at least for now.

It was the second time Corsetti faced jail rather than testify about the sources and information he used to write an article about the Kopacz case.

Committee asks Locke to resign from MBTA

BOSTON — Two leaders of the Legislature's Transportation Committee demanded yesterday that Barry Locke quit running the Boston transit system immediately or face a lawsuit.

Rep. Louis Nickinello and Sen. Joseph B. Walsh, cochairmen of the panel, confronted the state transportation secretary at a committee hearing and accused him of dragging his feet in recruiting a new transit chief. Locke has been running the Massachusetts Bay Transportation Authority on a temporary basis since last June, but an MBTA bail-out law passed in December called for hiring a general manager to take over day-to-day "T" operations.

Nickinello, D-Natick, complained that 94 days have passed since the bailout and Locke is still trying to function as transportation secretary, chairman of the MBTA's board of directors and its operating chief.

"I demand you appoint a general manager forthwith," Nickinello said, brushing aside Locke's plea for 30 more days.

Journalist addresses conflicts in Poland

By CHUCK KILFOYE
Collegian Staff

Declaring that recent developments in Poland marked the first emergence of the Polish worker on the political stage, eastern European journalist Daniel Singer addressed a crowded School of Business Administration Auditorium on the current political situation in Poland.

"For the first time, there is a dual power in Poland," said Singer. "The Communist Party has finally admitted the extraordinary power of the worker."

Singer said the Polish government realized the worker needed a union independent of the Party.

"Now there is a dual power in Poland, coming from above and below."

Singer, who was in Poland last summer during the labor strikes, said he was struck by the new maturity of the labor movement in Poland.

"Before, the workers were out in the streets. They would write Russian go home. This time the workers stayed in the factories and showed their real strength."

Singer said he went to Poland last summer in order to talk to the main actors in the workers bid for independent trade unions.

"I talked to the experts and the strike leaders," he said. "It was done in the factories and by the strike committees. There was an historical compromise made in Poland this summer. Now both sides realize their limited power."

Singer went on to say that, despite their appearances, Soviet-bloc nations are not frozen societies.

"What happened in Poland last summer may possibly extend into other eastern European countries and someday, to the Soviet Union itself," he said.

"Eastern European societies will eventually force their governments to take on new social measures," Singer said.

Accompanying Singer at the forum were two other speakers, Sociologist Jan Gross from Yale University and Marta Petrusewicz, a visiting lecturer at Harvard University. Both Gross and Petrusewicz were born in Poland, were active in the Polish political movement in 1968 and were expelled from the country.

"The Polish people have ceased to be afraid," said Petrusewicz. "In 1976 there was a creation of cooperation between the intellectuals and the workers in Poland. In 1979 the Pope visited Poland. This was perceived by the people as a victory over the government."

Gross stated that one is reminded how difficult it is to rule ever since the strikes of 1980.

"Before, where the Polish government only administered, now they must rule. Today the Polish people must participate instead of merely fulfilling roles," said Gross.

Gross continued by saying that observations on the Polish crisis by the western world have been unimaginative and boringly predictable. He also predicted that there would be no Russian intervention in Poland and the eventual unification of Germany.

American Indian leader discusses cultural struggles

By KEN BAZINET
Collegian Correspondent

Vernon Bellecourt, co-founder of the American Indian Movement told a crowd of about 400 people at the Student Union Ballroom last night that "the United States has violated the rights of the native Indian treaty, and sovereign people have the right to live in harmony with mother earth."

Bellecourt, a White Earth Chippewa tribal leader, spoke on the issues of the American Indian's cultural struggle of both the past and present.

The colonization of North and South America was mentioned several times by Bellecourt, who said that "the colonization in both North and South America will crumble and the native people will be free."

Bellecourt traced the "oppression of the native peoples" of the two continents as far back as the Spanish conquistadors and Portuguese merchants, and said that "countless natives in those countries have perished, and in a span of 120 years in the United States alone, 5 million Indians have been annihilated."

More recently, Bellecourt said that the U.S. supported Junta in El Salvador has slain 16,000 natives.

"There are massive campaigns in El Salvador to wipe out native people, and the U.S. government makes up this smoke screen about communism to send arms," said Bellecourt, who added that "the U.S. wants to deny people around the world the same thing they struggled for 200 years ago."

"A lot of people think the Japanese at Nagasake were the first victims of nuclear proliferation, not true, Indians were," Bellecourt said, referring to uranium mining in Crown Point, New Mexico. "75 percent have cancer, and 50 percent have died."

In the U.S., Bellecourt said 160 million acres of land was originally given to the Indians, two-thirds of which remains.

"Precious metals and energy resources are on these lands, so we stand in the way of progress again," Bellecourt said.

The Indian nations are "sitting back and watching the Reagan administration," said Bellecourt, who added that "Reagan has kept his promise to restore the spirit of America by appointing a basically all-white male corporate cabinet."

Bellecourt also said that the U.S. government was formed on "Racism, sexism, and greed."

What Bellecourt wants for the Indian people is what he refers to as the five R's: restoration of lands; restitution of economic loss; repayment to farmers swindled in land deals; reconstruction of homes; and, if unsatisfied, revolution.

Prior to Bellecourt, Sharon Smith, president of the UMass American Indian Student Association, the sponsoring group founded early last month, said the group plans "to put Massachusetts back on the map as Indian country."

Holyoke president in chancellor running

HOLYOKE, (AP) — David M. Bartley, president of Holyoke Community College and former Massachusetts House speaker, says he's a candidate for the job as chancellor of the state's higher education system.

But Bartley told the Transcript-Telegram of Holyoke that rumors that he is a top candidate for the new position are "only speculation."

Bartley said he hadn't been interviewed yet by the committee, but said he understood "they're trying to decide something by the end of the month."

While saying he is "perfectly happy and delighted" with his present job, Bartley said the new job as chancellor would be "a challenging post breaking new ground and moving the state's higher-ed system in new directions."

The 15-member Board of Regents headed by James R. Martin has appointed a five-member subcommittee to review candidates for the $54,000 a year job. The regents are scheduled to vote on the subcommittee's recommendations by the end of the month.

Martin declined comment on the regents search, calling the selection process "delicate in nature."

Union members to act on delays in pay increases

By DEBORAH ASBRAND
Collegian Staff

Representatives of the faculty and librarian union for the Massachusetts state college system yesterday announced plans for job actions they hope will end their three month wait for pay increases.

The Massachusetts State College Association, representing 1,800 faculty and librarians at 10 state colleges, said its members will begin a "work-to-rule" job action immediately.

Amico Barone, chairman of the union's negotiating team, said union members will fulfill all their teaching and grading duties, but will not participate in any voluntary advisory services.

Barone said a demonstration is scheduled to be held at the State House on March 25, and if the union has not received any notification by April 6, Barone said the union will strike.

Members are protesting the legislature's failure to approve $2,069,000 in funding for their new contract, signed last November by Gov. Edward J. King.

The union's new contract must be approved by the House Ways and Means Committee before it can be put into effect, but discussion about the pact has not yet been placed on the committee's agenda.

King requested the funding from the legislature in January but union members have not yet received any of their increases.

The new pact included an eight percent pay increase for union members retroactive to July 1980, when their previous agreement expired.

Informational picketing will begin at each of the state's 10 state colleges on March 23 if the House Ways and Means Committee has not approved the contract by that date, said Barone, an English professor at Westfield State College.

About 150 demonstrators met King at Framingham State College on Feb. 27 as he arrived to swear in the new Board of Trustee members, and asked the governor and the new trustees to make certain their increases were funded by the legislators.

Grad Senate suggests new trustee system

By CARLA R. LESH
Collegian Staff

The Graduate Student Senate (GSS) of the University of Massachusetts passed a resolution Tuesday night recommending to the Board of Regents that they investigate different alternatives in governing the UMass system. One of these alternatives is the setting up of an individual Board of Trustees for the Amherst campus.

Jack Delmond, GSS president, said "UMass-Amherst is one of the few institutions in the public higher education system with no access to its own Board of Trustees. We have to go through many layers of communication to get to the Board of Trustees."

The proposed merger between Boston State College and the University of Massachusetts at Boston prompted the resolution, Delmond said.

The resolution said, in part, a separate board for the Amherst campus is needed to handle the problems of the Amherst campus. The merger of Boston State College and UMass-Boston will create a city college that will deal with issues very different from the Amherst campus and the GSS thinks the existing Board of Trustees will have problems handling both campuses, Delmond said.

The resolution was passed unanimously with two abstentions.

The GSS also passed a resolution urging passage of House bill, 1509 which would terminate U.S. military intervention and arms sales to El Salvador. Delmond said a committee was formed to investigate concrete ways to implement the motion. The resolution passed 18 to 2 with eight abstentions.

Group protests way Puerto Ricans depicted

By LAUREL HANSCOM
Collegian Staff

No matter how successful a Puerto Rican becomes in life, they will still end up in the gutter, according to the movie Fort Apache, The Bronx said Richie Perez, a member of the Comittee Against Fort Apache.

Perez said he feels that Hollywood of the 1980's has decided to renew the old stereotype of the knife-wielding PuertoRican of West Side Story fame. He spoke last night as part of the symposium "Racism-Sexism: Same Game, Different Name?"

Perez explained one of the various problems his organization encountered in trying to prevent the film from being released.

"Police were clubbing some brothers who refused to move. They said it was their block but the police told them to leave because they were filming. We intervened in this situation... They (police) turned fire hydrants on us."

To make the film authentic, a producer drafted 12 junior high school girls to play prostitutes in the film. Perez said this idea backfired on him (producer) however, as the mother of one of the girls discovered the role her daughter was to play and publicly denounced the producer.

Perez explained the members of the committee declared Paul Newman a "Persona Non-Grata" after he referred to the protesters in the following manner: "In the final analysis, they are the whores. Maybe they are looking for a political base or to call attention to themselves and their community."

The group wants to make an example of Newman to make other actors and actresses think twice before taking these roles, Perez said.

"We want them to live in fear. Your enemy has to be afraid of you," he said.

Dana Lobell spoke on the objectives of Women against Pornography and presented a slide show featuring pornographic images in the media.

Explaining future plans, Lobell said, "We will be concentrating on soft-core pornography and media images. This would have much more effect because it's in the mainstream of society."

The belief of the organization is that there is a strong connection between the spread of pornography and the increase in rape, battering of women and molesting of children," according to one of the group's leaflets.

Tight housing in area, but openings do exist

By RON MILLER
Collegian Staff

Amherst has a less than 1 percent vacancy rate which is one of the lowest in the state, but this doesn't mean you can't find housing a spokeswoman for the Off Housing Office said yesterday.

Joanne Levenson, coordinator of the Off Campus Housing Office said that although most apartment complexes in the area do not have any vacancies it does not mean there are not any openings.

There is an opportunity to rent because a lot of times one person gets a lease and then they advertise for a roomate, she said.

Levenson encouraged students to use the off-campus housing office because it is a free service. Rental agents charge as much as an additional half months rent as a fee for renting an apartment, she said.

When students hear there is a rental shortage they panic and take whatever is available. This allows rental agents to take advantage of them, she said.

Levenson encouraged students to become "informed consumers," and to educate themselves on leases and the rental situation.

She said people who want to live in complexes in the fall should start looking in April, "but if you don't want to be in a complex there is no point in rushing now," she said.

Every student doesn't necessarily have to be a lease holder; one person can get the lease and then get housemates, Levenson said.

She said students who are looking for help in their housing should use the Legal Services Offices and off-campus housing which will work as a housing counselor.

Smith to hold lectures

Women and labor unions is the theme of a two-day Florence Simms lecture and film program at Smith College March 12 and 13, to celebrate Women's History Week.

Sponsored by the Sophia Smith Collection, the program is in honor of Simms (1873-1923), who worked for reforms in worker's rights.

Two documentary films, "With Babies and Banners," which depicts the women's role in the 1937 strike against General Motors and "I Am Somebody," the story of a successful strike by black women hospital workers in Charleston, South Carolina, will be shown tonight at 7:30 in McConnell Hall, at Smith College.

Susan Woods, an instructor of economics at Smith, will give a lecture entitled, "Where Are the Women in Unions?" on March 13 at 4:30 p.m. in Seely Hall, room 10.

"Norma Rae," the Academy award winning film, will also be shown that evening at 7:30 in McConnell Hall.

The films and lecture are free and open to the public.

Voters must register soon

People wishing to vote in the April 7 town election must register to vote in Amherst by 10 p.m. next Wednesday, March 18.

Town Clerk Estelle M. Matusko said people 18 years or older may register in the Town Hall from 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Monday through Friday or during business hours at the Munson or North Amherst branch libraries.

Matusko also said people may register Saturday from noon to 8 p.m. at the Town Hall.

Classes held Tuesday

The University of Massachusetts Scheduling Office has advised that all classes will be held this Tuesday, March 17.

The spokesperson said the office has received many phone calls inquiring about classes on Tuesday. Although it is both St. Patrick's Day and Evacuation Day, professional employees, including faculty members, will be at work. Only some day off, the spokesperson said.

Skeleton reported stolen

A skeleton valued at $1000 was reported stolen from the Graduate Student Office in the Fine Arts Center at 8:26 a.m. yesterday, University of Massachusetts police said. The skeleton is five feet, six inches tall and is missing a kneecap and two teeth, police said.

The skeleton has been missing since the end of intersession but the art department thought one of the professors or teaching assistants had borrowed it for a class, an art student said. They contacted the police in case someone had turned the skeleton in, she said.

The skeleton is used by art classes for drawing to get different effects, it is also used as a still life, she added. The police are investigating the incident.

Researchers test infant reactions

By ANNE KIRBY
Collegian Correspondent

Two University of Massachusetts researchers want to find how and why sick premature infants differ from healthy full term newborns in their reactions to sound to try to help the babies develop normally.

Dr. Edward Tronick, associate professor of psychology, has been given a $14,000 grant by the March of Dimes Birth Defects Foundation for the first year of a two year study.

Elizabeth Krafchuk, a UMass graduate student getting her doctorate in developmental psychology, also is working on the study.

Included in the researcher's testing, which is being done at Wesson Women's Hospital in Springfield, is the testing of newborn children for sensory stimulation which will determine the reactions of premature babies to the environment.

Of the 11,000 babies born each year in western Massachusetts, approximately 5 percent are delivered early or have some other complication.

Tronick and Krafchuk want to determine alternatives in caring for sick premature infants, since studies have indicated that they may require different care to be assimilated into everyday situations than normal children.

Using everyday sounds that a child would hear, such as a rattle or people's voices, Tronick and Krafchuk have determined the level at which an infant responds to sensory stimulation.

The testing can be done while the infant is sleeping and the level of arousal can be controlled. Testers find the level at which an infant responds to sound and then increase the intensity until a defensive point when the infant begins to tighten his/her reflexes and grimace is reached, Krafchuk said.

Through their research, Tronick and Krafchuk found that in high risk infants the sensory threshold is higher and the defensive barrier lower than in normal infants.

These results were determined through testing done by habituation, but the researchers have now determined that habituation may not be useful as an index, and are currently looking at adaptability and inclination to respond, Krafchuk said.

It is more important to consider how the central nervous system protects the organism from over-stimulation, she said.

In order to get a response from a premature infant, the central nervous system tends to be overloaded and the environment has to do some of its work.

Past research in this field indicates that premature babies tend to have IQ delays in early childhood, difficulty sitting still and paying attention. This is more apparent in poor families because a middle class family tends to dissipate these problems by the age of seven to 10, she said.

Yet, Krafchuk said she feels these studies are questionable because the health of the mother and the quality of post-natal care weren't studied. This projected negative results and left a lot to be considered, Krafchuk said.

Currently there are several projects being conducted to see how parents react to sick infants, she said.

Tronick, a developmental psychologist, established the pediatric minor in the psychology program at UMass. He also has completed studies in the area of early infant-mother relationships in normal and abnormal situations.

The Campus Scouting Club is back on the trail

By AMY HASBROUCK

Editor's note: In response to the series on recognized student organizations printed in the Collegian last semester, the series will continue periodically this semester.

In the back of most people's memories, and some people's closets, there is a small green, brown, or blue uniform, complete with sashes and beanies. The look and smell of these uniforms reminds them of things like badges, manuals, camping trips, and "flying up."

Scouting is often one of our most treasured childhood memories, but to the University of Massachusetts Campus Scouting Club, a Recognized Student Organization, scouting is still a reality.

In 1971, the campus Girl Scouts were established at UMass, but, according to co-President Bobbie Parry, the official title is inconsistent with the club's goals.

"The Campus Scouting Club was formed to give UMass men and women a chance to participate actively in scouting at the college level," Parry said. At present, the club has twelve members, 11 women and one man.

"I want to encourage any man that wants to join to do so. We are a co-ed club and I'd like to stress that," Parry said.

The Campus Scouting Club sponsors and helps out with camping trips and other service oriented functions, such as a first aid course being offered in April in conjunction with the American Red Cross.

The club has also provided leaders in the past for local Girl Scout troops and has sponsored a spring camping trip for Junior scouts in the area for the past five years.

Right now, the club is in a reorganizational period. Most of the active members, including Parry, graduated last May and she said she was the only one who decided to stay with the group.

Parry said the group was inactive last fall for lack of membership, but that the group is now getting back together.

Parry, who has been in scouting for fifteen years, said she feels scouting is a great organization.

"It gave me the opportunity to camp, learn how to work with other people, and travel which was quite a plus for me," she said.

She said scouting has taught her cooperation, outdoor skills, and confidence. She said she also feels that scouting teaches people how to cope with new situations.

Membership is open to all UMass students, with and without scouting experience.

"Comeraderie and familiarity are growing in the group," said Parry, adding that members find it a small world when they discover that they have attended the same scout camps.

Parry said she feels that the scouting organizations for young people are starting to change in order to accomodate teenagers needs.

"Scouting doesn't have to end in your teens," she said.

Bobby Parry, leader of the UMass Scouting Club, explains that scouting no longer means just stomping around in the woods but is now a viable service-oriented organization.

There's a big weekend coming up at the Rusty Nail. On Friday night Steve Forbert appears, and it's the Neighborhoods Saturday.

Forbert recently released his third album, Little Stevie Orbit. It's guaranteed to be a packed house, so get there early unless you get a charge out of standing up all night.

Neither Bruce Springsteen nor Southside Johnny will be here this weekend, but if you're in need of a New Jersey sound fix Beaver Brown will be in the Blue Wall the entire weekend. (gee!)

That's right, for only $3.00 you can see the lowest link in the Springsteen evolutionary chain.

This weekend's shows in the valley include:
Steve Forbert
The Neighborhoods
Beaver Brown
The Elevators
Buddy Guy and Jr. Wells
Signal

UPC announced last week that guitar greats John McLaughlin, Al DiMeola, and Paco DeLucia will perform an acoustic councert April 9 in the Fine Arts Center. Tickets go on sale Monday March 16.

McLaughlin headed the Mahavishnu Orchestra which also featured Jan Hammer and Billy Cobham. Al DiMeola was in Return to Forever, and DeLucia is a flamenco guitarist who played on DiMeola's Elegant Gypsy album. It should be quite a show.

If you haven't caught the Elevators yet, check them out in Hangar One Friday night. Next week the Stompers come in on Wednesday and the Atlantics on Thursday, in case you want to start your break early.

Rahar's hosts Buddy Guy & Jr. Wells Friday and Signal on Saturday.

Up-coming UPC shows include NRBQ in the Student Union Ballroom, March 18, and Ray Charles April 22 in the Fine Arts Center.

Tickets for NRBQ are already on sale. Ray Charles tickets go on sale tomorrow. You better go early if you want any, it should sell out fast.

I've got good news and bad news. The good news is the new albums by the Stones, the Who, and Eric Clapton will soon be in the record stores. The bad news is New Musical Express recently announced that Rockpile has split up.

If you're looking for an alternative to musical entertainment, you might try the play*Travesties* by Tom Stoppard, and directed by Andrew Lichtenberg in the Rand Theater. It'll be playing both this Friday and Saturday nights, as well as next Thursday, Friday, and Saturday.

With John McLaughlin and Paco deLucia, Al DiMeola will be presenting an evening of acoustic music April 9.

NRBQ will be appearing with Carl Perkins in the Student Union Ballroom March 18. Tickets are still on sale.

Study links coffee consumption to cancer

By DANIEL Q. HANEY
Associated Press

BOSTON — People who drink a cup or two of coffee a day are nearly twice as likely as non-drinkers to develop cancer of the pancreas, and coffee consumption may cause more than half of the cases of this major killer in the United States, a Harvard study concludes.

Cancer of the pancreas is one of the deadliest forms of cancer. It kills 20,000 Americans annually and is the fourth most common fatal malignancy in the United States.

Although the Harvard researchers found a strong link between coffee drinking and cancer of the pancreas, they had no absolute proof that coffee actually causes the disease.

Dr. Brian MacMahon, the study's director, stopped short of advising people not to drink coffee.

"If they are concerned about it, they should know there is at least a suspicion of this," he said. "But I don't think it's time to put on the missionary role yet."

MacMahon is head of the epidemiology department at the Harvard School of Public Health. The study was published in Thursday's edition of the New England Journal of Medicine.

"This association should be evaluated with other data," the researchers wrote. "If it reflects a causal relation between coffee drinking and pancreatic cancer, coffee use might account for a substantial portion of the cases of this disease in the United States."

In the same report, the researchers said they could find no evidence that tea, alcohol, cigars or pipe tobacco contribute to cancer of the pancreas.

"The absence of any association between tea drinking and pancreatic cancer suggests that caffeine is not the causitive agent. But the association with coffee should be confirmed in other studies before too much effort is put into identifying a specific causative agent or ingredients," MacMahon said in a statement.

He said similar studies should be performed by other investigators. Then a more detailed investigation should be made into the duration of coffee use, the strength of the brew, whether it was perked or instant and what was added to it, he said.

"If these things confirm the association, it would be time for animal studies of specific ingredients," MacMahon said.

At the National Coffee Association in New York, spokesman David Kuhnert said the coffee trade group was having scientists review the study and would issue a response later.

The doctors based their findings on interviews with patients at 11 large hospitals in the Boston area and Rhode Island. They obtained data about the smoking and drinking habits of 369 people with pancreatic cancer. Then they compared this with information from 644 patients hospitalized with other diseases.

"A strong association between coffee consumption and pancreatic cancer was evident in both sexes," they reported.

They found that people who drink one or two cups of coffee a day have nearly double the risk of cancer of the pancreas and the risk almost triples when people drink three or more cups a day.

The coffee association estimated that the average American over age 10 drinks two cups of coffee a day.

"Cancer of the pancreas is now the fourth most common fatal malignant disease in the United States," they said. "If the distribution of coffee consumption in our control group reflects that in the general population...we estimate the proportion of pancreatic cancer that is potentially attributable to coffee consumption to be slightly more than 50 percent."

The researchers had set out to see if there was a link between this form of cancer and cigarette or alcohol use. They said they were surprised by the association with coffee.

Like earlier studies, this one did find a weak association between cigarette smoking and cancer of the pancreas. But smokers also often drink coffee, and when coffee drinking was taken into consideration, the smoking link was not significant statistically.

Consumer tips

by MassPIRG

The following is the conclusion of a two-part series on Landlord/Tenant Rights published by the Massachusetts Executive Office of Consumer Affairs. This column will appear each Monday in the Collegian after this week.

Security Deposits

By law, a security deposit received by your Landlord must be held in a separate, interest bearing account in a Massachusetts bank. This places your deposit beyond the claim of your landlord's creditors including cases of foreclosure and bankruptcy. If your apartment building changes ownership the law provides for the transfer of your security deposit to the new landlord. The security deposit is YOUR property and cannot be commingled with the assets of your landlord.

Statement of Present Condition of the Apartment

Your landlord must furnish you with a separate written statement of the present condition of your apartment upon receipt of your security deposit or within 10 days after you begin tenancy, whichever is later. This statement must contain a comprehensive listing of any existing damage in the apartment, including but not limiting to, any violation of the state sanitary or building codes, certified by a local Board of Health, or building official, or adjudicated by a court. The statement must be signed by the landlord or his agent.

Legal Grounds for Failure to Return Security Deposits

The landlord must return your security deposit within thirty (30) days after termination of tenancy. However, a landlord may deduct from the security deposit for a number of reasons:

1) If any rent was unpaid,

2) If any damage was caused to the apartment by you or any person under your control or on the premises with your consent.

This excludes reasonable wear and tear, which means you don't have to pay for normal wear and tear of the apartment. However, you are responsible for maintaining your apartment in a clean and sanitary condition—free from garbage and rubbish.

Damage Deductions from Security Deposits

In a case where you damage the apartment, the landlord must provide the following within 30 days after you have terminated tenancy:

International feminism

The cancellation of scheduled activities to celebrate International Women's Week at the University of Massachusetts has shed some light on a far broader problem that confronts the feminist movement.

The dilemma of how to represent international points of view of women is not indigenous to UMass. It is a problem worldwide which many feminists have attempted to address.

In planning the agenda for the United Nations' mid-Decade Conference on Women (held last summer in Copenhagen), for instance, there was disagreement on whether "Palestinian Women Refugees" should be listed as a separate agenda item, when another item was "Women Refugees Around the World." (Some claim it was a move designed by the Palestine Liberation Organization to call undue attention to themselves, while others argued that the needs of these refugee women are indeed unique.) The conference was held anyway; its importance was not lost in the participants differences.

That conference, designed to look at the accomplishments of, as well as the obstacles which face, the International Women's movement, may serve as an example.

Both groups connected with International Women's Week agree on at least one point: their conflict has existed for at least three years. Why, then, hasn't it been addressed in the forum of International Women's Week? This seems the logical vehicle for confronting these issues, and for informing those who may not know they exist.

The Third World Women's Task Force and the organizers of International Women's Week have announced they will be meeting later in the semester to discuss their differences and to plan for future events. This is an important step toward ensuring the future of the celebration. Perhaps the themes of future women's weeks will address the international problems unique to women as well as laud feminist accomplishments around the world.

The deaths of children

How an event strikes us as tragic, brings us sadness and sorrow, depends on how it left us since it occurred. A friend's death leaves slowly, autumn to winter. A friend of a friend dies and the loss moves more swiftly — a tree, seen yet unfamiliar, dropping its leaves. But the nameless deaths, the anonymous incidents, are lost before they're felt. They are the brittle leaves that blow in a thousand colors through the streets, collecting under porches, in alleys and walkways.

We read about the deaths of children, see them reported on television, hear them talked about in morning conversations. They are other people's tragedies, yet they collect in our minds to give each of us a sadness that is ours alone.

Two people, or ten million, each knowing the same sorrow, are not alone; they are two and ten million who do not know each other. To show people that they are not alone in their hearts, sad for the children and families of Atlanta, the nation has adopted the wearing of a strip of green ribbon — symbolizing life — to let each be known to one and another.

There is no shame in sorrow, sometimes it must be shared.

Pump-priming and supply-siding

Joshua Chesnin

Like Punk and Preppy, supply-side economics is very in this year. So in, in fact, that President Reagan has endorsed the concept wholeheartedly in his attempt to pull the nation's economy out of the "stagflation" rut it has been mired in for several years. Congress is now debating the wisdom of the President's proposals. It does not seem likely that they will pass unscathed.

The grandfather of supply-side economics is the French economist and defender of free-market principles, Jean Baptiste-Say, whose Law of the Market decreed that "supply creates demand." The theory today is that price stability can be achieved by stimulating the producing side of the economy to supply enough commodities (and employ enough workers) to in turn induce demand for those goods. This concept, whose main contemporary advocate is economist Arthur Laffer, marks a sharp turn from the "pump-priming" Keynesian policies practiced for the last 45 years. Indeed, except for the Revenue Act of 1962, consumers, rather than business, have received between 65 percent and 86.6 percent of dollars generated by each tax cut since 1960.

The President bases his plan on the belief that high taxes weaken incentives to work, save and invest. He believes a tax cut would spur growth without inflation because the initial drop in the government's revenue would be offset by future increased revenues derived from the resultant surge in economic activity. But Mr. Reagan isn't taking any chances — the budget (outside of defense) is being slashed so that the government can better afford to implement the Kemp-Roth proposal.

This scheme would cut personal income taxes 10 percent for each of the next three years. Business is also slated to receive a tax break, mostly in the form of accelerated depreciation schedules. The hope among Reagan, Stockman and Co. is that the average American will save a significant part of the tax cut money, rather than spending it, thus increasing the supply of capital available for business investment without having to ease monetary policy. The increased business investment should raise productivity and lower inflation.

It all sounds very simple. But the President's plan is held together by one thin thread — the hope that Joe Consumer will have enough faith in the President to lower his expectations of inflation and save some money. There is no reason to expect that this will happen. Americans need to spend that money to pay off debts, to make up for the increase in other taxes (such as Social Security), and to keep up with current inflation. And there is precious little in the Reagan package to reassure the country that inflation will slow. Reaganomics is inherently contradictory.

Expectations of inflation are firmly entrenched in the minds of Americans, and the President realizes that he must break these expectations. But supply-side economics is a slow process. It takes time for businessmen to decide to invest, for capital improvements to be made, and for these investments to be reflected in increased productivity. Meanwhile, Mr. Reagan proposes to put billions of dollars of spending power into consumers' hands right away — a move that, given the average American's propensity to consume, can only be viewed as inflationary. If indeed inflation is fueled by Kemp-Roth, as I believe it would, expectations of inflation would continue, thereby hampering efforts to stimulate investment.

The tax cut would also carry with it some unpleasant distributive effects. A 10 percent across-the-board tax cut would obviously return more money to the rich than the poor. And those people who need the money the most — those who pay no taxes, such as very low-income persons and the unemployed — would get no money at all.

Reagan's formula has particularly nasty long-term implications. As expectations of inflation become even more ingrained after the tax cut, the President's ability to deal with the economy will be jeopardized. Former President Carter's problems with the economy stemmed in part from his inability to convince the public that he could lower inflation and was committed to no more than one policy. If the tax cut is enacted, Mr. Reagan will be heading into the same trap.

The other half of the President's formula, the budget cuts, makes sense, although some of the reductions could have been made in different places. But the tax cut for consumers is a short-term palliative.

Nonetheless, Congress also seems to want a tax cut, probably for political rather than economic reasons. The entire House and one-third of the Senate face reelection next year, and few congressmen will risk going on record as disapproving of a tax cut at a time when real wges are falling. There has been some talk of enacting a one-year tax cut and assessing the effects before slashing taxes further. But one way or another, we seem destined for a tax cut whether we want one or not.

It is time for the public to take charge, to communicate our displeasure with Reagan's plan to our congressmen. It is time to set aside our desire for immediate gratification in favor of a carefully thought out long-term policy. This policy should include a tough arms-control agreement with the Russians so we can curb defense spending, a continued effort by the President to rid the country of costly regulations, and big tax cuts — for business only. Business should be encouraged to invest through use of retained earnings. This should be followed by a long, gradual easing of monetary policy to reduce interest rates.

All this will take time, of coure, and the success of this plan is as equally dependent on easing expectations of inflation as is Reagan's. But it is a plan without illusions and contradictions, and recognizes the need for a cut in our standard of living. The President's support of a personal income tax cut is ill-founded and dangerous. The tax cut for consumers must be shelved.

Harp on tarp

Pinkie Shabe and Sherry Mason are sitting under a plastic tarp.

You may think that Pinkie, a freshman from MacKimmie dormitory, and Sherry, a junior from Dwight, are somewhat odd. They are not. They are just like you and I.

Tarps, by the way, are those translucent, plastic sheets wired to the ceiling of the Campus Center Concourse at various — i.e., leaking — points.

Sherry comes to the tarp room for "a change from the library," which, unfortunately, chose to put its money into bricks rather than tarps.

Pinkie says, "It's not the most inspiring place," but she comes nevertheless. Perhaps she is secretly into tarps, but is afraid to admit it to her more avant-garde friends who are currently experimenting with the new wave in the NOPE gymnasium floor. To each her own.

Some people do prefer to go tarpless. And in the spirit of toleration we should allow these people to enjoy their leaks any way they please, be they in the dormitories, the Fine Arts Center studios or the Campus Center Garage.

We love tarp sitting so much that we each pay the university a $79 Campus Center fee every year to support our habit. Multiplied by twenty-odd thousand students, this approximately $1,600,000 in student fees helps pay for the necessary plastic, wire and installation costs. Pinkie and Sherry are in good company.

You do not like tarp sitting, you say? Well, the university has thoughtfully provided tarp puddles for the more aquatic. Underneath selected tarps may be found a scenic puddle — pool, if you like — into which the aficionado may stare, walk, or simply drop his or her latest term paper. The choice is yours.

Since, by this observer's calculation, there are thousands of student, tarp-sitting hours expended each and every week, it seems only inatural that we should organize.

Dues would be collected and a Journal of Tarp Sitting could be published. A Tarp co-op would be established in the Student Union. Tarp social mixers could be arranged after each heavy rain...

Chances are excellent that all of us, freshman, senior and first-year grad alike, will graduate still sitting under tarps. If we act now to organize, we can assure ourselves that this unique institution will remain, forever and after, ours and our posterity's.

Face the future don't escape it

I attended John Aristotle Phillips' lecture, supposedly on "National Security and the Arms Race in the Eighties." His lecture turned out to be more of a campaign speech intended to actuate the audience members' involvement in politics — not just in Mr. Phillip's party (Democratic), but in any party and in all areas of politics. Though the topic of Mr. Phillip's speech was not really his advertised topic, his message was nonetheless pertinent and important. After the lecture, I was distressed to hear comments such as "a waste of time" and "at least it was free". For me, Mr. Phillips' speech was not a waste of time. He ran for Congress at the age of 25, the youngest consitutionally allowed. He is well informed. His positions are idealitic yet pragmatic.

We students hear the advice "get involved" too often to even give it a second thought. Some ask "How can I tell a congressman how to vote when I can't even choose a calculus course?" "How," others may ask, "can I tell the government to get out of El Salvador when I can't even find a way to get out of Southwest?"

The message "get involved" needs to be said over and over, in as many different ways as possible, until each and every one of us hears it, recognizes the importance of it, and starts facing the future instead of escaping it.

Destruction is not mindless

I am momentarily stepping out of the "sea of random faces" to comment on Steve Masse's moral rampage ("Artless Show," Collegian 3/6) against UMass vandalism. Though Masse chose an important topic, his analysis and subsequent condemnation are mere repetitions of similar insightless perceptions of human motivation.

I mean what does Masse really seek to accomplish with an approach like: Hi. I'm a "significant" Collegian columnist and I am repulsed by "scum sucking" (non-"significant") vandals who find liberation in leveling bus stops.

If Masse is going to maintain his "significant" position as campus commentator then he should expand his scope of social analysis enough to understand that real solutions to social problems lie beyond simple elitist condemnations. But then he is also a victim of the belief that, by virtue of attending a large university, we are all basically anonymous and seek to overcome that status through "attention-getting" or "significance-bearing" activities such as excelling in sports, writing newspaper columns, falling in love, and trashing the campus.

Needless to say, there is an annoying element of distortion in his argument. But if Masse's column served any purpose, it was probably to reaquaint the UMass community with two serious day-to-day problems that deserve an answer: vandalism and unwanted anonymity.

If we are genuinely interested in solving these problems, though, we must not feel contented with incomplete analyses that fall short of at least a general understanding of social, political and cultural forces that may be at the root of destructive behavior.

To dispel popular belief, destruction is not mindless. Though it may not be well thought out, destruction is a statement about the conditions in which people live. If we identify unwanted anonymity as the cause of vandalism, then we must ask what conditions exist in this semi-urban community that create this feeling.

Arms for oil

The recent sale of F-15 fighter-bombers to Saudi Arabia has raised our concern. It attests that little thought has been given for the future, and that the United States is basing its decisions on short term military calculations and the desire to return petrodollars to the United States by means of arms sales.

Israel is already hopelessly overwhelmed by defense costs that have helped bring about triple-digit inflation in that country. To compete with the arms sales to Saudi Arabia would mean for Israel no added security, but furthered economic degradation.

The strenghtened Arab position has brought about a need for improved early warning systems to boggle any attempt at attack. This is not the romantic view of a John Wayne World War II movie, but a reality brought about by the geographic positioning of Israel. Some have even suggested that ground monitoring will not suffice, and that indeed Israel will require its own reconnaissance satellites.

What then? Does this mean that Israel will have to establish a more intimate sharing of intelligence with the United States? Such a move would increase Israel's dependence on Washington for its very existence. In today's fickle mood of governmental policy, can Israel blindly put hope in Washington's instantaneous good will?

Of course not — the United States has already broken a promise not to sell the necessary extras that would increase the offensive capabilities of F-15 fighters sold to the Saudis under the Carter administration.

Finally, it should be stated that this sale does not have implications only for the security of the State of Israel, but for the People of Israel also. Can the world Jewry be secure when the United States government places it in danger of a return to its pre-World War II predicament of no homeland?

Toy quote, toy quote, toy quote

"Famous remarks are very seldom quoted correctly," said Simeon Strunsky in a famous and frequently misquoted remark from his book No Mean City. Every film buff, for example, knows that Bogie never said "Play it again, Sam" to his piano man in Casablanca, but rather, simply "Play it, Sam." Perverters of Shakespeare like to say that "music hath charms to soothe the savage beast," but that rascal of a Bard actually declared that music could sooth "the savage breast," a very different type of activity which he no doubt knew to be quite a bit more rewarding and stimulating.

Many famous remarks are better off misquoted, or at least unsaid. For instance, Thomas Alva Edison claimed that "genius is one percent inspiration and ninety nine percent perspiration." Does he mean to infer that dimly inspired hard workers who use effective deodorants are to be denied their rightful status as geniuses simply because they do not perspire profusely? A true genius, Edison should surely have known better, but as Seneca said, "There is no great genius without some touch of madness." Still, this does not mean that young inventors should eschew personal hygiene and be unbearably obnoxious to their friends on the misplaced belief that the road to genius is paved with rancid underarm odor.

I greatly perfer Ezra Pound's assertion that "genius is the capacity to see ten things when the ordinary man sees one." Unfortunately, a drunken Ezra was lying flat on his back in a gutter and staring confusedly at ten blurred and overlapping images of an angry policeman when he muttered this, so we must reluctantly assume that he was either trying to flatter himself, or talk his way out of a night in jail, and consider another definition.

Jane Ellice Hopkins believed genius to be "an infinite capacity for taking pains." Thus, she would consider anybody versed in the practices of sadomasochistic sex or professional wrestling a genius. Since this clearly cannot be so, let us forget about geniuses for now and advance to other absurdities, such as Nikita Kruschev.

Though Kruschev was primarily known as the ranting, shoe-pounding madman who wanted to "bury" us, he was also something of a free-spirited rapscallion. One of his most delightful, though least known, quotations is the whimsical line, "Life is short, (so) live it up." So pleased was Kruschev with his merry truism that he asked his Party Congress for funding to have it stencilled onto every tank that rolled into Hungary in 1956 to add a festive panache to the violent invasion. Though this request was denied, scores of fun-loving Soviet troops were spotted dancing on the bodies of fallen Hungarians on Kruschev's direct order to "live it up" while across the border.

A considerably less bubbly demented militarist was the Nazi Hermann Goering, who said, among other wise and wonderful things, "When I hear anyone talk of culture, I reach for my revolver" and "Guns will make us powerful, butter will only make us fat."

Unfortunately, Commies and Fascists have no monopoly on perverse military quotations. Witness our own General Douglas MacArthur, who somehow brought himself to say, presumably with a straight face, "By the Grace of Almighty God, our forces stand again on Philippine soil." The quote ends there, but we can assume that Mac's next sentence might have gone something like "Now we can ravage and plunder this little Pacific paradise and savagely destroy anybody who gets in our way in thy infinite and almighty mercy, Amen."

All this quotation business would have been appalling to Ralph Waldo Emerson. "I hate quotations," said the poet, who would be disgusted to learn that even this bitterest of antiquotes is in fact now a famous quotation. Emerson was probably particularly bothered by the fact that many political elections are won or lost on the strength of a catchy quote or slogan.

For yesterday's SGA elections, one enterprising pair sought to bill themselves as a "Vicious Alternative" candidacy, but somehow screwed up their posters and ended up as the "Viscous Alternatives." Confused voters could not decide whether they were in fact vicious or viscous, which would have made them the "gluey substance or mass especially lacking easy movement or fluidity alternative," hardly an "I Like Ike" or "All the Way with LBJ." Emerson would have been gratified to know that these misguided sloganeers were soundly thrashed.

I'll conclude all this nonsense with two of my favorite quotations. The first is "The most wasted day of all is that on which we have not laughed," by Sebastian R.N. Chalmfert (who also said "Be my brother, or I will kill you," but nobody wants to remember that one). The other is from J. Frank Dobie, who crystallized the ideology of cool people everywhere in four simple words: "Conform and be dull."

discover they have been deceived by the president's rosy projections of economic revitalization.

At a hearing one day after Reagan unveiled his revised 1982 budget of $695.3 billion, including a deficit of $45 billion, Weidenbaum said the budget "is as honest and accurate" as possible.

But across the capital, Rivlin told Senate budget writers Congress should approve more than the $48.6 billion in spending cuts that Reagan is recommending so spending can be kept under control if the president's "optimistic" forecasts about inflation, interest rates and economic growth go unmet.

The consequences of being wrong "are troubling," Rivlin said.

"Higher inflation, higher interest rates and higher unemployment would all work to produce more federal spending and larger budget deficits."

El Salvador: Government rejects offer by OAS to mediate a settlement

By EDUARDO VAZQUEZ
BECKER
Associated Press

SAN SALVADOR, EL SALVADOR — The government yesterday rejected an offer by the Organization of American States to mediate a political settlement between El Salvador's civilian-military junta and the leftistdominated opposition, Foreign Ministry sources said.

In the capital and the countryside the guerrilla war continued.

In Geneva, the United Nations Human Rights Commission called for the appointment of a special representative to probe "grave violations of human rights and fundamental freedoms reported in El Salvador."

The Reagan administration has vowed to help prevent the spread of communist influence in Central America and has increased military aid to this nation of 4.5 million people. Fifty U.S. advisers are here helping train Salvadoran troops. Washington has charged the Soviet Union, Cuba and Nicaragua with supporting Marxist insurrection here.

One of the diplomatic sources here showed reporters an official message to the OAS that said "the revolutionary government of El Salvador does not desire the intervention of the Organization of American States in the search for a solution to the internal problems in El Salvador."

The message called OAS mediation here "completely unacceptable."

The 28-member organization officially offered to mediate last week at the suggestion of Costa Rican President Rodrigo Carazo.

Junta President Jose Napoleon Duarte has said he is willing to meet with members of Socialist International to discuss a political solution, but there has been no indication where or when such a meeting would be held.

The U.N. commission called for the appointment of a special representative by a 29-1 vote. Eleven countries, including the United States, abstained.

U.S. delegate Richard Shifter said the abstention was prompted by a reference in the adopted text to a U.N. General Assembly resolution last fall urging "governments to refrain from the supply of arms and other military assistance." He said the language was unclear.

Fighting was reported yesterday in San Nicolas Lempa, 20 miles north of the capital, the army said, adding that a counter-insurgency operation began in the area four days ago.

A military source said there were dead and wounded, but there were no details.

Defense Minister Col. Jose Guillermo Garcia said the army began a massive search and destroy operation Tuesday in Morazon, 100 miles east of the capital.

Military sources said 1,000 troops were pressed into the operation.

In Chalatenango, 30 miles northeast of here, 19 unidentified bodies were found along a highway outside of town, the military said.

Around the capital, three army convoys were ambushed, but no injuries were reported, and shootouts between guerrillas and the military were reported in three suburbs

Beatings raise tensions in Poland

By THOMAS W. NETTER
Associated Press

WARSAW, Poland — A reported beating of four high school students by an anti-union squad raised new tensions in Poland yesterday. The Reagan administration said in Washington, meanwhile, that it was "quite concerned" about forthcoming Soviet bloc maneuvers in and around Poland although there was no sign of an imminent Soviet invasion or show of force.

A spokesman for the Solidarity union chapter in Radom, 50 miles south of Warsaw and long a center of labor agitation, said the four students were reported beaten by four men who were tearing down Solidarity posters.

He said the students recognized one of the four as a local policeman and added that the union had appealed to the police to purge its ranks of such members. He said 300 parents, pupils and teachers were expected to meet later near Radom, which has been on strike alert since Monday over broad union demands for an end to alleged "oppression" of members.

Targets of New Right convene to offset attacks by conservatives

By W. DALE NELSON
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — At 2:30 p.m. every other Wednesday, 20 or so men file into Room S208 of the Capitol and seat themselves at a rectangular table beneath a Gilbert Stuart portrait of George Washington.

The class of '82 is in session.

Object: Democratic recovery in the Senate after the worst shellacking in a quarter of a century.

Democrats had dominated the chamber since 1955, but 1980 plunged them to the short end of a 53-47 count.

Their leader, Robert C. Byrd of West Virginia, says his colleagues "learned a lot," from the experience, but he lost little time to ensure that those lessons are drilled in.

Two weeks after the election, just before Thanksgiving, he convened the first meeting of the score of Democratic senators who will face the voters less than two years from now.

The featured guest was Peter Hart, the Washington pollster who surveyed voter attitudes on behalf of five Democrats who won or held onto Senate seats and five who lost last year.

"I told them there is nothing wrong with the principles of the Democratic Party," Hart said in an interview. "The principles are not where we are getting into trouble. It's bringing the principles into focus in terms of the 1980 agenda. I am not sure the Democratic Party is doing a good job of it."

Since then, the senators have heard from a string of Democratic senators who won their 1980 races, and Byrd says he plans to line up a talk by at least one of the nine Democratic incumbents who lost to Republicans.

"We are having them in to tell us about the tactics that were used against them," said Byrd.

They meet in a conference room in Byrd's suite of offices just off the Senate floor, with three crystal chandeliers overhead, a large mirror surmounting a fireplace at one end and portraits of Washington and Jefferson on the walls. A plaque says the room was used by Sen. John F. Kennedy between his election and inauguration as president.

Sen. Howard Metzenbaum, D-Ohio, has attended nearly every session and says 'All in all, I think it's a good move. I would say they are free-wheeling, easy-rolling meetings."

"I told them, 'If you haven't kept in touch — made a lot of trips to your state — it's probably too late'," said Sen. Gary Hart, D-Colo., who turned back a stiff challenge to win re-election by less than a percentage point.

Hart also reminded the senators of a campaign tactic he found effective and urged them to take it to heart. Faced with a campaign against his liberal record, he said, he came up with a list of 23 budget cuts he favored.

Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., also a narrow winner in a campaign in which conservatives attacked him as a big spender, said, "I told them they should take no comfort in voting for something because Reagan asked them to. If they decide to use it against them, it will be used."

Leahy said he does not believe the perennial issue of raising the debt limit, on which his "yes" votes were used against him, has been depoliticized. Byrd says it has, because the Republicans were forced to support it this time around.

"We have got to get away from the idea that we can regain the majority in 1984 and mark time meanwhile," Leahy said. "If we don't really get together in 1982, it will be a decade before we regain it."

U.S. and Canada seek Solution to fishing dispute

OTTAWA (AP) — Prime Minister Pierre Elliott Trudeau said after conferring yesterday with President Reagan the United States and Canada will try to find a peaceful solution to the Georges Bank fisheries dispute and avoid a fish war between Nova Scotia and New England fishermen.

Trudeau told reporters that he and Reagan agree that imposition of conservation measures on the New England scallop fleet will prevent clashes between the fishermen and clear the way for international arbitration of a five-year-old dispute over the maritime boundary on Georges Bank in the Gulf of Maine.

Meanwhile, Fisheries Minister Romeo LeBlanc said that a fisheries management treaty for Georges Bank is dead but added the government has yet to decide whether it will agree with Reagan's suggestion to move directly to international arbitration of the boundary.

LeBlanc faces great pressure, however, from his own officials and Nova Scotia "to teach the Americans a lesson" for failing to ratify the fisheries management treaty.

The lesson would be turning loose the Nova Scotia trawler and scallop fleet on Georges Bank to compete with the U.S. fisherman whom the Canadians accuse of overfishing in the area.

LeBlanc said it will be hard to hold back Canadian fishermen unless the United States moves to a serious conservation plan for its scallop fleet which Nova Scotia says has doubled in size in the last few years.

The Georges Bank dispute, which dates back to proclamation of 200-mile zones by Canada and the United States in 1977, drew a lot of attention during President Reagan's visit to Ottawa Tuesday and Wednesday.

Chicopee kids promote Guthrie tune as official state song

By THOMAS S. BROWN
Associated Press

BOSTON — Chicopee schoolgirls serenaded Beacon Hill lawmakers yesterday, hoping to persuade them to declare the Arlo Guthrie tune "Massachusetts" as the official state song.

"The lyrics are beautiful. It's written in words that the average man can understand," Christine Moran told the State Administration Committee. She was one of 18 Chicopee students who came to the State house to promote the song and pay tribute to its folksinger composer.

However, a Holyoke woman protested that the Bay State already has an official song, "All Hail Massachusetts," an Arthur J. Marsh composition adopted in 1966.

Maria Hanner argued that if the Legislature discards that melody, it should at least hold a formal competition for a replacement. Mrs. Hanner offered her own entry, the "Massachusetts State Hymn," which she claimed has been sung by choral groups for years.

The legislative panel, unaccustomed to controversy triggered by perennial "state symbol" bills, postponed a decision on the issue.

The committee also deferred action on measures that would designate Babingtonite the state mineral, Old Medford rum the state rum, and a 15 stanza poem written by a 93 year-old former school teacher as the state poem.

Lisa Phillips, another youngster from Chicopee, acknowledged that some people do recognize "All Hail Massachusetts" as the state tune, but she said hardly anyone knows the words.

In contrast, the Guthrie song already is well known and could become popular throughout the state within a year, she said.

Other witnesses said Arlo Guthrie, who resides in Washington, Mass., is the son of famed folksinger Woody Guthrie, and has performed many benefit concerts for Berkshire charities.

No one mentioned his earlier song, "Alice's Restaurant," that poked fun at middle class America and made him a hero in the 1960s counter culture.

The case for Babingtonite, a rare jet black mineral found in Woburn, Westfield and other parts of the state, was presented by Joseph E. Makkers of Lynn, spokesman for the Association of Massachusetts Mineral Clubs. He said "state mineral" status would help Babingtonite become better known in schools and stimulate sales in rock shops.

Private school presidents oppose changing tax status

By JAMES SIMON
Associated Press

BOSTON — Severe academic cutbacks and possible closings of private colleges and universities in Massachusetts would be the result if the Legislature allows communities to tax school property, college presidents told a legislative committee yesterday.

Harvard University President Derek Bok said that because of inflation, declining student enrollments, and expected cutbacks in student aid under the Reagan administration, "independent higher education now finds itself in greater economic difficulty that at any time since World War II."

"If Massachusetts were to become the only state to impose a property tax, the commonwealth would place its private institutions at a further disadvantage," Bok told the Taxation Committee, which is considering new ways to raise money in the wake of voter approval of tax-cutting Proposition 2½.

Wilbert E. Locklin, president of Springfield College, said his school's tuition of $3,315 a year was one of the lowest in the country and enabled many moderate-income students to attend.

"Very frankly, if it were much more than that, I don't think we'd continue to operate and offer the kind of education we want to our students," he said.

The Taxation Committee is studying proposals that would allow cities and towns with private colleges or universities to impose a 3 percent dormitory charge on students, tax each student $75 a year, or totally eliminate the current property tax exemption and allow communities to tax schools at their full value.

Similar efforts have failed to win legislative approval in the past.

Crew prepares to open season

By ANNA ROELL
Collegian Staff

The only athletic teams on campus at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst that train straight through from September 1 to May 12 without a break, are the crew teams.

Last year at the New England Championships on Lake Quinisigmond in Worcester, both the men's and women's teams did very well. The men's varsity eight boat took first, and both the women's varsity four and novice eight boats also came home with first place victories.

"The UMass men's varsity eight boat won the national championships last year, and they think they can do it again."
—Barbara Roche

UMass has three separately coached teams that consist of a men's and women's team each rowing their own varsity eight, varisty four, and junior varsity eight boats. The men's team also has a branch of freshmen on two freshman eight boats.

The women's coach, a recent UMass graduate, Barbara Roche, spoke for the three teams. "We're all planning on having successful seasons," she said, "We've been working really hard all winter."

Their winter work-outs had the teams doing a lot of running, weight lifting, calisthenics, ergometer pieces (a simulated rowing machine that tests the amount of strength a rower has), and a lot of tank work (a rowing machine with water).

Since Feburary 25, the rowers have been practicing on the Connecticut River from 4:30 to 6:20 (in time for dinner). So by April they will be ready to start racing every Saturday through May.

Their goal for the season is to win the Point Trophy in the Nationals which is in Philadelphia May 8, 9, and 10 this year. The national championships, also known as 'Dad Vail', award the Point Trophy to the team with the highest number of points from first, second and third place wins.

"We want to take it away from the Coast Guard because they won last year," Roche said. UMass's men's varsity eight boat won the national championships last year, and said Roche, "They think they can do it again."

The men's varsity coach David 'Cook' Kumlin said "This year is different because the women will be coming down to Philadelphia with us." That means that UMass can enter more boats and events to give them more chances at wins, points, and at bringing home the Point Trophy.

Sharp UMass rowers to look for during the season are the men's tri-captains: seniors Jack Frackleton and Peter Ventre and junior Kurt Kuehnel. The women have senior co-captains Sarah Piermarini and Cindy Boyack.

Frackleton rowed at the Philadelphia Fairmont Boat Club and won the gold medal with the senior quad boat in the U.S. Nationals last summer. Kuehnel and Ventre will both be trying out for the U.S. lightweight team this summer.

Piermarini had raced for the women for four years and was picked for Development Camp (which trains Olympic rowers). Boyack is a former swimmer who switched to crew for her last two years at UMass.

The first race has been tentatively scheduled for April 4 for both the men and women against Boston University and the University of New Hampshire on the Charles River. Their seven months of training has the rowers ready for their weekly races of the next two months leading up to New Englands and Nationals.

UMass head coach Dick Bergquist will bring eight pitchers to the coast, only four of whom have had a varsity appearance, and three of those four combine for just 20 innings pitched. To say Bergquist is going with youth is not only an understatement, it's inevitable.

As for the staff:

The old man—Ol' Chuck Thompson is the ol' sinker-slider pitcher from way back when. A lanky (6'5", 195) righthander, Thompson likes to come in on righties, then go outside with a slider. At his best, Thompson makes groundballs, and has such a solid infield behind him this year that it could be his best.

"I don't look to go out there and strike out people," says Thompson, who struck out just 28 last year. "It used to be that, in high school or Legion, I could blow it by people, but I'm not overpowering in college. You've got to swallow some pride and learn how to be most effective."

Thompson has done just that and, after some advice from former UMass standouts Mark Brown and Doug Welenc, will come up and in on batters this year to "make them think a bit more."

Besides the ol' sinker-slider set up, ol' Mr. Thompson has a straight change, a curve, a fastball (which he'll often drop to the side with) and an occasional knuckler.

The young guys—Besides Thompson, the only other UMass pitchers with varsity experience are junior righties Vin Todd and Steve Drelick, and lefty Steve Cramer.

Todd pitched 17 innings last year, grabbing a win and an impressive 2.12 ERA. Todd is the epitome of the sneaky-fast pitcher.

"He's deceiving," says Bergquist. "His control has to be his biggest asset, because he doesn't walk people and get into trouble."

Todd has the four basic pitches (fastball, curve, slider and change up) the first of which is his best, and hopes to mix his pitches a bit more this year.

Drelick, another fastball pitcher, has the four basics, and has a definite shot at being a starter, as does Cramer. Cramer has three pitches (fastball, off-speed curve and change) and is in the midst of developing a slider.

Another junior, lefty Eric Beck, is coming off an illness, and has a good change to go along with his fastball.

The kids—Besides the young guys, it could be the kids who make the difference this year, and sophomore Dan Cook could be the kid who does. Cook has the best fastball on the team, mixes his pitches as well as anyone, and Bergquist sees a wealth of potential in the 6'1", 190-pound righthander.

Two lefties, sophomore Adam Grossman, who strained a deltoid and is still bothered with a tender arm, and freshman Tony Presnal both have good curves.

Only time will tell with the old man, the young guys and the kids, though.

TOMORROW: Hitting and defense sparked by the Pep band? A Minuteman basket isn't half as exciting as when it is accompanied by a round of "Fight Mass" (the school song). The crowd would go wild.

It's a real shame that the Pep band didn't play at any of the games this year. It used to be fun and I feel funny going to the games without my horn...and they haven't won too many games without us.

Today the Collegian begins a series on the future of the tennis facilities and the fate of tennis at UMass

Tennis program shelved?

By KEVIN CULLEN and STEPHEN FREKER
Collegian Staff

Unless the University of Massachusetts can come up with funds to repair the school's 32 tennis courts, both men's and women's varsity programs, along with general recreational play and physical education classes in the sport, will be suspended indefinitely after this spring.

Citing cracked surfaces and rusted fences which present safety hazards, the university's department of Environmental Health and Safety has recommended that the courts be closed.

All eight courts located between the North Physical Education building (NOPE) and the Sylvan residential area have already been condemned and will not be open this spring. A decision on the 12 lower Boyden field courts, located next to the baseball fields, will be made next week, according to John Volpe, assistant to the dean of facilities at UMass. The 12 upper Boyden courts, located next to Tobin Hall, will remain open this spring, and will be used by both varsity programs.

UMass Athletic Director Frank McInerney yesterday confirmed reports that use of tennis facilities and all programs would be "suspended indefinitely" after this spring unless repairs are made, and stressed that the decision "is not an athletic department matter."

Volpe said frost-heaves from this past winter exacerbated the problems with cracks on the courts, which were scheduled to be repaired this summer.

"Work (on the courts) should have started last summer," Volpe said. "But funding got tied up in other projects and the courts didn't get fixed."

Volpe said the Physical Plant last summer placed a cost estimate for work needed on the courts at $51,000, and added there has probably been a 10 percent increase to that estimate since July.

Potholes and torn nets characterize the tennis courts near the North Physical Education building (NOPE).

Volpe said the School of Physical Education last year had proposed to fund about half of the repairs with the athletic department's trust fund and get the other half at the Provost level, but shortages in the trust fund made this impossible.

Presently, funding would have to come through the Provost's office or the Physical Plant fund, which Volpe said has been already committed to repairing leaky roofs and minor shoddy construction.

Both men's varsity coach Steve Williams and women's coach John Beal said they have had at least one player injured due to the conditions of the courts.

"The coaches, along with some of the administration, feel that the courts are in lethal condition," Williams said. "It's getting to a point where it's just too dangerous and too unfair."

Williams said some of his players were paying as much as $200 of their own money to replace sneakers that wear out after a week of play as a result of poor surfaces on the courts.

"It's not just a matter of 50 varsity tennis players being without a place to work out," Beal said. "The bottom line is that a few thousand people won't be able to play tennis at UMass anymore."

Pitching needs time

By KEVIN CULLEN
Collegian Staff

Second in a series

Chuck Thompson stood there during practice, in the dust of the Cage, the other day, an old timer amidst the kids, the young arms. Thompson is the Gaylord Perry of the University of Massachusetts pitching staff.

The lone senior. The old man.

Thompson returns as the only pitcher on this year's squad with more than 17 innings pitched, but sees no difference from his last years as a varsity starter.

"It doesn't put any extra pressure on me," says Thompson, who last year compiled a 5-4 record with a 3.36 earned run average in 64 innings pitched. "I've been here long enough to know what I'm supposed to do. And there are a lot of good arms on this team. We'll just have to wait and see."

The waiting is nearly over as UMass will leave for San Diego next Thursday for an eleven-day trip, which will include play in the prestigious Sun Lite Classic where UMass will see just how good those good young arms are.

Letters

The Minuteman speaks...

He's not Dr. J

This letter is in reference to the column by Jim Parsons (2/26) about Alex Eldridge and his years at UMass. The writer made a few points that I think definitely need attention.

Parsons wrote that if a basketball recruit was brought to the Cage during Eldridge's playing years and saw all the fans and heard all the noise, then this prospect would sign on the spot. If this was true, then why didn't UMass get all the great players to play here for the past few years that could have been recruited while Eldridge was here?

Alex Eldridge was a good basketball player. Not too many people would argue with that. But, how can someone possibly write that "he had it all over Doctor J?" Come on now. There aren't even ten players in the NBA that come close to comparing to Julius Erving. Parsons makes a point of saying that he saw Eldridge from a fan's point of view. That's good, but he should stick to the stands and not get mixed up in hoop analysis.

Steve McCarthy
Brittany Manor

[Editors note: Jim Parsons was a guest columnist. He is not on the Collegian sports staff.]

Cage is OK

I've noticed that after each of the past three hoop seasons, when the men's record has been, let's say, less than successful, we begin to see a number of letters and articles in the Collegian and other local newspapers about the condition of the Curry-Hicks Cage.

They say that the Cage is old, run-down and falling apart. This I'll have to agree with. However, they also claim that UMass needs a new athletic facility for home games. They want a new building that will seat 15,000 and be an impressive sight for new recruits.

you imagine the same amount of fans in a place three times its size? Secondly, and more importantly, the Cage has character and tradition. Visiting teams used to hate to play here. A full Cage provides a tremendous boost to the home squad, and when the place is full, the Cage is probably the most intimidating place for the opposition to play at on the whole East coast.

What we need is not a new basketball building, but instead, maybe a refurbishing of the Curry-Hicks facility. And when people start filling up the Cage again if the team gets better, they'll realize the value of the Cage.

G.J. Anderson

Where's the band?

Along with a lack of fan support, it seems that the University of Massachusetts men's basketball team has suffered from a lack of band support also. To those who have attended UMass basketball games at the Cage in past years: haven't you missed the tremendous enthusiasm

Four elected to BOG seats

By GREG VOLPE
Collegian Staff

Four University of Massachusetts undergraduate students were victorious last night in the Campus Center Board of Governors elections, while 15 seats remained empty as of late last night when tabulating was halted.

The four student winners are: Barbara Hammond and Seth Singer, representing the Southwest Residential Area; Peter Franklin, representing the Orchard Hill Residential Area; and Debra Abramoff, representing the Central Residential Area. All four students ran uncontested.

Fifty percent of the votes were tabulated last night for other positions. The top 10 contenders out of a field of 14 who are running for 10 "At Large" spots are: Scott Freedman, 787 votes; Scott Cashman, 748; Mike Ferrigano, 730; Susan McLaughlin, 708; Timothy F. Burke, 703; Judy Stearns, 696; Kathleen McGettigan, 685; James Buckley, 674; Jay Englander, 646; and Greg Dennis, 639.

Four students ran for the three open commuter representative seats. The top three contenders are: Nancy Jane Baily, 177; Jim Mathison, 122; and Jeff Figgie, 80.

Finally, for the one open Greek representative seat, Lori Dratch leads Christina Kelly by six votes, 39-33 respectively.

No results on the one open Sylvan area representative seat were available at press time.

The present and eventual winners, who are scheduled to begin their terms on March 19, will serve as members of the board for one year.

The board, comprising 34 members, 20 of which are undergraduate students, is designed to represent the interests of UMass students for the Campus Center and Student Union complex.

Brian DeLancey, board chairman, said although he was not "disappointed" with the elections, he would have liked for there to have been more outreach to students to explain who the candidates were and what they represented.

DeLancey said he wanted the board to become more influential as a governing student body.

"I hope to get responsible student control over the Campus Center/Student Union complex instead of just being an advisory board to the Campus Center administrators."

In his last two months as chairman, DeLancey said his major concerns, and those of the board, will be to have "adequate input" into upcoming university conferences, and University Store renovations, which, he claims, will cost about $150,000.

Faculty proposes core change

By STEVE DALY
Collegian Staff

The Faculty Senate yesterday voted to recommend changing graduation requirements for students entering the University next fall, requiring students to fulfill their C, D and E core requirements outside of their major.

Currently, students may fulfill core requirements with courses within their major.

Senator Chester Davis, a professor Afro-American Studies, said the resolution should be implemented because "the students should be getting as broad an education as possible."

Business and finance professor, James Ludtke, a senator, raised the problem of enforcement and control. He said students will have to be informed every semester of their graduation status if the senate's recommendation is implemented.

"There are thousands of dollars (in paper work) connected to this motion," Ludtke said.

James Shaw, dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, admitted that the requirement is going to be a hellacious problem for the registrar, but I don't think it will cause any educational harm."

Election strategy responsible for upset

By ED LEVINE
Collegian Staff

In the wake of the Tuesday and Wednesday's Undergraduate Student Senate elections, some of the factors of Larry Kocot and Kevin Mangan's stunning upset of incumbent Richard LaVoice and his running mate, Ruth Mazzola, need to be examined.

First, there was the turnout, which was nothing short of impressive. More than 5,800 students, about 33 percent of the undergraduate population, cast ballots in the election, more than 10 percent higher than last year and the highest turnout since 1976.

What actually prompted the high turnout is unclear. Perhaps it was the candidates and their ability to mobilize voters. Perhaps it was the referendum on coed bathrooms, which students approved by a whopping 94.5 percent. Perhaps it signals a whole new attitude among students at this University who are tired of the way things have been done and want a stronger student voice.

News Analysis

Whatever the reason, the students turned out, and in numbers large enough to wake up any student government leader or administrator.

Kocot and Mangan's margin of victory, and where it was achieved, was impressive. As the ballots were counted, it became obvious that most areas were split. The one exception was at Central and Orchard Hill where, among a high turnout of more than 1,250 students, the victors captured more than 750 votes. The area, as many observers had predicted before the election, had indeed made the difference.

And that difference was not made by the candidates' campaign promises or platforms, but by the size of the organizations and the campaign strategies.

Three weeks ago, in the early stages of the campaign, LaVoice and Mazzola re-assembled the organization which had carried him to victory the past two years. At the same time, Kocot and Mangan displayed no visible organization but the supporters were there, waiting to come out of the woodwork for a big last minute push. Nelson Acosta and Ed Lee had also built an impressive organization with the support of the Third World community and progressive students. And, if they had not started so late (last week), they may have very well been elected.

Throughout the campaign, Kocot and Mangan addressed few of the issues with specific plans. Kocot alluded to "secret plans" to gain control of the Student Union ministore and lower prices at the Textbook Annex. They refused to discuss specifics and instead spent most of their energies attacking LaVoice with, often unfair, accusations.

LaVoice, also stretched the truth a bit. He took credit for things he did not do. But, such privileges come with incumbency, and having long been used by candidates seeking re-election.

So, now that the election is over, the transition process begins before the new presidents take office on April 1. Hopefully, hard feelings will be forgotten and the transition accomplished smoothly. And, hopefully, Kocot and Mangan can carry out what they have promised and effectively govern the SGA.

Officials: Student vote won't wash out bathroom plans

AMHERST, Mass. — Coed bathrooms won landslide support from University of Massachusetts students, but the administration said yesterday the vote won't wash out its plans to sexually segregate the dormitory facilities.

"The administration considers it a non- negotiable issue," said university spokesman Arthur Clifford.

Bathrooms in the university's coed dormitories have been used by students of both sexes for the past decade and the administration's move to crack down in late February has sparked demonstrations, petition drives and plebescites on the 25,000-student campus.

The students "prefer it this way" said Harvey Ashman, a freshman from Brockton, Mass., who with two other students formed the "Coed Coalition" to drum up opposition to the administration's move.

The Student Senate, although not taking a stand itself, ordered the question put on its general election ballot.

The vote, released Thursday, showed 94.5 percent or 5,995 of those voting favored coed facilities. The opponents mustered 285 votes.

Worcester diocese reinstates high school headmaster

SOUTHBRIDGE, Mass. — The Diocese of Worcester reinstated yesterday the headmaster of a Catholic high school who claimed he was fired for helping four students with their tuition and rewarding a class with a day off.

Digest

By the Associated Press

Bishop Bernard J. Flanagan said the decision to reinstate James Doyle as headmaster of the Marianhill Central Catholic High School came after "further consultation with diocesan superintendent of schools and Doyle and consideration of additional information."

And students credited the referendum question with boosting a normally poor turnout. About 33 percent of the 17,500 eligible undergraduates cast ballots in the two-day election which also saw the defeat of the student government's incumbent co-president and his running mate. Last year's election drew only 21 percent.

The Rev. James Aquino, diocesan superintendent, fired Doyle last week for alleged insubordination, inefficency and incompetency. The move drew an angry protest from 200 parents and students who held a meeting on Monday in support of Doyle.

Hostages freed at deadline in Pakistani plane hijacking

DAMASCUS, Syria — Only three minutes before the threatened executions of three American hostages, Pakistani officials announced agreement with three heavily armed hijackers yesterday to free political prisoners in exchange for the safe release of more than 100 captives held aboard a jetliner for 11 days.

"The crisis point has passed," declared a senior American diplomat on the scene.

"It is over," the Pakistani ambassador to Syria, Safraz Khan, told reporters at the airport. "There is no longer any deadline. It is a matter of time now and I don't anticipate any difficulties at all in the process." He said the details of the exchange might take several days to arrange.

Boston Herald reporter wins stay of contempt citation

BOSTON — Boston Herald American reporter Paul M. Corsetti yesterday won a stay of a three-month criminal contempt citation imposed in Superior Court after he refused to reveal information in a murder case.

Appeals Court Judge David A. Rose postponed the sentence, scheduled to begin Friday, pending a review by the full Appeals Court bench.

Rose said the "very nature of this contempt" citation "has no objective to compel Corsetti to testify," and the case itself "raises important constitutional issues" regarding journalistic privilege.

Rep. James G. Collins, D-Amherst, speaks about Proposition 2½ and citizen participation in government last night in Skinner Hall.

Rep. Collins speaks to students about 2½

By PAUL BASKEN
Collegian Staff

Rep. James G. Collins last night compared Proposition 2½ to "a vote of no confidence" for the state government because it strips officials of their revenue spending powers.

"The opinion is an individual cannot make the difference. But believe me, you do," he said, adding that, "if we believe in ourselves first, and stand up for our beliefs, we can get what we want."

Collins told the audience: "You own the legislature and Congress. You have to make sure what belongs to you runs well."

'Proposition 2½ strikes at the notion of what government should be.'

—Rep. James G. Collins

Addressing an audience of community service majors in Skinner Hall, Collins recommended that voters who favored the property tax slashing bill re-examine their belief of the purpose of government.

"Proposition 2½ strikes at the notion of what government should be," Collins said.

He also stressed that the input of individuals in government is important, saying that "nothing inspires an elected official more than to have persons contact him."

"A democracy cannot exist where people do not have faith in it," he said.

Collins said one area that Massachusetts citizens should lend support to is higher education, where cuts are expected.

"What we have to do is get involved in the discussion of ideas to make sure education is still considered important," he said.

'Travesties' opens season at the Rand

The University Ensemble Theater opened its Rand Theater season last night with a production of Tom Stoppard's Travesties. The script, actors and set combine to provide an exhilarating evening.

Stoppard, who also wrote The Real Inspector Hound, has written an amusing, witty and profoundly intellectual piece. His cast of characters include James Joyce, Lenin, and the dadaist artist, Tristan Tzara. The action takes place in the mind of a man whose claim to fame is having appeared in a play produced by Joyce.

Preview

If the script is bizarre, so is the set. Designed by Francis G. Brault, it is a smashing success, reflecting the dadaist and cubist aspects of the script. Brault has captured the circus-like quality for which he aimed. Jamie McAllister designed the lighting for the set.

The cast includes Michael Connor as Tristan, David Emerson as Joyce, Laurence Geddes, Kelly Powell, Deborah Lichtenberg, Rick Martin, Mark Gaudet, and Constance Congdon. Director of the production is Andrew Lichtenberg.

The play is running March 13, 14, 19, 20, and 21 at 8 p.m. Tickets are $3.50 for the general public and $2.50 for students and senior citizens.

Tristan Tzara (played by Michael Connor) stands on his head while James Joyce (played by David Emerson) is properly scandalized in the University Ensemble Theater production of Tom Stoppard's Travesties at the Fine Art Center's Rand Theater today and tomorrow and March 19-21 at 8 p.m.

State's visit to Coffee Shop spurs thorough I.D. check

By PAUL BELVAL
Collegian Correspondent

The cashiers in the Campus Center Coffee Shop are checking student identification cards more conscientiously now after state tax officials visited Richard Ellis, director of Food Services at the Campus Center, on Wednesday.

Ellis said state officials complained about the careless method used to check student I.D.s.

Presentation of a valid UMass I.D. exempts students from the 5 percent Massachusetts meal tax.

Campus Center cashiers are supposed to check for valid student I.D.s, so that customers who are not students will pay the tax. Up to now, the cashiers have been somewhat lax in their duties, Ellis said, but he promised that is changing.

"They'll be checking everybody's I.D.s now," Ellis said.

The state officials took no disciplinary action against the Food Services Department, and Ellis said he had "no problems" with them.

Mount Holyoke Energy Club to present free conference

The Energy Club at Mt. Holyoke College is sponsoring a conference this weekend called "What's Watt in the Energy Scene". The topics and presentations at the conference will include: Massachusetts Energy Policy; Overview of College Conservation Across the Nation; Solar Energy, Philosophy of Energy Use; Solar Greenhouses; Conservation; Nuclear Power Plants, and Effects of Radiation.

The day long event will be held from 9 a.m. until 5 p.m. tomorrow in Gamble Auditorium. Admission is free and lunch will be available.

SCERA proposes umbrella coalition

By DONNA MAGRATH
Collegian Correspondent

A capmaign is underway at the University of Massachusetts to unite all student organizations and coalitions into one campus wide coalition.

Arvid C. Muller, Student Coordinator for the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy (SCERA), said: "We're trying to build one big coalition on campus to fight (President) Reagan's cutbacks on financial aid, King's budget cuts, reorganization plans, fee increases, tuition hikes and the like."

Muller said many campus groups have already been asked to attend the organizational meeting on March 16 at 4 p.m. in Campus Center Room 905.

"So far we've asked groups such as MassPIRG, the co-op collective, women's councils, Third World groups, residential area governments and SAFA (Students Advocating for Financial Aid)," he said.

The first meeting, Muller said, will be to determine "what type of structure the new coalition will take on and to get input from everyone there."

We want to form a permanent coalition between all groups on campus to fight for a decent education and a decent budget on both state and local levels," he said.

Plans for a march on Washington D.C. will also be discussed as well as ways to fight any tuition increases the new Board of Regents may propose.

HAMMING IT UP — These pigs sniff the fresh air yesterday in back of Youngbridge Barn near the UMass athletic fields.

Today's the last day to vote on new name for Blue Wall

Students have until 5 p.m. today to vote on a new name for the Blue Wall bar. Students may pick one name from a field of 10 chosen by the Committee to Rename the Blue Wall.

The 10 entries were chosen from over 400 contest entries.

The choices are: the Blue Wall (retains its name); the Wall; the Concourse Cafe; the Pack Bench Cafe; the Bedrock Cafe; the Quarry; Park Place; the Hole in the Wall; the University Tavern, and George's Place.

Students should place their votes in a box located by the Campus Center Assistance Desk.

The committee has scheduled a meeting for March 16 to decide on the winning name. In the case of several people submitting one name, committee members will draw the winning entry from a hat.

Collins to hold office hours in Amherst, Granby, B'town

Rep. James G. Collins, D-Amherst, will hold office hours tomorrow in Amherst, Granby and Belchertown.

From 9-10:15 a.m. Collins will hold office hours for the citizens of Amherst and Pelham in the Board Room at Amherst Town Hall. He will then hold a session in Room 1 of Kellogg Hall in Granby from 1:30 to 2:30 p.m. Rep. Collins will be at the Belchertown Town Hall from 3-4 p.m.

No appointments are necessary.

★ Faculty Senate

The senate also established an ad hoc Committee on General Education. According to a senate Rules Committee report, the general education committee is designed to study and evaluate the preset undergraduate curriculum, identify weaknesses, and develop proposals for modifications of the curriculum.

The education committee will consist of six faculty members, one undergraduate student, one teaching assistant and the provost or his designee.

In other business, the senate recommended the approval of minors in sociology, plant and soil sciences, astronomy and classics.

A proposal for a minor in economics was returned to the Academic Matters Council for further discussion.

The classics option offers minors in Greek, Latin, modern Greek, and classical civilization.

A motion by the Faculty Senate Health Council to recommend to the Administration a policy on environmental health and safety was postponed until April 2.

BLACK AFFAIRS

Brown University uses a rare methodology

By TONY CRAYTON

On Saturday, March 7, 1981, the New England Regional Conference of the National Council of Black Studies was held at Brown University. It was held in Rhode Island's historic Walker Smith House built in 1782, and was hosted by Brown University's Afro-American Studies. After a discussion of old and new business, the conference centered on experiencing the creations of the "Rites and Reasons" arts component of the Afro-American Studies Program. Although they lack department status at Brown they have succeeded in organizing, over the past 10 years, "Research to Performance", a methodology rarely seen in Black Studies. The strategy entails exhaustive research in some aspects of Afro-American life and transforms that data into a performing art. It also includes large participation of faculty students and community groups such as the Rhode Island Black Historical Society. The "Rites and Reasons" program was developed by Professor Rhett Jones, the Program Director and faculty member, George Bass. Their productions have won the New England Regional Competition in the American College Theatre Festival, as well as invitations to perform two original productions at the Lincoln Center Outdoor Theatre Festival in New York City.

At the conference, they showed a one act dialogue performance called, "Void Passage," which illustrated the lives, trials and challenges of two generations of Black Women. It utilized the extensive long-term research pursued by the black studies program, and focused on, Black women's perspectives and attitudes about societal oppression, Black male relations and the need for a psychological support mechanism. The dialogue clearly illustrated the success of the "Research to Performance" methodology.

Each performance is followed by a producer and Black Studies program staff panel which discusses directly with the faculty, students and community residents, the intricacies and development of the performance.

It is also a pleasure to note that many faculty, both Black and White, expressed extreme interest in a proposal to begin research into University and College curriculums for racism content. It was further proposed that after a review of the curriculum, that Black Studies departments or programs develop curriculum reforms to include a systematic study of institutional racism. They requested that a written version be placed in their newsletter Hantu, published after every meeting and prepare a formal proposal for the National Conference in New York City in April.

It is hoped that Black Studies starts coming out of the turmoil and regression of the 60's and the 70's and begins to utilize their expertise to give impact to the institutions to which they are a part. The struggle has never ended. Life only begins it and death releases you from it. Getting in the books is necessary, but coming out and making it real and practicable is a challenge that no faculty or student can ignore. Brown's "Rites and Reason" program is a fantastic model, let's begin to follow that lead and create, create, create.

Labor unions stand up to renewed attacks

America's labor movement has rarely recieved a square deal from the press. Therefore it should come as no surprise that trade unions are currently being subjected to a consistent barrage of criticism. What is surprising, however, is the particular vehemence with which the trade union movement is being criticized at a time when it is attempting to move in directions which would increase its involvement in the political process and begin to offer a response to the Reagan Administration's economic proposals.

IT'S BECAUSE OF YOUR EATING HABITS!

...FOR IT TO BECOME A HABIT!
By Brumsic Brandon, Jr.

Press criticism has come from all corners. From the left, Stanley Aronowitz writing in The Nation, has lashed out at "entrenched leaders" who "not only control the mechanisms of power, but sit astride bureaucratic structures that work to defuse opposition." Business Week has criticized the AFL-CIO's Executive Council for generating "disappointingly stale bluster" and "blind repetition of well-worn platitudes." At a root, in Business Week's view, is the labor leadership's unwillingness to address questions of labor productivity and job performance. A labor reporter for the New York Daily News has suggested that "labor is losing its grip." And President Ronald Reagan has accused organized labor of being out of step with its rank and file.

Let's take a look at these charges one by one. Critics charge that labor is controlled by entrenched bureaucrats. The fact of the matter is that labor's leadership is democratically elected and elections are often close and hotly contested. Critics accuse labor of being uninterested in productivity. In truth labor is not only worried about American industry losing its competitive edge but there is statistical evidence which shows that in manufacturing, productivity of unionized workers is substantially higher than that for ununionized workers. As for the charge that

The recent spate of press and President Reagan's criticism is not only ill-founded but it has obscured the fact that the labor movement is moving forward in a number of innovative directions. This month (March) the AFL-CIO is involved in a series of regional conferences at which the Federation's President Lane Kirkland and Secretary-Treasurer Thomas Donahue will sit down with local and state trade union leaders as part of an effort to "help strengthen state federations and local bodies."

The AFL-CIO is also moving forward in an attempt to get the United Auto Workers to rejoin the fold. The federation has embarked on an effort to abandon its neutrality in party primaries and to take part more directly in the nominating process for national office.

Guard changes

On Tuesday and Wednesday, undergraduate students at the University of Massachusetts chose Larry Kocot and Kevin Mangan to be the next presidents of their Student Government Association. As a result, the incumbent, Richard LaVoice, leaves office after two terms as co-president. He is the only student president ever to have served two terms.

During his tenure, Rich LaVoice has served the students of the University, representing them and their interests to the administration and, more importantly, to the UMass Board of Trustees, on which he served as a full, voting member.

In his first year as co-president with Brian Burke, Rich LaVoice began to work to correct many deficiencies within the SGA. A huge deficit which had accumulated over several years was attacked and is now almost non-existent. During this time, many students gained political momentum and a renewed interest in student causes, which seemed to give new life to the SGA.

In his second year in office, along with his co-president Richard Moran, Rich LaVoice maintained his tradition of hard work and dedication to student causes, developing a rapport with the Board of Trustees seldom seen among student leaders. A rapport so strong, that trustees often voted in favor of his sometimes controversial motions on the students' behalf. Besides working for UMass students, LaVoice also lobbied effectively in Boston and Washington for students' interests in the state and nationwide.

As one SGA administration leaves and another enters, we must all pause to thank Rich LaVoice for his two years of dedicated, effective service to the students of the University. And we also must wish the new co-presidents luck and hope they will continue this tradition of strong student leadership.

Out of Control

Religion without theology

Last week Dena Meyer submitted a letter to the Collegian (3/6), writing that "Recently the Newman Center posted an undocumented article accusing the Collegiate Association for the Research of Principles student group of mind control...the best way to learn about the 'carpies' is still to approach their table and ask a few questions. Let's make the university an open-minded exchange of ideas, not a breeding place for superstition, ignorance and fear."

Steve Masse

Okay, let's have some open-minded exchange about CARP – and discuss the World Student Times, (a publication of Sun Myung Moon's Unification Church).

First, in order to have a religion, you must have a theology. That includes a philosophical basis on which the religious teachings grow, so a relationship may be built between people and God. The only "theology" I saw in the World Student Times had to do with Adam and Eve.

Any sound theology would not be so fundamentalist as to assume Adam or Eve were actually real people who walked and talked with God and Lucifer. How simplistic! And the stuff about sex being a "new revelation" in Bible study is just another manifestation of Moon's immense manipulative power over the young! It is the young, the horny, who feel the most sexuality – and the most guilt and confusion over it! Little wonder that Moon would interpret "the tree of knowledge" to mean "the sinful sexuality of Mankind." HOW CAN YOU HAVE A RELIGION, if the "theology" is based on mutilations of scripture?

The very idea that the first sin of Mankind was sex! This mistranslation presupposes that God made people sexual just so He could blame them and punish them for something HE designed! There are many sources, both religious and social, regarding sexual morality – and most of those are more conscious of human dignity and common sense than this "Adam and Eve sex lesson."

Furthermore, the theological consensus on "Adam and Eve" is that the REAL first sin of Mankind is not sexuality, but Mankind's presumption to know, to test, to create God. That is the first sin. To "eat of the tree of knowledge" is to pretend to know, design and manipulate God. And who is more guilty of this presumption than those hypocrites who pretend to represent God, but in reality subvert truth in order to manipulate people? How dare the Moon church presume to interpret the Bible! This insensate tripe is not even acceptable misinterpretation!

Moon's view of "Adam and Eve" is one more manifestation of our society's inveterate preoccupation with sex and the propensity to jam every possible thing within a sexual framework. Anachronism! Cheating! That Moon would choose religion and sex, two preoccupations of youth, in such a silvery forked-tongue manner for the further purpose of manipulation, is damnable.

I don't question the right of any person to freedom of religious belief. But I do question the notion that religious belief automatically entitles the disciple to any religious practice he feels like doing in the name of God or religion, especially when that practice involves questionable business dealings, manipulation of people, or any other practice which abridges the rights of anybody to live, eat, work, sleep, love, grow and learn.

A second point is that "the sea plays a major role in Rev. Sun Myung Moon's vision of the future." But of course! That's where many oil fields are – and by favoring exploitation, Moon can find friends in high places who might bestow "legitimacy" to Moonism. And the sea is also where the fish are! (If St. Peter was a fisherman, then of course anything Mr. Moon does in a boat ought to be a prime display of Virtue and Saintliness.) Can you see what is happening here?

Moon can rape small fishing communities like Gloucester with one hand, and write for us not to be suspicious or resentful with his other hand, which drips with the blood and sweat of generations of Gloucester fishermen and their hungry families. (Go to Gloucester and ask them, if you require "documentation.")

The theology of Moon may seem to reflect accepted Judeo-Christian ideas, but we must understand that we ourselves don't know Judeo-Christian theology well enough to distinguish proper interpretation from manipulative misinterpretation. Moon's assumption that God can "suffer," or that God even has the human quality such that "suffering" would be a plausible affliction, is presumptuous. How dare Moon presume to create God!

Granted, Moon may provide many good things for many people. But the position he creates for himself is far beyond the good he does, and he uses his position for self-aggrandizement at the expense of others.

A "religion" whose prime purpose is self-perpetuation seems an unlikely candidate for legitimacy, especially when that perpetuation needs a corporation to back it, and a sniveling hoarde of disciples to "set up tables" in its defense (as though it would need defense if it were in truth legitimate).

Tips from the waitresses

The time has finally come for the waitresses here in the Amherst area to write a letter to your paper regarding the behavior of college students who frequent bars and restaurants. The letter published on March 9th from the group of students who, dressed outlandishly, went to the Pub, and were then verbally abused was too much. It was unfortunate that the situation happened but the insinuation that the Pub is the place to go to be insulted and hassled was not necessary. The writer forgot to comment that they were also complimented by the disc jockey and various other people.

We would also like to add that though we do not mean to stereotype all students as being rude and cheap, it seems that a large percentage do, indeed, not know how to behave in public. Student awarenss of the waitress job seems to be non-existant. We would like to clear up a few misconceptions of acceptable restaurant behavior.

1) We only receive $2.01 per hour. We must rely on our tips to bring our earnings to at least minimum wage. Many of us are paying for college, rent, etc., and are not putting in hours because we have nothing to do. We're sure that most people reading this know the feeling of needing money – it is too bad they can't feel compassion. If you can't afford to tip, then you can't afford to go out.

2) Waitresses must wait in line to get their drinks from the bar. Drinks do not simply appear, but must be mixed, shook, blended, etc. Try to understand why your drinks might be delayed.

3) Fifteen percent is considered an adequate tip of the total bill. However, some considerations are in order. If you've been unusually fussy with special kitchen orders and requiring constant attention, and your waitress has been helpful, show your appreciation by perhaps tipping 20 percent. Also take into consideration the amount of time you have taken up a table. To sit for hours sipping coffee and then leaving a few cents isn't really fair, as you have prevented the waitress from filling that table with a full paying customer.

So, next time you go out, act like a responsible adult and your waitress will treat you as one.

★ Spikers

University (2nd in New England) dumped UMass the first three games last night at NOPE gymnasium.

The Minutemen led the first game 6-0 with excellent spiking by Mark Ruegg and Steve Geryk, but they went down hill. UMass became intimidated by the Crimson and the game ended 9-15.

"It's hard to believe that after leading 6-0 we got intimidated," coach Al Morel said. Passing and communication on the court deteriorated, according to Morel. "That's hard to believe too, because we worked on them intensely all weeek."

Harvard Captain Terry Trumball sprained his knee early in the evening but his teammates took over and proceeded to romp UMass, leading all the way in the second game toward a 15-8 win.

"With no passing there wasn't much Pat (Ryan) could do," Morel said. Ryan, who plays the setting position, was recently voted as best collegiate volleyball player in New England, and is a candidate for the olympic volleyball team.

The third game was do or die. The score was tied 10-10 as the points went back and forth with neither team giving in. Harvard eventually led 14-13, a match point situation. Killer spikes from Ruegg and Mark Farrante enabled UMass to hand in for seven turnovers until Harvard dominated.

With their hitting ability, both Aulenback and Kraham will be in the line up, probably shuttling from behind the plate to left field on a fairly even basis.

As for the outfield, senior Mark Litano will move over from left field to fill the center field void left by the graduation of Mike McEvilly.

Steady is a good description of Litano, whose average arm is more than compensated for by his outstanding speed. Litano led the team in steals last year with 14 (got caught just three times) and can run down a ball as well as McEvilly ever could.

Right field will probably see freshman Keith Lovellette out there against right handed pitching, while Steve Hennessy, a very steady fielder, and Joe Larkin, who led the world in batting last year in limited action (9-for-14, .529), will also see action in the outfield.

If pitching and defense are 70 percent of the game, you still need another 30 percent, and Bergquist is confident that he'll get it.

"I think we'll hit," Bergquist says. "I wouldn't classify us as outstanding but we can definitely be a good hitting teams."

Litano (.321) returns as the top hitter on a team that last year batted at a .289 clip.

While UMass lost 11 of its 20 home runs last year through graduation, the coaches feel there will be a surprise in the power department. Most of it will have to come from Kraham, Aulenback and McReddie, who had an outstanding fall and whom Bedard calls the sleeper of the three.

But, defense and hitting aside, it is pitching that will determine, more or less, the kind of season UMass has this year. It could be wrong to take good defense and hitting as given, but it seems to be there, waiting for the pitchers to follow suit.

The Bad News Bears-Black Magic second round game which was played Wednesday night is a good illustration of this point. The Bears, led by the hustling defense of backcourt men Larry Powers and Kevin Downing, who combined for 12 steals, and the soft-touch shooting of Bob Seltzer, downed the quick Black Magic squad, 43-33. Black Magic had a more than adequate cheering section on hand and they roared from start to finish, in jubilation when their team scored and in anger when they miscued.

Los Conquistadores, led by the inside moves of Phil Houston, just got by Dogbreath, 44-42, while the Ma-Fas squamped their opponents, 86-35, with Rich Schipani on target with some long-range bombing and Scott LaFond contributing on the boards.

In last night's third round action, Los Conquistadores squeaked into Monday's quarterfinals with an overtime win over High Five 41-38. The Bad New Bears outscored the Ma-Fas 27-7 in the second half behind some Marc Thompson cherry-picking rebounding and Ken Fulgham followups. Barrett MacGrath was an accurate rocket-launcher in scoring 15 for the Ma-Fas.

The defending IM hoop champs, GQ II (minus Tony DelPina), are 3-0 in playoff competition. Last night they were tested by a tough Sultans squad but held on for a 51-41 victory behind Dwayne Lopes' 19 points and 12 each from Wilbur Jackson and Garry Pearson. Jim Aulenbach scored 15 for the Sultans and Brian Heyworth worked well on the boards.

Other action (all winners go on to the quarterfinals round): Pink Steel 50 Brooks Brothers 26, Gunners 61 Tanucks 35, Vapors 31 Fools 26, Horsefeathers 50 Phi Sig 31.

The tennis crisis: the coaches speak out

By KEVIN CULLEN and
STEPHEN FREKER
Collegian Staff

[Second in a series]

Steve Williams wants to make himself perfectly clear.

"I have no bone to pick with the University (of Massachusetts)," said Williams, coach of the UMass men's tennis team. "I've been a tennis professional for ten years and I only coach the kids (at UMass). I'm not tied to the University in any other way. But as far as I'm concerned, the (UMass) courts have to be the worst facilities of any institution of this size in the country."

Unless an estimated $56,000 can be allocated, UMass will have no tennis facilities after this spring. University officials have deemed the school's 32 courts unsafe and have already closed all eight courts located between the North Physical Education building (NOPE) and the Sylvan residential area.

If work is not done to repair the surfaces and chain link fences surrounding the playing areas, UMass will be left without any tennis courts.

"Most of the courts are in passable condition," said UMass women's team coach John Beal. "You can play on them, but prefer not to. The ones at NOPE are definitely the worst. The cracks and bumps are pretty bad, and it's probably a good idea that those are going to be closed down."

While Beal sees it as a good idea in the short run, he does not see the university's image benefitting from having the NOPE courts chained shut.

"There will be broken glass smashed all over and the place will look like a garbage pit," Beal said. "Can you see the faces on the students who are brought on residential tours up in Sylvan? They'll be amazed to see that the university allows such an eyesore on campus. At least when the courts are open, the students police the courts themselves and try to keep them clean because they are using them. If the courts are left alone, they'll go to pot."

Williams let it be known early that if the condition of the courts did not improve, his team would not compete after this spring.

"When you talk about skilled players competing at high speed, as some of our kids do, these courts are in lethal condition," Williams said. "It's a disgrace that a university this size, or any university, should have tennis courts in these kinds of conditions."

A decision on whether to close the 12 lower Boyden field courts is expected next week, while the 12 upper Boyden courts, located next to Tobin Hall, will be used as home courts for both men's and women's teams.

"Obviously, there's going to be the problem of overcrowding if we're forced to share the facilities with the men's team," Beal said. "It's going to be more of a problem for us than the men, because we have a bigger squad (24 to the men's 12)."

While Williams would rather all 32 courts receive refurbishing, he says it should be the university's priority to have at least 12 courts in playable conditions.

"We would like to see at least 12 decent courts," Williams said. "They could be used by the teams, intramurals, faculty and students alike. I don't think that's asking for too much."

John Volpe, assistant to the dean for facilities at UMass, would also like to see the repair work done, but doesn't have much hope that it will.

"We're hoping some monies will break lose to help repair at least some of the courts," Volpe said. "But the state has been cutting back on maintenance funds (where repairs will now have to be funded through), so I don't know."

Hoop goes into semis

By STEPHEN FREKER
Collegian Staff

There were about 200 to 300 spectators at the Boyden Gymnasium last night. Wednesday night, there were about the same.

These people are best classified as hoop junkies. If there is a decent basketball game to be watched somewhere on campus, these fans will be there to watch it.

You could recognize a lot of the faces if you had been a reasonably faithful supporter of the University of Massachusetts men's basketball team and attended your share of games this year, be they seatsquirmers or blowouts. You would have seen many of these people there at the Cage cheering for the team. They like good hoop.

Although Tony DeFina, Tyrone Whitehead, Ron Washington, and Craig Smith were all at the gym last night, they had not come to shoot baskets and the fans were not there to watch them play anyway.

These off season varsity players and a multitude of other hoop fans were there to watch some of the more ordinary competitors perform in the intramural basketball program's post season playoffs which began single elimination play Tuesday night.

The intramural basketball program's regular season consisted of five games this year and included play in men's, women's and co-rec leagues. Two innovations were made in the selection formula for entry into the playoffs this year. All teams that finished with a regular season record over .500 became eligible for post season play. Also, for the first time, league winners did not automatically receive first round playoff byes as in previous years, according to head intramural official Marc Thompson.

The new playoff team selection method, which was first used by the intramural department for its football program in the fall successfully, allowed more teams into the playoff competition. The increased participation has been a bit of a problem.

"We though that with more teams involved (in playoff competition) that the players would be a lot happier," Frank Wright, associate director of intramurals said. But instead, we seem to have even more problems. With more participants, there's been more complaints and more headaches, according to Wright.

GQ team members Garry Pearson and Wilbur Jackson battle two Sultans for a rebound. GQ won 51-41.

The large fan turnout could have added to this spirited season of intramural hoop playoffs. It's pretty tough on a referee when he makes a close call and gets the whole team and a good portion of the crowd screaming and questioning his intelligence.

Bruins, What the Puck snag first, second seeds

By STEPHEN FREKER
Collegian Staff

The final faceoff was held and the last puck of the regular season of the intramural ice hockey program was dropped last night at the Greenfield Rink.

Last night's action was a dogfight for the final four seeds of the six team playoff field with six teams battling for the four remaining positions.

The regular season was one of attrition for most of the league teams as the teams kept knocking each other off. Breen's Bruins with their flawless 10-0 record was the only squad that had it easy this year as most teams were more evenly balanced record-wise.

The Bruins got by What the Puck, 4-2, Monday night to grab their second straight intramural hockey regular season title and the first seed in the upcoming playoffs. Last Sunday the Motherpuckers came from behind to tie this same What the Puck team to snag the number two playoff seed. Both teams recieved first round byes because of their position in the field.

Going into last night's action, six teams, phlegm (5-3-1), What the Puck (5-3-2), Puckoff(5-4), the Americans (5-4), the Chowderwombs (5-4), and the Beerhunters (4-3-2), all had a chance at post-season play.

Playoffs will start Sunday evening, March 15. The number three seeded team will play the sixth seeded team at 7 p.m. and the fourth seed will meet the fifth seeded team at 9 p.m.

The semifinal round of the playoffs will be held Monday night, March 16, with Breen's Bruins playing one of the quarterfinalist survivors at 9 p.m. and the Motherpuckers will take on the other squad at 10:10 p.m.

All playoff games will be held at the Greenfield Rink and the intramural ice hockey championship game will be held Tuesday night, March 17 at 9 p.m.

UMass baseball

Gloves and bats look good

By KEVIN CULLEN

(Last of a series)

Dick Bergquist pulls no punches. He'll tell you straight off.

"We know we don't have a flame-throwing (pitching) staff," says Bergquist, head coach of the University of Massachusetts baseball team. "We're just not going to strike out a lot of people this year. Our pitchers' concentration will have to be on control and throwing strikes — and playing defense."

This year's Minuteman squad could very well be a baseball team with a softball team's philosophy:

Let 'em hit it and we'll catch it.

This philosophy is affordable when one looks at the defense this year, which is led by the return of last year's infield.

Tri-captain Vin Bonanno is the anchor at shortstop. Once a skinny kid behind Ed Skribaski, Bonanno's grown in size and ability in the last two years. While not having the strongest of arms, Bonanno plays hitters well, according to Bergquist, which in the long run gets out more batters than a gun arm.

Sophomore Dean Bennet returns at second base, after making just six errors in his rookie year.

Warren McReddie is an adequate first baseman who's been improving steadily with his defensive play, according to Bergquist. Third baseman Barry Bennett has, Bergquist says, the "potential to be excellent defensively. It's up to him. He's got to do it himself."

UMass also has a solid infield bench with some veterans, like juniors Kelly McDonald and Jack Perry, to go along with the youth of sophomore Bruce Emerson and freshman Tim Foster.

The catching situation gives Bergquist and assistant coach Jim Bedard two of the better receivers in New England in tri-captain John Kraham and senior Jim Aulenback.

Both handle pitchers well, also, which is perhaps most important, considering UMass has, outside of senior Chuck Thompson, no pitcher this year with more than 17 varsity innings pitched.

Carroll in consolations

158 pound Mike Carroll, UMass' sole entry in this year's Nationals, advanced to the consolation round of the double elimination wrestling tournament yesterday at Princeton University.

Carroll lost the first round 7-2 to Jim Farina of Iowa State. After the first round, Iowa State, which has a man entered in every weight class, is in second place in team totals with 15½ points. Iowa, the only other team in the tournament with 10 wrestlers entered, is in first place with 16 points.

Carroll earned the trip to the Nationals by placing first in the New Englands two weeks ago at Boston University. He will be wrestling in the consolation round today in Princeton, NJ.

Election trial ruling pending

A trial against the Student Government Association and the Undergraduate Student Senate over the controversy surrounding last year's senate elections ended last night with the prosecution and defense issuing their closing statements.

No decision had been made as of press time last night.

Late yesterday afternoon, Robert Zimmerman, a student senator from Sylvan and the plaintiff in the case, who had previous attempted to remove his name from the suit, prosecuting advocate Craig Sherwood, claiming that Sherwood was not adequately representing him and that he (Zimmerman) no longer has an interest in the case. Zimmerman went on to prosecute the case himself and, in his closing statement, asked the three-judge panel to dismiss the case.

Defense advocate Robert Cleary, who yesterday presented two defense witnesses—senate speaker Linda Geary and senator Joel Weissman—said that while he felt he had disproved the prosecution's arguments, he was unsure as to what the verdict might be.

The case stemmed from last October's senate elections when the results and election process were contested by several candidates. In the election, a group of students known as the Progressive Student Alliance, had placed the designation "PSA" next to their names on the ballot. In addition, the name of one of the candidates, Jim Floyd, was misspelled on the ballot.

Protests over the PSA designation on the ballot were thrown out after the election by the Coordinating Committee, but the Floyd protest was allowed to stand, invalidating the elections. At the next senate meeting, in the beginning of November, the senate over-turned the Coordinating Committee's ruling, allowing the election results to stand. A few days later, the suit was filed in the student judiciary.

Last semester, a tribunal hearing the case was unable to render a decision before intersession and issued an injunction barring those elected in October from taking office in the senate. The original tribunal also ordered new hearings, which have been going on for much of this semester.

7 UM students face trial, charges from Nursing Home strike

Seven University of Massachusetts students are scheduled to face trial today before Judge Alvertus J. Morse in Hampshire District Court in Northampton on charges stemming from a strike at Amherst Nursing Home last October.

The seven were originally to be sentenced by District Court Judge Irving Goldblatt Feb. 5 but Goldblatt rejected recommendations from both defense and prosecuting attorneys that all but trespassing charges be dismissed.

Goldblatt also refused the prosecution's request that the sentences be several hours of community service work instead of criminal penalties.

Goldblatt said he could not accept the recommendations because such sentences would "encourage and enhance similar civil disorders."

The strike at Amherst Nursing Home, which lasted from Oct. 23 to 25, was marked by several confrontations between strike supporters and police escorting employees through a picket line.

It ended when District 1199 of the New England Health Care Employees Union, which represents 60 employees at the Home, and the nursing home management settled on a two-year contract. The contract called for a $1.15 wage increase over two years, retroactive pay to July 1, 1980, two extra sick days and an agency fee.

Charged with interfering with an employee gaining legal entry, disorderly conduct and trespassing are Daniel LeBarre, 19, of Holyoke, Elizabeth Hill, 20, of Amherst and Gerald Fresia, 32, of Amherst.

Charged with interfering with an employee gaining legal entry and trespassing is Joseph Gannon, 24, of Franklin.

Arvid Muller, 20, of Wayland, is charged with assault and battery on a police officer and trespassing.

Charged with disorderly conduct and trespassing is Steven Shulamn, age unknown, of Amherst.

Alan Compagnon, 23, of Amherst, is charged with malicious destruction of property and trespassing.

Nazi camp survivor to lecture

Prizewinning author, playwright, and storyteller Elie Wiesel will speak at 8 tonight in the University of Massachusetts Campus Center Auditorium.

Wiesel, a survivor of both the Auschwitz and Buchenwald Nazi concentration camps, is the author of Night, Dawn, A Beggar in Jerusalem, and Gates of the Forest, as well as several other books about the Holocaust.

Wiesel speaks on one of the cruelest periods in our history... "I've never heard anyone so moving,"
—Rabbi Saul Perlmutter

"It's one of those books like Dr. Zhivago that restores one's faith in life by wrestling with a despair too huge to be described," the New York Times Book Review said about Wiesel's Gates of the Forest.

Wiesel speaks on one of the cruelest periods in our history and brings forth a message of hopefulness, said Rabbi Saul Perlmutter, UMass director of Hillel.

"I've never heard anyone so moving," said Perlmutter.

Wiesel has been the recipient of many honors including National Jewish Book Awards in 1964 and 1973, the Jewish Heritage Award for Literature in 1966, and most recently France's 1980 Prix Inter for his forthcoming book The Testament.

Wiesel served until recently as Distinguished Professor of Judaic Studies at City College of New York, and is currently an Andrew Mellon Professor of Humanities at Boston University.

"An Evening with Elie Wiesel" is sponsored by B'nai B'rith Hillel, Distinguished Visitors Program, Arts Council, and the Performing Arts Committee. Admission is free.

Thousands join silent march in memory of 20 slain children

ATLANTA (AP) — Some 2,500 people marched from the state Capitol yesterday in a silent Save The Youth Walk-A-Thon in memory of 20 slain black children, while searchers returned to woods on the southwest edge of Atlanta to look for two missing boys.

Coretta Scott King, widow of slain civil rights leader Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., joined entertainer Ben Vereen in leading the three-mile march sponsored by the Association of Christian Student Leaders. Eight motorcycle police served as point men.

Marchers came from Washington, D.C., Indiana, Iowa, Baltimore, Houston, Florida and from throughout Georgia.

"St. Louis Is With You Atlanta," read a sign in front of one contingent. Fifteen students and a teacher from a Detroit high school said they drove 16 hours for the march.

The Guardian Angels, young people who patrol New York City subways, also took part.

When the group reached the Richard B. Russell Federal Building a third of the way into the march, Vereen and several others paused for a silent prayer, then rejoined the march.

Gang boss dies in bomb blast, Is latest in gangland slayings

PHILADELPHIA — Reputed crime boss Phillip C. "Chicken Man" Testa died yesterday in a bomb blast on the porch of his south Philadelphia home in what police said was the latest in a series of gangland-style slayings since the assassination of his alleged predecessor Angelo Bruno nearly a year ago.

Police barricaded a 50-foot debris-strewn area around the house as they tried to determine what type of explosive had been used. An FBI mobile laboratory was called in to help with the investigation.

The explosion at 2:55 a.m. rocked the neighborhood, shattering windows of nearby houses.

The blast wrecked the front porch of Testa's home, blowing the front door 30 feet back into the kitchen and splitting in two a second-story concrete railing.

The house, owned by Testa's son, was empty when the 56-year-old Testa arrived. He had double-parked a 1980 Chevrolet Caprice Classic next to his other car and went to the door, police said.

"He left the car ... went up to the house and was about to go in when the explosion occurred," said Detective Capt. Orville Ballard.

Testa died less than two hours later at St. Agnes Hospital.

Hijackers inept, hostage claims

DAMASCUS, Syria — Pakistan yesterday accused the Soviet-backed government of Afghanistan of arming hijackers who held more than 100 people hostage for 13 days after diverting a Pakistani jetliner to the Afghan capital of Kabul.

One of the hostages released in Damascus, Syria, on Saturday at the end of the ordeal reported that the leader of the heavily armed trio of Pakistani air pirates boasted he had been trained by the Palestine Liberation Organization.

But the freed hostage, who has come to be known as a "mystery" man because of suspicions about his passport, called the hijackers inept.

"The hijackers kept falling asleep and dropping their hand grenades," said the man, who has not yet been identified.

As the freed hostages emerged from medical checkups at a military hospital here, Pakistani President Mohammed Zia ul-Haq alleged there was a "deep conspiracy" between the Marxist regime and Kabul and Pakistani dissidents. He alleged the Afghans provided the anti-Zia hijackers with some of the weapons and explosives they brandished upon emerging Saturday from the jet they commandeered March 2.

Zia also said he and Syrian President Hafez Assad agreed to "temporary refuge" for the hijackers and 54 political prisoners released by Pakistan in exchange for the hostages' freedom.

Eric Clapton is hospitalized, cancels his entire concert tour

ST. PAUL, Minn. — British rock star Eric Clapton, hospitalized with a perforated ulcer, has canceled his entire four-month North American concert tour after only a few performances, his personal manager said yesterday.

Clapton was rushed to a St. Paul hospital Saturday with a perforated ulcer following a Friday night performance in Madison, Wis. Roger Forrester, the singer's manager, said doctors had told him Clapton should remain hospitalized for two to three weeks.

Clapton, the author of such rock classics as "Layla," was listed in serious but stable condition yesterday at United Hospitals, said Forrester.

"They are running tests on him, but his condition is improved," Forrester said.

Forrester said Clapton, 36, had been given a pain-killing injection before going on stage Friday night.

Charles Kimball, one of the few Americans allowed in Iran during the hostage crisis, will speak about his experiences in Iran Wednesday night.

Minister to speak on hostage crisis

By CARLA R. LESH
Collegian Staff

Charles Kimball, one of the first Americans allowed into Iran to see the hostages during the 444 day crisis, will speak on his experiences in Iran at 8 p.m. Wednesday, March 18 in Mahar Auditorium.

Kimball, a Baptist minister, was a member of the delegation that went to Iran on the first Christmas trip, in 1979. He was also a member of the so-called Ramsey Clark delegation, Kimball's latest trip to Iran ended just one day before the hostages were released on January 20, 1981. During this last trip he was one of two Americans allowed to travel freely in Iran.

During the trips to Iran, Kimball saw many different aspects of the crisis. He met with many of the top religious and government authorities throughout the crisis, including a one hour meeting with the Ayatollah Khomeini, a press release said.

Kimball also met with the students occupying the American embassy in Tehran during the Christmas, 1979 trip.

As well as talking with many Iranians close to the hostage situation, Kimball has talked extensively with the hostage's families and is aware of their reactions to the situation.

Kimball is a doctoral candidate at the Harvard University School of Theology. He is specializing in comparative religions, specifically Christian-Islamic relations.

The five year Massachusetts resident has written extensively about his experiences during the Iran crisis. His articles have appeared in the Boston Globe and the Christian Science Monitor.

There will be a question and answer period. The speech is presented by the Distinguished Visitors Program.

Pizza delivery man assaulted

A Domino's deliveryman was assaulted at 2:36 a.m. yesterday outside George Washington tower in the Southwest Residential Area, University of Massachusetts police said. A prank order was called in, police said. As the deliveryman left the tower, two men offered to buy the pizza at half price. When he refused, the men first tried to take the pizza them hit the deliveryman. The deliveryman ran to this car and reported the incident to an officer in lot 22, police said. When they returned to the tower one of the men was taken into protective custody.

In another incident, a new dictophone, a telephone and two student checks valued at $850 were reported stolen from the University Health Services X-ray department at 10 a.m. yesterday, police said. The doors to the room were unlocked. The larceny apparently occured between the 14th and 15th, police said.

Two windows were broken with beer bottles this weekend. A beer bottle was reportedly thrown through a first floor lounge window in Cashin residence hall in the Sylvan Residential Area, police said. The incident was reported yesterday at 11:19 p.m. Damage is estimated at $100. Another beer bottle was thrown through a dormitory room window on the third floor of Thoreau residence hall in the Southwest Residential Area, police said. The incident was reported at 2:25 a.m. yesterday. The damage is estimated at $100, policy said.

A 1972 Toyota was found rolled over on its side on Thatcher Way by a UMass police officer, police said. Damage is estimated at $50.

Policy with Third World shifts

By GEORGE GEDDA
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — In its first seven weeks in office, the Reagan administration has adopted policies toward Third World countries that re-emphasize traditional anti-communist approaches and substantially alter the criteria for judging human rights performance.

Nations regarded as outcasts during the Carter administration now enjoy a new respectability in Washington. At the same time, there has been a sharpening of hostility toward countries seen as friendly to the Soviet Union.

One shift involves the American attitude toward conservative military regimes. U.S. relations with such countries as South Korea, Argentina and Chile are once again cordial after four years of strain over their alleged abuses of human rights.

In contrast to the Carter administration's emphasis on promoting racial equality in South Africa, President Reagan, in a recent statement, suggested a more important consideration should be that country's role as a supplier of key minerals.

U.S. relations with Soviet bloc countries became progressively strained during the Carter administration and this process has accelerated under Reagan.

Reagan suggested last week that the administration may provide assistance to the Afghan rebels fighting Soviet occupation forces. Officials also are considering proposing repeal of legislation barring covert activity in behalf of anti-communist rebels in Marxist Angola.

Combating communist-sponsored "international terrorism" in El Salvador and elsewhere has a priority now that it did not have during the Carter era.

Looking back

By Carla Lesh

The March 19, 1919 issue of the Massachusetts Collegian, of the Massachusetts Agricultural College, carried a lead story proclaiming the news of the defeat of the Worcester Polytechnic Institute by the Aggie basketball team, 23 to 19.

A list of 45 alumni and students killed in World War I was published with the request for any additional names. The full list of casualties was needed, the Collegian said for a war memorial.

In 1919, two basketball games signaled the end of the interclass series of the semester. The seniors beat the juniors and the freshmen beat the sophmores.

That year, the Dairy Department of the Massachusetts Agricultural College ran the following ad: "Why not be one of our satisfied Parcel Post Customers? We send to all points weekly Our Dairy Products Consisting of Cottage, Neufchatel, Olive, Pimento and Club Cheese, Salt and Sweet Butter Prices of our products given on request."

"Prepare to be thrilled...the punch is in with both fists, and you will see innumerable feats of daring," promotional agents warned audiences sixty-two years ago this week at the Amherst Town Hall. The town hall held scrennings of silent movies including a Mutt and Jeff comedy; Cecil B. DeMille's "Till I Come Back to You" and "The Iron Test", featuring Carol Holloway and Antonio Moreno that year, the Collegian advertised.

The New M.A.C. Song Book was for sale at the Treasurer's Office for $1.00 "Learn to sing all the Aggie Songs" the ad read.

The Davenport, run by Mrs. J.K.W. Davenport on Pleasant Street was "The unsurpassed eating house for 'Aggie' men and their friends. The Davenport offered lodging for "Transient and Weekly Boarders."

The College Candy Kitchen sold "Home-Made High Grade Chocolates, Cream Caramels, Nuts and Marshmallows, Hard Candies-Peanut Brittle and Chop Suey, Salted Nuts of all kinds, All Varieties of Cigarettes "They also featured a "Sanitary Soda fountain," the paper stated.

The Department of Floriculture at M.A.C. advertised carnations, roses, violets and potted plants grown on campus for sale.

Talking to Ralph

Parade day in Southie

Kay Flaherty was running around like a mad woman yesterday afternoon in her house up the hill on East Broadway in South Boston. It was Sunday, March 15, but it was really St. Patrick's Day. The parade was coming.

In Southie, it was St. Patrick's Day.

"Where's Johnnie?" Kay Flaherty asked aloud, looking for her husband. "Is he gone again?"

Johnnie Flaherty was gone again, off on some wild booze chase. Up Broadway, to Joe Connolly's house, where a bunch of guys who grew up together in Southie, who never left it, still manage to spend every St. Patrick's Sunday together, like old times.

Kevin Cullen

Parade days are busy at the Flaherty house. Kay Flaherty is up at dawn, pulling out the scores of plates and cups and saucers that will hold the spreads of cold cuts, potato salad and cake for the in-laws.

The relatives start arriving around noon time and soon the house is full with people who are related to each other in some way or another. The aunts tell their little nieces and nephews that they've grown so much, as the kids blush and shy away.

The Flahertys never left Southie. Johnnie Flaherty was born on East Second St. next to the Greyhound bus garage, the youngest of eight kids born to Brigid and Martin Flaherty who left Carraroe, Co. Galway, in Ireland around the turn of the century. When the Irish landed in Boston, they usually went to the person who sponsored their passage to America. More often than not, the sponsor lived in Southie, so it was there that the Irish went and, along with a large Lithuanian population, built up a strong, ethnic community.

Most of Johnnie Flaherty's brothers and sisters left. One went to Malden, another bought a house in Roslindale, a couple went to Quincy. His sister Mary and brother Willie stayed in their parents' house on East Second St., but they died years ago, so now it's just Johnnie and his wife Kay, who went around the corner and up the hill, to East Broadway, where they raised four boys.

It was 1:30 yesterday when the kids heard the first music coming from somewhere up around M Street park.

"Let's go everybody," Kay Flaherty said. "And keep an eye open for Johnnie, will you?"

Out on the sidewalk, they watched the bands and the politicians walk by.

"Do you know what bothers me?" asked Buddy Hansen, an older guy who stood there on the curb, watching the first bands go by. "The way everybody seems to be an expert on Southie. It's the most amazing thing. All the TV stations think they know what goes on. And the (Boston) Globe—Jesus, the Globe. They're experts on everything, aren't they? And, I'll tell you something, they don't know a damn thing about Southie. Not a damn thing."

Budy Hansen knows South Boston. He knows probably half of the 38,000 or so people who live on this small jetty of land sticking out into Boston Harbor like an appendix. He lived through the Curley years, the Depression, three wars and he's amazed that it wasn't until busing came along that everyone was suddenly an expert on South Boston. There were racial fights, with stones and words and all that goes with that sort of thing. People were hurt and there's been worse.

"It's a terrible thing, the fighting and all that," Buddy Hansen said. "But the way South Boston is categorized, the way the newspapers and the TV stations have lumped everybody in Southie into one catgory—isn't that as bad as what they say people from Southie are like?"

Buddy Hansen waved as William Bulger, president of the Massachusetts state senate, walked by.

"Now why is it you never hear a lot about Billy Bulger being from Southie?" Buddy Hansen asked. "If he was a troublemaker, you'd hear about it."

Johnnie Flaherty came running up some time later, a wild look in his eyes.

"Where the hell is everybody?" he asked, coming to a stop in front of this friend, Buddy Hansen.

"The parade's over," Buddy Hansen said.

"Jesus," Johnnie Flaherty said, shaking his head. "They get shorter every year."

Johnnie Flaherty and Buddy Hansen climbed the stairs and went up to the kitchen for a couple of beers and a cigarette.

Clean air is threatened

On March 1, 1981 the National Commission on Air Quality submitted to Congress a report recommending changes in the Clean Air Act. This Act was passed in 1970 and amended in 1977. This year it is up for revision.

Many members of Congress will attempt to weaken this Act. They feel, along with our Interior Secretary James Watt, that this act in its present form inhibits industry and hinders development of energy resources. The commission's report indicated that the law did not do this but rather "...policies encouraging the conservation of energy and the use of renewable resources can significantly reduce air pollution while permitting economic growth." (New York Times)

The Commission did recommend some loosening of restrictions of the Act; they eliminated deadlines for meeting health standards in areas with air pollution, and eliminated current rules for the preserving of air quality in the country where the air is still clean. They also added some positive recommendations: retaining national air quality standards regardless of the cost in dealing with acid rain, and establishing rules to clean up hazardous air pollutants.

It is apparent that this present Administration does not possess a conscience because it promotes a relaxation of clean air standards which would benefit industry and not people. With the implementation of the Clean Air Act, total emissions of regulated substances are down 40 percent since 1970. Why should we regress back to pre 1970 air standards?

Help out during Southwest Week

Do you ever find that the busier you are, the more you get accomplished?

I am a member of the Southwest Assembly. The Southwest Assembly is a student governing body which is funded by students' SATE funds.

Presently, I am one of the students that represent SWA is the Southwest Budget Committee, which oversees all the academic spending of the Southwest Residential College. It also decides what academic courses should be funded. I am the chairperson of the SWA Civil Liberties Committee in which we will be working in amending the Assembly Constitution. I am also on the Residential Appeals for Housing.

Last semester I was not ever a member, but I sat on these committees and became very aware of the many areas Southwest Assembly covers. This is why urge all the Southwest students to come and join us.

Within the next couple of weeks there be many things happening. If you would like to work on one project, Southwest Week, which will be from April 28 to May 2, it is in its planning stages. Come and help. For more information call 545-0960.

Why do you think they call it dope?

In response to your article detailing the increase in alcohol abuse at UMass (Collegian, 3/9), I would like to comment on another very prevalent abuse: marijuana.

At all of the dorm and University functions I have recently attended, and just walking to classes, I have been astounded at the number of people using "pot." A fair proportion of these people hold official positions in the dorm. I would like to ask these people:

1. Are you aware of the serious effects of your action on your body?

2. Are you aware of the negative image such blatant drug abuse gives to our community?

3. Why do you feel incapable of enjoying a Laurel and Hardy movie or a sunny day without a joint?

I'm not insensitive to the relaxational benefits of occasional marijuana use. I do start to worry when I see a drug becoming such a big part of so many lives in my community.

If you want to drink, sign up

Although I usually pick up the Collegian just to read Doonesbury and try to ignore the rest, I did note the headline on Mr. Katz's column (3/11).

Applying the 1960's concept of "old enough to die, but not to vote" to the drinking age question is not entirely accurate. The legal drinking age on military installations is 18. Therefore, those young people who have accepted the responsibilities and risks of military service can, in fact, consume alcoholic beverages legally.

I can't help Mr. Katz with his desire to use illegal drugs, but if he needs a drink all that bad, I suggest that he see his local recruiter.

Oops

My guest column, "Pump-Priming and Supply-Siding" (Collegian, 3/12) was my first-ever contribution to the Collegian, and I hardly expected to submit another entry so soon. But I wish to express my surprise on two accounts—that my essay was edited to such a small extent, and that my name was edited at all.

The Neighborhoods: On their way to the top

THE NEIGHBORHOODS
WITH THE STANDARDS AND THE BOYFRIENDS
MARCH 14, 1981
RUSTY NAIL INN

By STEEV WINNIMAN
Collegian Staff

The Neighborhoods are in a sort of halfway state right now. They're clearly far more than an area/local/bar band. At the Rusty Nail Saturday night the crowd was packed in front of the stage before the Hoods even started—they were anxious just for a look at these guys. On the other hand, The Neighborhoods have quite a way to go as a band before they become genuine superstars. Basically, Saturday night's show was the same one they've performed in this area a dozen times in the past year.

Which is not to say that the Hoods are bad. In fact, they're great. Bassist John Hartcorn and drummer Mike Quaglia keep the breakneck pace going at full speed without bothering to stand still for a minute. And David Minehan, besides' being lead vocalist and guitarist, remains the focal point of the band. Leaping around the stage, snarling at the crowd, sinking to his knees while soloing, Minehan commands the audience's attention from start to finish. Plus, Minehan is quite capable—unlike most other rock musicians—of delivering an intelligent, witty between-song patter. Overall, anyone seeing the Neighborhoods for the first time would have to conclude that they're one of the best rock and roll bands around today.

BUT—and herein lies the problem—anyone seeing them for the second, third, or tenth time is seeing essentially the same show each time around. As good as the Hoods are, each move is getting to feel so pre-planned that it might as well be a movie—"The Neighborhoods Concert"—showing, rather than a live band. Coupled with that is the fact that the band has only put out one piece of vinyl so far to attest to their skill. Sure, it's admirable that the Hoods don't want to put out a typical corporate album, and that they're willing to wait for a really good recording deal, but meanwhile how are we supposed to know how the songs go or what the words are? Minehan assured me that another recording is imminently forthcoming, but refused to specify what or where or when. Unless the Hoods commit some of their repertoire to plastic, they'll have to either lose potentially great songs or play them over and over until they get boring. Another bind.

So it looks to me like the Neighborhoods are in a sticky situation right now. They've got lots of potential; I'd take David Minehan over Bruce Springsteen any day. They question is whether they'll continue to try achieving success on their own terms, and risk staying local superstars forever while hordes of lesser bands become famous, or if they'll decide to play the commercial game and do what the record companies tell them, balancing stardom with selling-out. I really hope the Neighborhoods find an acceptable compromise, but meanwhile we just have to sit back and wait.

Opening for the Neighborhoods were the Standards, who I accidentally missed by arriving late, and the Boyfriends, who I purposely missed by staying at the bar and not paying attention. No further comment is necessary.

Tokyo String Quartet to play

By MARK L. CURELOP
Collegian Staff

The UMass Fine Arts Center will present the Tokyo String Quartet in a concert of works by Haydn, Beethoven and Brahms on Wednesday, March 18, at 8p.m.

The Quartet was founded in 1970 by Raphael Hillyer and Robert Mann of the Juilliard Quartet.

Hillyer worked with Koichiro Harada, violin; Kazuhide Isomura, viola; Sadoa Harada, cello; and Yoshiko Nakura (replaced by Kikuei Ikeda, violin in a U.S. State Department sponsored workshop.

In 1971 the Quartet won first prize in California's Coleman String Quartet Competition and has since collected six major awards to date.

Tickets are available at the Fine Arts Center Box Office for $8, $7 and $6 for the general public, and $4, $3.50 and $3 for UMass students.

Peace Center benefit scheduled

By SCOTT MORITZ
Collegian Correspondent

Bright Morning Star, performers of traditional and contemporary folk music with a topical theme, will play a benefit concert for the Traprock Peace Center at 7:30 Wednesday evening at Bowker Auditorium.

The concert is being sponsored by disarmament groups from the Five Colleges, Students Against the Draft, Western Massachusetts Latin American Solidarity Committee, and the United Christian Foundation. The proceeds from the concert will go to the Traprock Peace Center. The center was responsible for the successful Western Massachusetts referendum number seven, which called for a freeze on nuclear weapons. Traprock is now turning its efforts to a state wide lobbying campaign on two resolutions in the state Senate.

Bright Morning Star has performed with musicians such as Pete Seeger, Holly Near and Linda Ronstadt, and has played numerous anti-nuclear events. The Wednesday night concert kicks off their eastern seaboard tour with a scheduled stoped at the March 28 Three Mile Island labor rally at Harrisburg.

Their music incorporates lively foot stomping with a political message. Pete Seeger said of the band, "This group is doing what Woody Guthrie and I tried to do 40 years ago."

Tickets are available at the World Eye Bookstore in Greenfield, Food for Thought Books in Amherst, and Good Things Collective and Beyond Words Books in Northampton. They cost $3.50 before the concert, $4.50 at the door, $2.50 for senior citizens, with children under 12 admitted for free.

Also planned is a free concert by Bright Morning Star on the Amherst Common as part of the El Salvador march and rally Wednesday at 2:00 p.m.

The tennis crisis: the players' point of view

By KEVIN CULLEN and
STEPHEN FREKER
Collegian Staff

With the possibility of all 32 tennis courts at the University of Massachusetts campus being closed indefinitely after the spring, lost in the shuffle has been the fates of the three dozen varsity players who stand to have their intercollegiate careers cut short because their school has not funded repairs.

Barbara Mills, a junior on the women's team, saw the closing of the courts between the North Physical Education building (NOPE) and the Sylvan residential area, where her team used to play and practice, as necessary, considering the unsafe condition they are in. She still wonders aloud why it has to happen.

"I think it's terrible that a university this size doesn't have separate facilities for the men's and women's varsity programs," Mills said. "So many people play tennis up here—professors, faculty and students— and a lot of people are going to be without a place to play. Closing down the tennis courts is going to hurt a lot more people than just the tennis teams."

With the closing of the NOPE courts, the women's team is now forced to share the upper Boyden court , located next to Tobin Hall, with the men's squad, and overcrowding is worse than ever.

"I have no idea where they are going to find room for everyone who wants to play tennis at UMass," says second year captain of the women's team, Joanne Vennochi. "Good luck to the people who want to play for exercise."

Vennochi, who described the NOPE courts as looking like an earthquake hit them, played all four of her undergraduate years for UMass and will not miss the NOPE courts.

"I don't know how many times I slipped because of the lousy surfaces and the mess up there," Vennochi said. "It's gotten to a point where we have a sort of homecourt advantage because we know where the ball will bounce when it hits one of the cracks or the edge of one of the potholes in the courts."

Neil Westerman, a junior on the men's team, sees a bigger problem if UMass closes its courts.

"Let's face it, Westerman said. "The town (of Amherst) is going to get flooded. There are only two town courts. Up until now, they've been pretty good about not checking ID's and stuff like that. But when all those UMass students start showing up to use the courts because they have none of their own, well, there's going to be a problem."

Westerman finds it a hard fact to swallow that funds cannot be found to repair the courts. A Physical Plant estimate last summer placed the cost of needed repair work at $51,000, and John Volpe, UMass assistant to the dean for facilities, said there has probably been a 10 percent increase to that estimate over the winter.

"I think it should be taken into consideration that the teams fund themselves," Westerman said. "We pay for our own equipment and we have to pay for our own indoor time, which averages about $10 an hour. We're footing the bill, and they (UMass) won't give us courts to play on.

While Westerman said he goes along with men's coach Steve Williams' appraisal of the courts as being in "lethal" condition for players competing at high speeds, teammate Neal Mackertich offers a different viewpoint.

"I agree with Coach Williams and what he's trying to do," Mackertich said. "But, I've played tennis every day since I was 11 years old and to stop playing because the facilities are run down strikes me as unfair."

Mackertich, who last year finished second in the Eastern Eight championships, as did UMass as a team, said one of the persons who was hurt on the courts was injured because he failed to warm up properly, not because of the courts' conditions. Mackertich had scholarship offers from smaller schools in Arizona and Pennsylvania but came to UMass instead for its chemical engineering program, and to play tennis. The prospects of not being able to play do not sit well with the sophomore.

"If they have the funds, the courts should be fixed," Mackertich said. "If they don't have the funds, the courts should be left the way they are and we should be allowed to play."

When other teams come here to play UMass, reactions range from disgust to disbelief.

"Other teams will come here and see where they have to play and they think we're kidding, because the (UMass) courts are in such poor shape compared to the ones they have," Vennochi said. "We look forward to away matches because everyone else's facilities are in such better condition."

The women's team has plans to set up a table in the Campus Center to seek signatures for a petition calling for the saving of the tennis program and the courts. The men's team has voiced similar plans.

"There doesn't seem to be much we can do but make some noise to the school's administration," Vennochi said. "I think a lot of the students and faculty here will be interested since so many people at UMass make use of the facilities. The people in charge will be hearing from us, though. You can count on that."

The extent of the impact these actions will have is hard to say. Funds for the repairs on the courts would now have to come from the Provost level, or out of a general maintenance fund, which is depleted already and stands to gain nothing in the face of state funding cutbacks.

"I just hope something will be done," Barbara Mills said. "I want to play next year."

No surprises in IM playoffs

By STEPHEN FREKER
Collegian Staff

So far in the men's division of the intramural basketball playoffs no action has come close to resembling this weekend's upset-filled excitement in the NCAA's post-season hoopfest. Unlike the heartstopping buzzer-beaters on NBC, the games in the UMass series have been fairly uneventful in that the teams that were supposed to win, have won.

The co-favorites in this season's playoffs, defending champions GQ II and the Bad News Bears, each have played convincing basketball to stay at the top of the heap. Neither team has totally dominated or completely blown out an opponent in the opening playoff rounds (two), but each has had stretches of outstanding two-way hoop that clearly mark these two teams as the class of the field.

Should each squad get by its respective opponent in tonight's quarterfinal round (GQ II plays Kennedy, Bad News Bears meet the Vapors, both at 5:45 at Boyden Gym), then the two would do battle in an anti-climactic semifinal matchup tomorrow night.

In other men's quarterfinal action, Horsefeathers will duel Los Coquistadores in what should be an evenly matched game as both teams have few legitimate big men to grab boards. The Gunners will try to shoot down Pink Steel in the other quarterfinal contest. All men's games are at 5:45 p.m. at Boyden.

The co-rec division will begin semifinal round play tonight at 6:45. Thursday night, Kwik defeated PTA, 68-41 and Parkside feasted on the Pigeons, 57-25. These two winners will meet in a semifinal game. Crowdpleasers, who edged Nantucket, 38-31, in the quarterfinals, will play Awesome in the other semifinal matchup.

In the women's division playoffs, the Whimps, who were the intramural football champions last fall, will attempt to extend their dynasty to basketball when they meet the Dukes tonight at 5:45 to decide a spot in Tuesday night's semifinals.

The Buckos, the Combinations and Low Budget all received second round bye and will play in the semifinals also.

The Grad-Faculty-Staff divisional playoffs will hold their quarterfinal round tonight. Check with the intramurals office for starting times.

In Thursday night's second round action, the Wobblies knocked off Allbeere, 42-32. Energy E.C. jolted Excercise Science, 31-28. Ubiquity swamped Zoohoop Bi, 64-31. The Fellow Travelers showed no fear in belting Absolute Terror 42-35. LAIP outbattled the Gladiators 46-20.

Education, the defending Grad-Facchampions, will face Unnatural Acts and the Macaques will meet Ubiquity in tonight's quarterfinals.

The intramural hockey program's semifinal round will played tonight at the Greenfield Rink.

Breen's Bruins (10-0), and the Motherpuckers (9-0-1), received first round byes on the basis of their regular season records. The Bruins will take on one of the survivors from last night's action at 9 p.m. and the Motherpuckers will meet the other at 10:10 p.m.

The men's volleyball team will travel to Springfield College on Wednesday to face the Chiefs.

What do you think? If there is an aspect of UMass sports or any related sports issue that you would like to speak about, send your comments and opinions to a forum for your ideas, "The Minuteman Speaks." Send your letters to "The Minuteman Speaks," Collegian Office, c/0 Stephen Freker, or, just drop it oft at the Collegian sports desk. Letters will be printed on a weekly basis and should include a name and address for verification purposes.

All reporters interested in a spring beat must attend a sports staff meeeting tomorrow at 7 p.m. at the sports desk.

Eagles advance to quarterfinals

Boston College stayed alive in the National Collegiate Athletic Association's (NCAA) basketball tournament while the other New England entry into the tournament, Northeastern University, was knocked out by the University of Utah, which is ranked number ten nationally.

BC's Eagles, spurred by the backcourt play of Big East player of the year John Bagley and senior Dwan Chandler, handed the Wake Forest Deacons a 67-64 loss. BC will meet Alabama-Birmingham in the quarterfinals of the Mideast Regional next weekend in Bloomington, Ind. Utah beat Northeastern 94-69 and will play North Carolina in Salt Lake City.

American Indian Leader discusses political issues

by Phil Jennings
Nummo Staff

March 11 - Vernon Bellecourt, tribal leader of the White Earth Chippewa Tribe and Co-founder of the American Indian movement spoke before a full house at the Student Union Ballroom Wednesday night. Brought to us by the American Indian Student Association, Bellecourt spoke of the ongoing struggles of the oppressed people of the world.

"The United States of America has continually violated the independent native people of this continent by executive action, legislative fiat and judicial decision. By its actions the United States has denied all native people their international rights, treaty lands and the basic human rights of freedom and sovereignty," said Bellecourt.

Nummo attended a news conference with Mr. Bellecourt .

Q) Recently there has been a lot in the news about Indians trying to get the courts to give monetary compensation for land that was taken. Where does that effort stand•
A) Actually the struggle in the courts has been primarily for the restoration of lands, which is the correct thing to happen . But the federal government has consistently taken a position where there is an illegal taking. They will make monetary compensation, but they won't restore the land.

This is the kind of struggle American Indians are currently involved in fighting a racist system that has stolen their land. Bellecourt stated, "We're always forced to go into the white mans courts before an all white jury. It's foolish and naive for us to expect that the court system is ever going to give us justice and it's equally as foolish for blacks in South Africa to go before a South African Supreme court and get justice. It's just not going to happen."

Q) Can you talk about the situation at Pinerdge Reservation• A report released earlier last year told of the water supply being contaminated with Radio Activity•
A) There have been a lot of Indian miners who have died, in contact with radiation, from cancer over the years, through some of the first Uranium mining through the first development of the atomic bomb in this country. A lot of people think the Japanese of Hiroshima were the first victims, that's not true.

The Indian leader knows how the system works and how they avoid certain issues by bending or changing the rules.

"I can see Americans and the American government like 200 and some billion ostrages. They're primarily all white, and they all got their heads in the sand. Every once in a while, a few stick their heads up and look around. They see the inflation, high oil prices and they see war coming down here and there, and they all stick their heads back in the sand so they don't have to look at reality," said Bellecourt.

Bellecourt was also asked about U.S. intervention in El Salvador. Bellecourt stated,"El Salvador is an Indigenous liberation struggle for self determination. They are struggling for the same things that the so called American patriots struggled for 200 years ago. They are freedom fighters not terrorists. Now by America's definition of terrorists, Ben Franklin and Thomas Jefferson, they were all terrorists."

The reminiscence of America's founding fathers brought us to the subject of todays' government. "When Reagan said he wants to restore the spirit of America, look at his cabinet. They're all white, they're all male and they're all corporate people. So he has restored the spirit of America in that sense Racism, Sexism, and Greed," said Bellecourt. (In the final minutes on question was to be asked.)

Q) I'd like to know what the general feeling is among American Indians today as far as the white man taking your land away and your people being victims of genocide and the total mistreatment• What are those feelings•
A) There's sort of a hope that we can separate our selves from all this insanity. Go back into our communities. Restore what land we can restore. Taking the responsibility of educating our own children. Take care of our health, and continue our struggle as freedom fighters.

False conviction arouses protest

Chol Soo Lee faces retrial

Over the past two years, the case of Chol Soo Lee, a 27-year old Korean immigrant falsely convicted of murder, has stirred national and international interest.

Support committees have been formed from coast to coast in the Korean and Asian communities. Over $85,000 has been raised in small donations from elderly workers; immigrants, students and youth. In Korea, humanitarian and religious groups have rallied to his cause. Chol Soo Lee has become a symbol within the Korean and Asian communities of the fight against injustice and against the national oppression of Asian people in the U.S.

Support for Chol Soo Lee is needed now more than ever. This month, Chol Soo Lee will enter a courtroom in San Franscisco to face trial again for a 1973 Chinatown murder he did not commit. Even though the Third District Court of Appeals in Sacramento overturned his conviction this year, the San Franscisco District Attorney's office contested the decision and won a new trial.

While unjustly imprisoned for the Chinatown killing, Chol Soo Lee was attacked by Morrison Needham, a knife-wielding neo-Nazi prisoner, in 1977. In the ensuing scruffle, Lee killed Needham in self-defense. Two years later, Lee was unjustly convicted of murder for the second time. This time, he was sentenced to death. This conviction in now being appealed.

Chol Soo Lee remains on death row at San Quentin prison. Behind the mass of legal proceedings is the stark reality that Chol Soo Lee has been incarcerated eight years for the crime he did not commit. Lee's case is an example of blatant national oppression. Chol Soo Lee's arrest, trial, first and second convictions and death sentence were all shaped and fueled by the press and the state during the late 1960's and 1970's, and which is on the rise again today. This can be seen by reconstructing the events which led to this police frame-up.

Why the police framed Chol Soo Lee

In the summer of 1973, there had already been 13 unsolved murders in Chinatown, many relatd to gang warfare. Chinatown's image as an "exotic ghetto" for hordes of tourists was being shattered not only by gang violence but by social unrest, as the youth, elderly and workers began to organize and protest the poor living and working conditions. Chinatown was ready to explode.

Faced with the loss of tourist revenues, the city ordered acrackdown on Asian youth, Street sweeps, arbitrary arrests and beatings were common. Any organized protest from the youth themselves was labeled "gang activity" and subject to harassment.

In the summer of 1972, a group of Chinese youth demanded a meeting with then mayor Alioto to protest police brutality and show proof of police collusion and payoffs with big gambling and business interests in Chinatown. The same night, before the meeting could be held, every single member of the group was arrested by the police.

In July 1973, California's then-Attorney General Evelle Younger released a report which declared that Chinese youth gangs were the most dangerous organized crime force in the state. The cover of the report showed a sinister picture of a Chinese tong gunman form the late 1800's. Massive outrage from the Asian communities greeted the Young report, but the damage had already been done. Local police, courts and the crimminal justice system used the report to legitimize their racist practices against Asians.

While there was a problem with gang warfare, the state did not attack the real crimminals, the big Chinatown gangsters who trafficked in drugs, gambling and prostitution, and used the youth for their own purposes. Instead the state launched a wholesale assault againt Asian youth. The monopoly capitalists, who created and maintained the oppressive conditions, economic exploitation and overall restriction of the Chinese people, were faithfully served by the police and courts.

Free Chol Soo Lee

Since Chol Soo Lee was a Korean youth and immigrant, the police thought his plight would be ignored or quickly forgotten. But the opposite happened.

At each crucial court hearings, there have been mass rallies, marches and press conferences which have drawn elderly Koreans, workers, professionals, Asian-Pacific students and others. These expressions of mass support as well as house meetings , fund raising social events, petition drives and outreach to community groups, all contribute to buildingmass pressure against the courts and prison system.

Racist Violence i.e., Political Terror

CHAKA ZULU NUMMO STAFF

Part one of this article (vol:9 iss.19, 2 March 81) concluded that the so-called inability and incompetence of the Law enforcement system to stem the tide of national racist violence is questionable.

§Is this purported incompetence and inability of the law enforcement agencies to protect the lives and property of Black people due to the open, aggressive and widespread nature of Klan and Nazi recruitment drives at local and state police headquarters, at national guard and army bases A New York Times story in the 18 Nov. 80 ed. which reported on the Greensborough decision provides some insight on the question;

> ..."at various points in testimony and jury arguments the attorney's cited the involvement of two men acting on behalf of the Government...Edward Dawson, a former bureau informant, was identified by local pres accounts and later by police officials and witnesses as a local police contact who helped organize the Nov.3 Klan-Nazi disruption, recruiting Klan participants, including a number of the defendants, and riding in the lead vehicle as it drove into the crowd of milling demonstrators..." the story continues "Bernard Bukovitch, an agent of the Bureau of Alcohol Tobacco and Firearms, was similarly identified as an infiltrator of the Winston-Salem chapter of Nazi's. Mr. Bukovitch, firearms expert was accused by defense attorney's of inciting violent activities and advising participants to bring guns and other weapons with them..."

ROLE OF THE POLICE

The police themselves have been active in the killing and brutalization of Black peole: It is extremely important to analyze the police. Whatever they do will be done "in the line of duty!" They have their badges and uniforms as a rationale to commit the worst atrocities imaginable!

The Black community is like a colony. It is a world cut in two, between the oppressed, Black (more often unemployed worker, his her family friends, and the capitalist. Ideologically the dividing line is racism. Physically it is manned and enforced by all those racists institutions and thugs, especially the supreme representative of capitalist racist authority in the community colony. The police along with their 38's,45's,M16's,shotguns, helmets, cruisers, walkie-talkies and jails are the first to remind Brother Joe and Sister Sue that things are fine as they are, that evenwhen they are out of work, the apartment is more often cold than warm and the kids cannot have a Christmas or Kwanza, what is most important is that they should remain rational! While the police assure them that the economy is stabilizing and Police Brutality is under investigation!

Police cases of murder and misconduct are so common that the not guilty verdict applied to the overwhelmng majority of these cases by racist judges and juries are becoming routine. Also disciplinary measures taken against suspect police are often devoid of any sting, because they are subsidized by accounts set up for just such a purpose, not to mention the aggressive defenses constructed by the best attornies money can buy, often financed by local police unions.

In an uncomfortably large amount of cases judges are openly partisan in favor of the police! D.A.'s are afraid to aggressivley prosecute police because they do not want to jeopardize the relations with local police departments and reduce their chances of securing full cooperation with ponce in other criminal investigations.

In their publication The Iron Fist and Velvet Glove (1975 Berkley Ca.) the Center for Research on Criminal Justice gives an interesting analysis of why the police are given free reign to shoot, murder and terrorize in Black communities;

> Since the middle of the 1960's there has been tremendous attention given to developing the American police into a more effective instrument for the protection of U.S. corporate order...The main source of this sudden concern with the police lay in the increasing contradictions of the capitalist system itself.

The internal contradictions of the capitalist system that are forcing it to shake rattle and [illegible] on the heads of Black people as [illegible] as the last election. These [illegible] economic and histor[illegible] realities and national and international [illegible] the entire western world is [illegible] considerations of [illegible] and be exposed to the A[illegible] of Numbers.

COMMENTARY

LEE AND ACOSTA

Though they did not succeed in their goal of being elected to the Presidency of SGA, we would like to extend our congratulations to both Ed Lee and Nelson Acosta on their excellent campaign. Considering there is only a population of 3-4 percent of third world students on this campus, election results were nothing less than amazing. They captured close to 22 percent of the vote. (18 percent whites)

Retrospectfully observing, it showed what the united organizing by third world students could accomplish.

We would also like to thank the white progressive minded people who supported Lee and Acosta.

It is the hope that this would be an encouragement, or other third world candidates of aptitute to run for the office. It is only through direct unity and participation can any issue of concern may be addressed.

ATLANTA GREEN

§This past week I have seen an increase of the wearing of the green ribbon on campus. When I ask some of these people why they are wearing the ribbon I get varied responses. Some will say that it is "for the children of Atlanta", some say "in remberance of the children of Atlanta", or "it is my way of expressing my distast for the rise of racism". Others would ask me where my green ribbon was and I would open up my coat, and low and behold, I had one too.

§The idea for the green ribbon is that of a sixty-seven year-old grandmother, Georgia Dean, who wanted to "try and do something in a littl e , tiny, small way" for the children of Atlanta. This was her way of putting pressure on the investigators of the Atlanta children murders.

§The idea fo the green ribbon is the direct result of America's decision to wear yellow ribbons in honor of her hostages coming home. As Ms. Dean would put it "the hostages could come home, but not those kids." The color green is used to represent the fertility and youth of these children who were cut down before the prime of their lives. The upside down V shape is to represent a upside down victory sign which would be righted when the murderer is caught and peace is brought back to Atlanta. However, even this 'small' token of solidarity has become offensive to some Americans. For example, the Southeastern Pennsylvania transportation Authority of Philadelphia threatened to fire or otherwise discipline any driver caught wearing a green ribbon while operating a bus or trolly, because a green ribbon violated the Authority's uniform code.

§Still, the green ribbon has become a visable expression of solidarity for anyone who cares about the deaths of the children of Atlanta. In this end, the symbol may be a powerful act for it may be the begining stages of a national concienceness for the need to unify against any and all sick murders committed in this country. However, it must be realized that the wearing of the green ribbons is only a superficial act that only takes the effort of pinning a ribbon upon our chests.

§For those who do put on the ribbon it must be remembered that solidarity, as a matter of survival, must go deeper than just a ribbon. What is happening in Atlanta could happen in any city of America. The wearing of green ribbons, and the sending of donations to Atlanta are very honerable acts in deed, but we all must realize that this is not enough.

§Again, what is happening in Atlanta could happen in any city of America. Thus, a stronger sign of unity and solidarity would be to begin to organize our own communities, as they are doing in Atlanta,

The times dictate that we must learn to defend and educate our children, until they are old enough to defend and educate theirselves. All children deserved to be protected so they may live, to change this world to a better place.

Blacks in America: A Prospectus for the 80's

Donna Davis NUMMO STAFF

A sinister force has crept into our midst and boldly made its presence known. The malignant force that has interrupted our daily routines is GENOCIDE. It has ripped the hearts out of Black men and shattered the futures of teenagers. The idea of total physical extinction may seem far fetched but not if you take a look at the American Indian. You will find that you cannot "take a look" because he is nowhere in sight. Yet at one time the Indian could be found anywhere in North America. Genocide destroyed an entire race of people and is gearing up for a repeat performance.

The murders of children in Atlanta is the most explosive issue that has come forth. The fact that thousands of dollars is being spent on the investigation and not one arrest has been made should make Black people suspicious. No one knows who is killing the children and it is not my ambition to propose a theory, however, Blacks must ask themselves: Are they really trying to find out who is killing innocent Black babies• There must be enough evidence to fill four file cabinets but why hasn't it pointed to one or more individuals•

Unchecked police brutality must also be carefully observed. Why have the police been able to kill so many Black youths and get away with it• As a matter of fact the head of the Policemen's Benevolent Association in New York has instructed all officers to "shoot first" and "shoot to kill"!! And that is exactly what they're doing. A Black man was shot outside of Florsheim's shoe store in January and no explanation was given for the murder. The cop who shot the man was not even questioned by the Eyewitness News Team and the case has since been forgotten.

The Ku Klux Klan has steped out of the shadows and reorganized the Greensboro incident proved that they're not just getting together for a family picnic. They are armed and extremely dangerous. They are also training thirteen and fourteen year old children to operate military weapons and no one has objected to it. The Klan is preparing itself for a race war.

If Black men, teenagers and children can be killed so easily and without raising an uproar, what can happen next• Well it seems that it has already happened. A right winger from California was elected to the highest office in the land. This man is totally unresponsive to the needs of poor people, of which Black people make up a large part. He claims that he is reducing the budget but he is in fact reducing the chances for survival. Food Stamps, the CETA Programs and college financial aid have been threatened by Mr. Ronald Reagan. If his plans are supported by Congress, the rich will become ten times richer and the poor will have to feed on themselves in order to survive.

The poor, particularly the Blacks in urban ghettoes will ultimately succeed in furthering the ruination that has already begun. It is a known fact, that poor Blacks commit crimes against other poor Blacks. And as money becomes scarcer these crimes will increase. However, the urban poor won't be the only ones catching hell. Middle classed Blacks who are moving into predominantly white communities will find that the neighbors aren't that friendly. They will also discover that they have to face the same pressures that their poor brothers and sisters face.

AMERICA'S PENAL SYSTEM

A potential tinder box is in evidence in America's penal system. Legislators are overcrowding prisons as a result of efforts to deal with crime, and experts say these prisons are in danger of erupting at any moment. Members of minority groups have been imprisoned at a higher rate than others; currently blacks are being placed in state prisons at a rate of nine times greater than whites, and hispanics, about two times greater. A study of the Philadelphia justice system published by Prof. Franklin E. Zimring of the University of Chicago Law School in 1976 found that among homicides of apparently equal gravity, those that caught the public eye, were committed by blacks against whites and drew substantially heavier sentences. The poor and minorities suffered from the judges dependence on social status factors such as income education and residential quality which often [illegible] unfair breaks for [illegible] defendants.

[illegible] Constitution [illegible] to the [illegible] and racism even in the courtroom where "due process" is said to take place.

In opposiiton to the obvious lack of due process the New Mexico state prison at Santa Fe encountered one of the worst riots in history in which 33 were killed, including guards and fellow prisoners. There are strong indications that horrors could now erupt at any of several major prisons in the U.S. because of severe overcrowding and the disturbing ratio between minority and white prisoners.

Because of the marked rise in the Federal prison population in the 70's (from 196,000 to more than 314,000 including the 200 percent increase of women), conditions are ripe for another Santa Fe. One of the major problems is that men who previously had single cells were now paired with other prisoners. Many prisoners have the attitude [illegible] gonna take space to live in or I'm [illegible] take place to die in." (NY TIMES [illegible] By March[illegible]

[illegible] system of law and order was developed the goal was to structure justice to rehabilitate the individual rather, than to punish his crime. A decade ago this system was prevalent in America, while today less than a dozen states retain it. (NY TIMES Sunday, March 8) The ideal was for sentences to be equal, fair and certain. History has shown us that this is definitely not the case. The problem came when the legistature took control, it became political. It's the consensus that if the legislature could be controlled, the prison could be controlled. This seems to be one of the sure ways to rectify the unequal and unfair dilemma which is our "justice system." The shame of it all is the fact that there isn't a big enough system to check the law except possibly the Executive Branch of Government. Until a trustworthy system of checks and balances is developed and impisemented there will be some form of Santa Fe's unfair sentencing and racism in the law for minorities.

U.S. foreign policy in Latin America
History of Aggression

The history of United States foreign policy is the history of aggression and brutality. Below is the bloody record of U.S. imperialism in Latin America.

Today the U.S. is arming the Salvadoran military junta in its war against the people of El Salvador.

On the eve of Ronald Reagan's inauguration, the United States government decided to resume aid to the dictatorship, authorizing the shipment of $5 million in arms, ammunition and helicopters.

Furious protests took place throughout this country following the murder of six members of the Revolutionary Democratic Front (FDR) and four American women in El Salvador. The FDR is the broad-based organization uniting almost every political force in El Salvador in opposition to the military junta.

The people in El Salvador are fighting a bitter war to end the misery and poverty wrought by U.S. imperialism, and the United States-supported dictatorship.

The junta has murdered 12,000 people in the last year alone.

Will El Salvador become a Vietnam in Central America? The people of the United States have a crucial role to play in preventing U.S. aggression in El Salvador, and to demand self-determination for the Salvadoran people.

Argentina
1962: The United States organized a coup to overthrow the constitutionally elected President Frondizi.
1966: The U.S. was involved in the military overthrow of President Arturo Illia.

Bolivia
1967 : About 100 U.S. advisers were part of the military force which murdered Che Guevara and fought against the guerrillas he led.
1971: The CIA organized a coup against the government of Juan Jose Torres.

Brazil
1964: U.S. intelligence services participated in the overthrow of the constitutionally elected President Joao Goulart. Brazil has been under military rule since.

Chile
1973: The United States organized the bloody overthrow of the Allende regime, including his murder, and installed the brutal Pinochet dictatorship. The CIA employed its infamus method of economic destabilization in preparing for the coup.

Colombia
1949: The U.S. was directly involved in the bloody civil war which cost tens of thousands of lives. In that year Washington created the Inter-American Defense Board to check the "expansionist activities of international communism and the threat of internal subversion."
1962: The United States provided the repressive Colombian government military assistance against the popular movement.

Costa Rica
1905: The U.S. occupied the country, during which time the railroads were handed over to a subsidiary of United Fruit.
1917: Intervention to secure petroleum concessions.

Cuba
1898: Cuba was at the point of winning its struggle for independence from Spain. In a move to grab the island for its own control, the U.S. provoked a war with Spain. The result was an occupation force of 18,000 marines which stayed in Cuba until 1902 to establish a government to Washington's liking.
U.S. troops withdrew only after the Cubans were forced to add the Platt Amendment to their constitution, giving the U.S. the right to intervene in Cuba's affairs. The U.S. also established the Guantanamo American naval base, which they hold to this day against the will of the Cuban people.

Another result of the Spanish-American war was the U.S. annexation of Puerto Rico, also a colony of Spain at that time.
1906: The U.S. occupied Cuba to put down a popular uprising against the U.S.-imposed president. This occupation lasted until 1909.
1916: An invasion was executed to break the strikes developing in the American-owned sugar mills.
1933: The U.S. intervened to overthrow the government of Grau San Martin.
1961: Cuba was invaded by an army of mercenaries organized by the CIA in an attempt to crush the triumphant revolution of 1959. The Cubans defeated the counterrevolutionaries at the Bay of Pigs.

1904: U.S. troops were landed to protect the interests of the U.S. Minister to Panama.
1912: U.S. troops were landed to protect U.S. interests during the civil war.
1916: U.S. troops occupied the country until 1924. Their reason was to force payment of credit.
During that occupation they estab lished the Domincan Republic." Up until then the country was known as Santo Domingo. They put in power the military dictatorship of Rafael Trujillo, the head of the U.S.-created National Guard.
1965: About 40,000 marines invaded the country to put down yet another popular rebellion against foreign domination and oppression.

Ecuador
1963: A CIA-organized coup overthrew a constitutional government.

Guatemala
1920: U.S. forces landed to take possession of the National Electrical Company. In the same year there was an intervention to overthrow the Herrera regime and breeak up the Caribbean-American Union.
1931: The United States invaded to install a government loyal to United Fruit.
1954: The United States used the resolutions of the Caracas Pan-American conference, giving the U.S. the right to intervene and take appropriate measures against the "communist threat," to overthrow the democratic government of Jacobo Arbenz. CIA-financed groups aided by the U.S. Air Force were used.

Haiti
1915: The U.S. invaded Haiti to protect the economic interests of American investors. They took control of the customs and turned the country into a protectorate, staying there until 1934.
1918: American troops crushed the insurrection of Charlemagne Perlate.

THE ANTI-RACISM TEAM

by Roxana Bell NUMMO STAFF

We have witnessed a vast increase in the intensity and serious effects of racism within this society and within the U-Mass community as well.

Out of this concern the Anti-Racism Team of the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy (SCERA) has been developing an ongoing Anti-Racist program in order to promote widespread involvement of students, staff and faculty in activities aimed at combating racism.

In order to achieve this goal the Team has engaged in various projects; just to mention a few of these programs the Team is striving to implement a minores certificate program in racism studies, a 5 College Anti-Racist Education project which will eventually develop into a 5 College Department of Racism Studies, and a campus wide endeaver of Human Awarness in all residence halls. One of the most exciting projects is one that attempts to initiate the G-Core which would be compulsory credits in racial studies.

The Anti-Racism Team is extremely concerned with the intensity of the situation in Atlanta. Last Wednesday the Team set up a table in the Campus Concourse in which over 600 green ribbons were destributed. "We hope that when people wear their green ribbons for the children in Atlanta, they stop to think about what they can do to combat racism in the U-Mass community and the nation as a whole", said Ms. Marea Wexler Coordinator of the Anti-Racism Team. The Team will continue to have the table in the Concourse all day Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday of this week.

The green ribbon campaing was initiated by a concerned 67 year old woman in Philadelphia. She felt the need to create awarness of the murders in Atlanta. She believes that if the whole nation can wear yellow ribbons for the hostages, then why can't we wear green ribbons, the symbol of life, for the children. After all the hostages came home, but not the children.

This video was made in December 1980 by Glenn Silber, who also directed The War at Home, a film about the anti-war movement in the 1960s. The video was funded by The World Council of Churches and includes an interview with Sister Ita Ford, one of the Maryknoll Sisters murded in El Salvador by government security forces. The video is being aired all over the country on public television. It is a very powerful documentary about the situation in El Salvador and the United States government's role in the extreme repression of the Salvadorean government. Without it, there is little chance that the court would, on their own, grant freedom for Chol Soo Lee.

The vast outpouring of suport shows that Chol Soo Lee's plight is deeply understood by thousands of people. At the heart of the movement is a quest for justice for one man, but also a concern for the oppressed status of Korean and other Asian people in the U.S. The discrimination and injustice that Chol Soo Lee faces are seen in other forms every day in the lives of most Asian people.

The supporters of Chol Soo Lee have tapped these sentiments expressed by people of all classes and sectors in the Korean and Asian communities and forged a broad united front. In the course of defending Chol Soo Lee, many people have been educated not only about the situation of immigrants and youth in the Asian communities, the role of the crimminal justice system in a capitalist society , and the demand for political power and equality for the Asian national minorities in the U.S. Thus, many people have been won over to seeing the strugle to free Chol Soo Lee as part of the struggle against national oppression and ultimately against the capitalist system.

The San Franscisco Committee to Free Chol Soo Lee is developing plans to mobilize a mass demonstrations and packthe courtroom on the opening day of the trial. The defense network is also planning a national day of protest.

The masses of workers and oppressed nationalities must not let Chol Soo Lee be railroaded again. Free Chol Soo Lee!

a dedication to drama

By JONATHAN HAMILTON

In her office one glances out the window which overlooks the campus pond; with a return look around the room one notices a neatly-stacked bookshelf chocked full of plays. It is the bookshelf that grabs the viewer's attention momentarily, focusing on the titles and the authors. Needless to say, these plays represent many years of teaching, directing and producing them for the thousands of students she has seen come and go at the University.

For the past 28 years, Professor Doris E. Abramson has been involved in virtually every aspect of the theater department at UMass. Joining the UMass faculty in 1953, she was a member of the English department which housed the Theater and Speech sections. In 1970 it was known as the Theater department and in 1973 it became an independent major, a year before the Fine Arts Center was completed.

Abramson, "a native of Amherst," as she describes herself, graduated from UMass, received her M.A. from Smith College and was awarded a doctorate degree from Columbia University. She described theater at UMass when she first arrived in the fifties:

"Theater was strictly an extra-curricular pursuit back then. A group called the Roister Doisters performed on campus with students participating in the productions."

Abramson got started in theater at UMass as an undergraduate portraying a secretary in First Lady, a play that Nancy Davis (now Mrs. Ronald Reagan) starred in just a few years before at Smith. Her interests, though, seemed to lie more in directing and teaching.

"I was intrigued with directing and teaching. I like to watch other people up on the stage interacting with one another. I enjoy the realistic American plays most."

Two plays she feels were the most enjoyable and successful under her direction were The Crucible by Arthur Miller and Awake and Sing by Clifford Odets.

Abramson was asked how a production is chosen and what involvement the theater department pursues:

"The department has a set of priorities it must follow before it chooses a production. First, it must consider the needs of the graduate students. Are there students who need work with lighting or costuming? After those needs are found out, then a play is usually chosen that has been taught in Theater 100. Are there both men and women roles available, etc.? Then we must consider the audiences. Will the popularity of the show draw the community to the show? The department is quite deliberate in choosing productions as we all sit down and discuss the important aspects of them."

Professor Abramson stands underneath a Vaudeville marquee in her office in the Fine Arts Center.

She remains busy as usual teaching three courses (Theater 100, Performance of Literature and American Women Playwrights) while researching for an upcoming book entitled, American Women Playwrights. She has previously authored a book entitled Negro Playwrights in The American Theater, and she continues to act as Drama Editor of the Massachusetts Review.

Professor Abramson talked of the continued interest in theater at the University and in the Valley.

"Open casting has been a factor in getting a high turnout from the community and the other colleges. There is great popularity in open auditions. In fact we've had to schedule auditions for five nights in a row the interest has been so high. We have more majors now then we did in the past. Perhaps it's because we're the only school in this area to have a graduate program. Also our team approach is more innovative. Directors and designers confer a great deal. It relates more to the curriculum."

Also, according to the department catalogue, the Visiting Professional Guest Artist Program adds additional incentive to a theater major for it affords a great opportunity to work with top-flight people who have made their profession in drama.

Professor Abramson concluded her thoughts with some advice to theater majors who are considering acting as a career.

"Get all the training you can. Actors are always getting additional training on the side. But leave yourself options. I have lawyers, teachers and ministers speak to me and say how glad they were for the training they received while acting in college."

A visit with Professor Abramson gives a wide-range of ideas and thoughts on drama. A walk into her office is a fascinating look at the large scope of theater both past and present.

Shadow Box

By JULIA SYKES

The Smith College Theater Department presented "The Shadow Box" by Michael Cristofer, last weekend. The subject of the play, death, is one of those universally uncomfortable issues which will make any audience shift nervously from buttock to buttock in the seat.

The play is basically naturalistic both in its treatment of the intellectual and emotional complexities arising from its subject, and in its action and setting. Although it does contain brief scenes which are technically outside the naturalist convention, the audience, on the whole, can easily relate to the situations devcloping before them.

There is no question that Cristofer is dealing with death in the abstract. Rather, he is evoking the struggle facing those whose imminent death means coming to terms with mortality and the moral and ethical implications confronting the friends and relatives who are inextricably involved in that struggle. As the title suggests, shadow boxing means fighting with yourself, and any attempt to challenge death is an ultimately futile and empty pursuit.

As the play unfolds, we are aware that the set, physically the interior of one cottage, is representative of three. This is to accommodate three domestic situations which, although essentially independent of one another, are continually echoing and playing-off one another. Each situation recounts the way in which people cope with the impending death of someone they love. Through the juxtaposition of three entirely different households, the audience is made aware of the fact that despite sex, class, or

Tate teaches through poetry

By SUSAN RING

James Tate is a poet teaching at the University of Massachusetts, Amherst. Before gracing the halls of Bartlett, Tate taught at the University of California at Berkely, Columbia University and Emerson College. Tate was embraced by the literary community in 1966 when he won the Yale Series of Younger Poets Award for his first book, The Lost Pilot. He won the National Institute for Arts and Letters Award for Poetry in 1974, and a Guggenheim Foundation fellowship in 1976.

Tate talked with me about his experience as an American poet. His thoughts and a novice's guide to his work follows.

This is the first in a series of profiles on area writers.

"If the country said 'no, let's not turn to Ronald Reagan, let's turn to poetry,' then perhaps I'd write for a wider audience," says poet James Tate.

This remark does not reflect literary snobbery but rather illustrates the exasperation of an artist whose craft is not revered and who nonetheless is questioned about the accessibility of his work. Tate's books aren't easy to find but are well worth the hunt. Wrong Songs, Hints to Pilgrims, Viper Jazz, Lucky Darryl (a novella), and his latest book Riven Doggeries, are available at the libraries on campus and at local book stores. Eight of his latest poems were published in The American Poetry Review January-February issue. The poems (and prose) are accessible to all who are willing to invest the time and imagination.

"I'm not an entertainer," emphasizes Tate. He takes a hard look at society, gives us the bad news and, through his work and very existence, a reason for hope. He always stimulates the heart and mind and yes, often entertains.

Tate's poems may, after a first reading, appear to have flown quickly off the top of his head and through his pen. His stream of consciousness rhythm lends a great deal to the enjoyment to be drawn from his work. Tate expends considerable time and energy to achieve freshness and spontaneity in his writing. The majority of his working hours are spent writing.

"Writing is the least of my (sources of) income and I resent that," says Tate. While acknowledging the fact that he was hired (in 1971) by UMass (he runs poetry workshops and teaches Contemporary Poetry), and is asked to give readings of his work because he is a poet, he would understandably favor having the option of being able to support himself solely through his writing.

In Yugoslavia they celebrate their poets — not in the U.S.," says Tate. The forecast for American arts in the '80's is bleak. If we have neglected our poets in the past, a turn around in this trend is unlikely to come about in a time of financial woe. The Arts are the first to feel the ax of Proposition 2½ and the hacking of the federal budget by the Reagan Administration.

Tate often reads his poetry to groups who may be in for a rough ride through this decade. His audiences have included groups of children, college students, Native Americans, elderly Chicanos, and prisoners. He is selective in the work he presents to each individual group. Yet his humanistic outlook on life and extensive travels here (in the U.S.) and abroad lend a universal quality to his writing.

Tate has, through his travels, developed an ear for language. While some of his poems are set in particular spots (Kansas City, Amherst, on the bus to Easthampton), Tate, born in Kansas City, Missouri, feels that his work reflects a "mingling of all the places I've been."

The first living poets that Tate read were the beats — Allen Ginzberg et. al. Although the spirit of his work is similar to that of the beat poets, Tate does not identify with the group. The writer he cites as having most impressed him is Lautréamont, a Uruguayan-born, 19th c. French poet.

Lautréamont [pseudonym of Isidore Lucien Ducasse] caused quite a stir in his time [b. 1846 d. 1870] with the prose poem "Les Chants de Maldoror." Raymond Giraud of Stanford University calls the work "Profoundly negative, it expresses revolt against both God and man, while lyrically exalting the brutal and irrational forces of nature..." He also notes that the surrealists regarded Lautréamont as a precursor of their movement and as one of the greatest French poets.

With Lucky Darryl, Tate and coauthor Bill Knott took a turn at exalting some of the brutal and irrational forces of nature. The novella is fast reading, off-the-wall, and offensive. Doesn't most good social commentary offend? The style is reminiscent of Vonnegut; every social institution is fair game for outrageous attack and the raunchy language is half the fun. The poet denies any association with Vonnegut's style and is correct in asserting that I draw analogies to prose writers because I'm more familiar with their work.

Why did Tate co-author the book?

"Bill Knott is a fellow poet and asked me if I were ready to write a novel...we decided to give it a shot together," says Tate. He does not rule out the possibility of publishing a novel of which he is the sole author. He offers no clues on a topic at this point. Tate's short stories have been published in a variety of periodicals.

The students whom Professor Tate instructs at UMass enroll in his classes with a clear sense of where they want to take their art. Tate's instruction is best utilized by the serious poet. Spectators of the art may look forward to the unleashing of their imaginations by his work. What better form of education than to be persuaded by poetry to think?

created from odd bits of refuse from minute to minute splits us down the middle.

Arts Extension Service's new books

By PAULA DUGGAN

The Arts Extension Service has recently published two new publications entitled: The 1981 Arts Directory and Fairs and Festivals in New England and the Northeast.

The 1981 Arts Directory is a listing of over 700 artists, including visual artists, crafts people, performers, and writers in the New England area. Barbara Schaffer Bacon (editor) describes the Directory as "a means by which artists can advertise and market their skills — it serves to simplify the task of uniting artists and sponsor."

The Directory, now in its fourth year of publication, is also valuable to arts interested people, residential groups and organizations as a quick, easy, and effective means of locating a desired artist or service.

Fairs and Festivals in New England and the Northeast provides necessary information for the artists or craftspersons who wishes to market themselves.

The Arts Extension Service is a community development program that supports continuing education in the arts by means of services, various programs, educational offerings, and free consultation to artists and student arts groups who are developing programs on campus.

The Arts Extension Service is also the sponsor of The New England Artist Festival and Showcase. The Festival represents New England's largest gathering of craftspersons, performing artists, artists and writers and includes such special features as 3 stages with continuous music, dance, theater, mime, and puppet performances, a gallery exhibiting New England arts and crafts, two demonstration areas where one can observe visual and performing artists at work, a poetry and fiction reading stage, a kite-flying event, and the Kid's Palace where children 5-12 can take part in arts activities.

The 1981 sixth Annual New England Artists Festival and Showcase will take place at the Three County Fairgrounds in Northampton on June 6th (11 a.m. to 7 p.m.) and June 7 (11 a.m. to 6 p.m).

The Arts Directory is available to the general public at a cost of $5 (free to non-profit organizations). Fairs and Festivals in New England and the Northeast is available at a cost of $2.50. Both can be obtained by calling or writing Arts Extension Service.

who are these guys anyways?

By ED LEVINE

"Twirleyz, that's what we play, every night and every day," goes the theme song of Martian Highway, one of the Pioneer Valley's most popular local bands.

Several times each week, whether at the Rusty Nail in Sunderland, Rahar's in Northampton or the Blue Wall here at UMass, Martian Highway can be heard playing their theme song, as well as several other original tunes, including "Mind Candy," "Crawl Like A Lizard," and "Shroom Kitty," to name a few.

And everywhere Martian Highway plays, scores of almost fanatical fans cheer the band on and "twirl" to their tunes, as they have done consistently since 1976.

In the fall of that year, Peter Mitchell was a UMass freshman living on the 22nd floor of Kennedy Tower in Southwest. A native of Springfield, Peter played a little guitar. Carl Mayfield was also a UMass freshman at the time. He lived in Sylvan, and he, too, played guitar.

"We started playing together on the 22nd floor of Kennedy," Carl recalled. "I used to go up and beg Peter to play guitar."

It was during one of those impromptu jam sessions that the name Martian Highway was derived.

"We were playing in Kennedy one night, jamming the blues with the echo turned up high," Peter said. "I was playing guitar and Carl started singing 'I was walking down the Martian Highway,' and that's how we got our name."

After a few more months of jam sessions, convinced that they would someday form a band of their own, the two left UMass, with Peter returning to Springfield and Carl moving to Northampton. A year later, in the summer of 1977, they got together again, moved into an apartment in Northampton, and began to play together once more.

"We only jammed; we had no songs," Carl said. "We played what we felt like."

By the end of the year, the two got more serious about their music and began to jam with a bass player and drummer. But, since they lived in a small apartment, it was often difficult to practice. They began to look around for other places to play, and eventually turned to the most obvious place — UMass.

"We started playing at UMass parties," Carl recalled. "We had friends in Field who liked our music."

Peter said these same friends helped the band get their first gig, at Field's 1978 Halloween party.

Shortly before that gig, "the Martians," as their friends refer to them, moved into a house in Leverett, where they still live. Once there, Peter said, they were free to practice their music as long and as loud as they wanted.

Around the same time, an advertisement in a local newspaper brought Joe Eno, their first full-time drummer into the band.

"It was a wierd cosmic connection," Peter recalled. "I was in a band once that only practiced twice and then broke up. Joe was in that band."

Then, a few months later, Perry Amsalem (sometimes known as Perry "Ace"), joined as the first full-time bassist. Together, the four rehearsed almost daily and began to play at many area parties, in bars and in clubs. Aided by popular local cartoonist Steve Lafler, the band became known for their style of music. And their posters advertising their gigs, drawn by Carl, became nearly as popular as their music.

Last summer, when Joe left the band to pursue other ventures, Bob Lynch, Martian Highway's original bassist in 1977 and 1978, returned to stay. Shortly after that, Perry left, and Dave Kida, formerly of Paradise Rhythm Shoes, joined Martian Highway. Meanwhile, a fifth member, percussionist Rich Guarnieri, signed up and, along with roadie/soundman Derek Cheek, formed what is the current Martian Highway.

Peter, now 23, said the band has about 20 original sounds and plays about 30 cover tunes, mostly by the Grateful Dead, Jefferson Airplane, Pink Floyd and, most recently, the Police.

During the course of a night, Peter said, the band plays an average of 10 to 15 original songs and a few covers. And, like their covers, much of the original material has a distinct, free-flowing, "spacey" [illegible].

"We play music of the spheres, man," Carl, now also 23, "Beethoven went deaf when he heard the music of the spheres. You can't listen to anything else after. People either just sit and listen, or they get up and move around. But it's not shake-around music."

Peter described Martian Highway's music as "west coast psychedelic," a mixture of the Dead, the Airplane and Quicksilver.

"Our music kind of fits the way we are, the way we live," Peter said. "We don't do things because they're popular, we do them because they fit our concept of the Highway."

COMING ATTRACTIONS

Bill Murray...New film

By STEPHEN MURPHY

Say it ain't so: Hollywood continues to saturate us with sequels galore. Sylvester Stallone is finishing up work on, get this, Rocky III. Maybe he'll get knocked out and put an end to this nonsense...On May 1 Paramount will be releasing Friday the 13th Part 2 supposedly picking up where its predecessor left off. The shlock-for-shock profit motive isn't dead yet it seems...As if this isn't bad enough John Ritter is now the rumored choice to take up where the late great Peter Sellers left off as Inspector Clouseau, should the Pink Panther series be continued. Can you imagine? That's almost as bad as having Sam Jones (Flash Gordon) star in another film.

What else is new?: Sam Jones has signed to star in Kid Punk, an action crime thriller about some sort of punkish hero. Now that is bad...George Hamilton stars in Zorro and the Gay Blade, a comedy about the swashbuckler's little known twin. It's scheduled for summer release...Also for the summer is Gas, a satirical look at the gas shortage starring Donald Sutherland. Somebody ought to tell Hollywood that such a topic is no longer funny.

Saturday night at the movies: Now this ought to be funny: Bill Murray stars in Mel Brook's latest comedy, Loose Shoes, to be released soon...John Belushi co-stars with Blair Brown (fresh from Altered States) in a light romantic comedy entitled Continental Divide. Belushi plays an urban columnist who climbs the Rockies to interview the bald eagle. Naturally, they fall in love, but not before the urbanized Belushi is introduced unceremoniously to the Great Outdoors.

Let's get serious: The big talk right now is Universal's The Border, starring Jack Nicholson and Valerie Perrine. It's being described as the role of Nicholson's career, even outdoing his part in One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest. The film was written by Deric (The Deer Hunter) Washburn and raises some controversial questions concerning our current imigration policy. It won't be out until October though...Also of dramatic interest is Threshold, in which Donald Sutherland protrays Dr. Thomas Vrain, a surgeon who performs and unprecedented operation to give a young girl the first artificial heart. The special effects people involved in the project made twelve latex hearts that beat with eerie realism and bleed when cut.

any other sociological category, we have one common denominator, one supreme equalizer—death. Hence the cottage becomes a symbol; it embodies the hopes, fears, and desires (many of them unfulfilled) of those who have moved there to die, and a euphemism for the institution which is keeping them there.

Alison Jones directed this performance with an expert sense of timing. There are many traps in the play which she managed to avoid. Not once was there a trace of sentimentality; alienation and isolation were the main forces at work here. Jones successfully merged the three simultaneous situations with great sensitivity to rhythm and pace. The climax of the play, where the actors all came together as individuals with the same message, was coordinated brilliantly and was a credit to both cast and director.

Tom McCabe, who played Brian, the bisexual intellectual, gave a most impressive performance. Calm and collected, his command of the language of the play showed a clear understanding of his role. Archer Martin, who played his inebriated ex-wife gave a reliable performance as the voluptuous blond, although at time lacked crescendo in her speech patterns. Cheryl Diane Stewart as an embittered and dissatisfied old woman was utterly convincing, as was Mary Feeney, her frustrated and angry daughter.

The actors emerged from, and disappeared into, the audience during the play, making us aware that we will all face the problems exposed in the play. We are all actors, all audiences, and death is ultimately directing our actions and reactions in life.

dancer Langland returns to Amherst

by LISA LANGONE

Paul Langland, one of the members of the controversial Meredith Monk dance company, The House, was born in Laramie, Wyoming, but did much of his growing up in Amherst, Massachusetts. He is a member of a creative family — his mother, Judith Langland, is an established artist in the Amherst area, and his father, Joseph Langland, is a poet and previously was an English professor at the Univ. of Mass.

Paul Langland graduated from the California College of Arts and Crafts, where he majored in painting and sculpture. In 1973 he traveled to New York, without much background in dance, and studied contact improvisation, alignment, and voice with Steve Paxton. Since then he has performed and collaborated with several choreographers including Ping Chong, Barbara Dilley, Simone Forti, and Mary Overlie, as well as doing concerts of his own work.

In a personal interview with Langland, a true sense of his perserverance, delightfully dynamic personality, and love for creativity was revealed.

He has been a member of The House for about five years, and when asked how he began with Monk he replied, "I wanted the challenge of finding a technique that wouldn't create pitfalls." He experienced one of her pieces in New York, "Education of the Girl Child", and was thrilled by her surrealistic, anti-sexist, and non-traditional approach to performing. "The beauty of the imagery and theatricality had a uniqueness about it," he said.

Langland took classes with Meredith Monk and later became involved with the company. She has been a huge influence on him in that he has been able to broaden his scope of the arts. Much of Monk's compositions incorporate voice work, and Langland said that singing has now become at least half of the work.

He further explains the Monk style as being "kinesthetic theatre," in which the clarity of the gestures seems to be highly emphasized. Langland added "the form or style is not as important as how it's presented," Even the simple flick of the wrist can have a dynamic impact in its clarity.

Meredith Monk is the complete director, and to create diversity she meshes together different theatrical art forms.

Asked what direction dance seems to be heading, Langland found it difficult to answer. "It is all a question of exposure," he said. "Because with live performance, "you don't get the same kind of exposure as with television and radio. Dance is still very traditional, academic, and formalistic in its approach, and the rewards of the field are nebulous."

Another influential figure in Langland' involvement with dance was Allan Wayne, who transformed dance into a body experiencing excercise. "It's similar to bioenergetics, and is based on the theory that if you experience your body, you'll be healthy." Langland currently teaches classes in Allan Wayne technique in his studio in New York city.

"It;s strictly body work and charged emotion," said Langland about his classes. He has also taught dance in Putney, Vermont where his approach to teaching was also informal.

Langland said that his work can often be "physically exhausting," and to relax, he attends a health club for an occassional whirlpool.

Asked if he is ever completely satisfied with his performances, Langland's answer came easily: "It's always a new challenge. The pieces are complex, and you have to work at figuring them out. Then accomplishing it is something else altogether. It's a lot of work." He added that the gratification comes from the company's changing and growing approach.

Paul Langland is sure to be successful in whatever direction the arts take him. His determination, appeal, and creativity virtually guarantee that.

the BUZZCOCKS interview

By STEEV WINNIMAN

The Buzzcocks played at the Rusty Nail in Sunderland last November, as part of a short east-coast tour. A few hours before the show, this interview was conducted with three-fourths of the band (bassist Paddy Garvey was somewhere else). The band members who did talk were lead vocalist and guitarist Peter Shelley, guitarist Steve Diggle, and drummer John Maher. They were all very nice.

Steve Diggle: The show tonight—it'll be mostly students, won't it?

other voice: I guess so. This area is mostly students.

SD: In America, it's the students who are open-minded. Leftists come from the upper class.

John Maher: They've got more money.

Pete Shelley: Students in England are the narrow-minded ones. It's the laborers who are leftists. It's because the students just go through the swim of going to college, and they tend to miss out on the hardships and a bit of pain.

ov: Do most people go to college in England?

SD: It's what you're supposed to do.

PS: Of course, they always make sure they breed enough workers. It's like a sifting system.

ov: Not too much politics come across in your music, does it?

PS: It's like, in a smaller perspective.

SD: "Chainstore" which I did recently was about a chainstore girl and the way she's been sort of channeled into doing that job.

ov: So you're dealing with the individual's conflicts, rather than society's.

PS: Yeah, because all politics is the individual. It's the state of the mind which determines it, right?

SD: Everyone complains about Margaret Thatcher. She did get a majority of the vote, though. Not that I know anyone who'll admit voting for her.

ov: Do you see a conservative trend happening?

PS: Yeah. Well, it sort of happened in England, and now it's happening here. Right now in England we've got all this "Let's get the country back on its feet." All the factories are laying off, like, thousands each week. Television makes a big deal about strikes and such, being the cause. Apparently a lot of housewives voted for her.

ov: It's upsetting, because the people are being fooled.

PS: "Do without, tighten your belts..." The people who are saying that aren't doing without. The people are getting this fear into them.

SD: Also, the conservative policies of defense, because of all this shit about Russia.

PS: People are obviously worried about defense, and they figure that with a conservative government, they'll at least be well defended.

ov: How about solo projects?

JM: I've just done this single here—"The Things" with another group.

ov: Is this any good? (referring to The Things' single)

PS: Yeah, I like it. It's the first time they were ever in a studio together. They play clubs around home.

JM: Around Manchester. A few gigs, that's all.

PS: On the plane over here, they came around with lemonade, and I started thinking about Jonestown. I thought, "They're going to try an emergency landing and they're giving us this to calm us down." Odd-tasting lemonade, it was.

ov: It would certainly calm you down. Do you like other art forms much, besides music?

PS: Well, all our friends, a lot of them, are artists.

ov: Your job is art.

PS: But it's still a job. Can't just lay back and think how artistic you are when you got a gig to do.

ov: But it's not just a job, is it?

PS: Oh no, of course not. It's still fun.

ov: Where did you get the name, "Buzzcocks?"

SD: It's not what you think.

ov: I'll bet.

PS: It was in a magazine, Time Out. It was two separate words, "If you come to London, have a good buzz, cocks." "Cocks" in England means like "buddies, mates."

SD: Just the filthy perverted American mind makes it...

ov: Well, "buzz" seems appropriate to the music.

PS: It was just adopted as a working title. If you tell anybody that you've got a band, they want to know what you're called, so one day I saw this and I said, "Let's be the Buzzcocks."

SD: And lots of people think they've figured out what it means. It's funny.

ov: Pete, I heard that you're releasing a live album recorded a few years ago, with Howard Devoto.

PS: There's a bootleg—early live stuff—but no legitimate album.

ov: What do you think about Howard these days?

PS: He's okay. Good mate. We've seen Magazine.

ov: He's certainly gone in a different direction.

PS: It was the best thing that he left, really.

SD: I've just done a solo LP, called Fifty Years of Comparative Wealth. Just went in the studio for three days and did it. That should be cut out in February. John and Paddy (Garvey) are on it.

ov: Will it be out in America?

SD: I hope so. I haven't really sought—you know, it's going ahead in England, we'll see what happens.

ov: Is is a Buzzcocks sort of sound, or what?

SD: Yeah, pretty much, with some experimental noise. But it's in a Buzzcocks vein.

ov: I like your love songs, Peter. Do they come from personal experience?

PS: Yeah, well, everything I write does. I've got an album set for release, which I did a long time ago. Before the Buzzcocks. Lots of electronic noise and such.

ov: Just under the name Pete Shelley? Won't people think it's the Buzzcocks?

PS: We'll see.

ov: There seems to be a trend toward this experimental-noise sound.

PS: Of course. It's a lot easier to do that. Whatever comes out, you just say, "That's what I meant to do." Or you can say you're utilizing random elements, getting away from tone and meter. It all depends on how well you can convince people, like a used-car salesman.

ov: If you put out a really good album, doesn't that increase the pressure for the next one to be good?

PS: No. People are always there who don't like what you're doing.

ov: So you ignore them?

PS: Well, you have to listen to everybody, but it's pointless to feel good or bad 'cause people say you're good or bad. Can't please everybody.

ov: Just have to please yourself.

PS: Right. The essential thing is that we do what we like. There's some things we don't like—we find out before anyone else does. I mean, it's only music. It's nothing too important.

ov: A lot of people take it very seriously, though. Make it their life.

PS: It's just like politicians make politics their life, and doctors make medicine their life. Everybody's got their own little hangups.

SD: But it is important, isn't it?

rockabilly: alive and well

By BOB ROBINSON

Rock 'n roll is here to stay, but what is rock 'n roll? Today the term has become so vague it could apply to anything from Billy Joel to Van Halen. Actually, for those people who really want to know, "rock 'n roll" was originally slang for having sex, but that's getting sensational so let's return to the original question.

The first significant event in the evolution of rock music was when African slaves were brought to the U.S. These slaves brought with them a rich African musical tradition, full of complex rhythmic structures incorporating melodic systems that were completely foreign to western tonal music.

When these Africans were exposed to western music, one of the results was Black spiritual music (This is interesting because African music has very religious roots). Blues, rhythm 'n blues, boogie-woogie and jazz were soon to follow.

While all this was going on, the tradition of country music was becoming firmly entrenched in America's culture. And what do you know? Country musicians began listening to Afro-American music (blues, rhythm 'n blues). When country musicians started playing bluesier riffs and incorporating the back-beat of R and B into their music, rockabilly was born. This was an important event, because rockabilly was to be a big influence on the rock 'n roll stuff which was to come out of the 1960's. The Beatles and The Rolling Stones are among the countless bands whose music reflects the rockabilly music genre.

At this point it's important to mention that the big recording artists of the fifties were only playing music which was already solidly in existence. The popular white artists were strongly influenced by the Black R and B of the age, but due to racist attitudes, a lot of important Black artists went largely unnoticed. Sam Phillips, president of Sun Records, once said (in reference to Elvis Presley) if he could find a young white singer who could sound and feel like a negro, he would make a billion dollars.

Speaking of Sun, Jerry Lee Lewis was part of an influencial group of musicians who put the Sun recording label on the map. Elvis Presley, Johnny Cash, Carl Perkins and Roy Orbison were just a few of the giants who recorded with Sun Records in the late fifties.

Mr. Lewis, who was one of the wilder figures of the fifties, captivated audiences with his country-rockabilly music and raunchy stage presence. His off-the-wall musical kinesthetics would surely drive a classical musician to a nervous breakdown. Jerry Lee has even been known to set pianos on fire during a performance. Mr. Lewis is still musically active, and although he's not as young as he used to be, he can still drive people wild with his energetic stage presence.

Jerry Lee was actually pretty lucky as far as his career goes. About 1957, Sun Records was desperate for a rock 'n roll star. Elvis Presley had just left the label to sign with RCA records and Carl Perkins had just had a serious accident. The people at Sun decided to put everything they had into promoting Jerry Lee Lewis. The effort paid off when Jerry Lee went on to sell six million copies of "Whole Lotta Shakin' Goin' On." "Great Balls of Fire" and "Little Queenie" also did well.

Jerry Lee Lewis at Stage West, Hartford, CT in January.

But let's get up to date. UMass is really fortunate to be playing host to Carl Perkins and NRBQ. This is one concert that can't be missed.

First there's Carl Perkins, who's been playing rockabilly music ever since the birth of rockabilly. Mr. Perkins (who participated in the early Sun sessions) is responsible for such classics as "Boppin the Blues", "All Moma's Children" and "Don't Step On My Blue Suede Shoes". The Beatles realized the greatness of Carl's music when they recorded "Honey Don't", "Matchbox", and "Everybody's Trying to Be My Baby" (all Perkins originals).

Mr. Perkins' fluid guitarwork and strong warm vocals will cure anybodies ills. His friendly manor and open audience rapport makes you feel like you've known him all your life.

Then there's NRBQ who've been playing hard since the late sixties. The neo-rockabilly madness of NRBQ is unique, unparalleled and undefinable. Although the band's material is very diverse, it's easy to see the rockabilly and R and B influence.

The music of NRBQ is a logical extention of their musical heritage. The band is new, innovative and faithful to their musical roots. Seeing Carl Perkins with NRBQ is like seeing two generations of rock 'n roll on the same stage.

chamber music at University

By BRIAN YANKEE

Music From Marlboro. To many people these three words represent the epitome of chamber music and music festivals. Once again, the Music from Marlboro series has lived up to this reputation. Their recent performance by Cecile Licad, piano; Joseph Swenson, violin; Sarah Clarke, viola; and Rocco Filippini, 'cello; was typical of the high quality music that is performed every year at the Marlboro Music Festival.

The concert opened with the Piano Quartet in D by Dvorak. The piece was played with precision and good taste, but seemed to be a bit stiff and not as relaxed as perhaps it should have been. As the concert progressed, this stiffness disappeared, especially in the second work, Debussy's Sonata for Cello and Piano, which was played by Rocco Filippini and Cecile Licad. Filippini produced a warm sound from his 'cello that was nicely augmented by Licad's smooth piano work.

The second half of the program consisted of Schumann's Piano Quartet in E-flat. Once again, the performance was precise but it also seemed to be more relaxed and emotional than the Dvorak. The slow third movement featured many beautiful solos from all members of the group making this piece the best of the performance.

Music From Marlboro: (clockwise) Cecile Licad, Sarah Clarke, Joseph Swenson, Rocco Filippini.

The Tokyo String Quartet will perform works by Haydn, Beethoven, and Brahms Wednesday at 8 p.m. in the Fine Arts Center. Tickets are still available at the FAC Box Office.

rock 'n' roll survivors rock on

Jorma Kaukonen
Barbecue King (RCA)

Ian McLagan
Bump In the Night (Mercury)

Jack Bruce and Friends
I've Always Wanted To Do This (EPIC)

By ROB HUFFMAN

Pay attention. Ian McLagan played in Small Faces with Steve Marriott who later played in Humble Pie with Peter Frampton who was later replaced by Clem Clempson who now plays with Jack Bruce and Friends. Jorma Kaukonen has, to the best of my knowledge, never played with any of these bands.

Kaukonen, though, has similarities with McLagan and Bruce that are worth noting. All three men are rock'n'roll survivors.

Let's look at the record. Hmmm, McLagan's played with Small Faces, Faces, The Rolling Stones, and the New Barbarians; Kaukonen fled the 'Airplane,' and led Hot Tuna; and Jack Bruce was a vital third of Cream and has also had a fruitful solo career.

In short, McLagan, Bruce, and Kaukonen have each contributed to crucial '60's rock groups; each has been on the edge of the spotlight though, luckily avoiding the self-indulgent super-star syndrome that has affected their peers Rod Stewart, Eric Clapton, and Grace Slick.

Budget committee behind schedule

By PAUL BASKEN
Collegian Staff

The Senate Budget Committee may be more than two months behind schedule in its business, but committee chairman Larry Kocot contends budgets for 1981-82 will be ready for Undergraduate Student Senate approval in April.

The committee distributed budget request forms to RSO groups last November, but the committee has not made budget recommendations for those groups yet.

The committee is further behind in its recommendation process than it was at this time last spring, when committee members did not submit recommendations until the last week of the semester.

Jon Klein, business manager of one RSO group, said the committee told him that his group would be budgeted by last December, but Klein said he has received no budget yet.

Kocot said although the committee has not met this semester, individual members have been assigned to research the groups independently. In past years, groups only met with the entire committee, Kocot said, "and it was a mess."

Individual members should "get a feel" of the purposes and needs of the different groups requesting allocations from the Student Activities Trust Fund before the groups meet with the 12-member committee at a series of hearings, Kocot explained.

The Student Government Association constitution has unclear guidelines for a method of determining need, Kocot said, and an individual committee member's input should allow the committee to recognize unnecessarily inflated budget requests.

Kocot also said the new procedure will allow the budget hearings, when recomendations are decided upon, to be completed quicker than in the past, compensating for the committee's late start.

Explaining the slow start, he said about four meetings scheduled for the first two weeks of the semester were cancelled because of the lack of a quorum. Kocot, who was elected as SGA co-president last week, denied a claim that his campaign interfered with the proceedings of the committee.

Elie Weisel speaks before capacity crowd in CCA

By MALCOLM CAMPBELL
Collegian Correspondent

"I don't understand anything of that period, and neither will you. I can never communicate what has to be communicated. All we can do is give you the tear of one child, or the silent gaze of a mother," said author-playwright Elie Weisel, a survivor of the German concentration campus of Auschwitz and Buchenwald.

Weisel addressed a standing-room-only audience in the Campus Center Auditorium last night about the Holocaust and its meaning for humanity.

"There is no such thing as a coincidence. Whatever happens has a meaning, and is somehow connected to what will happen next. We must use our experience to prevent this type of suffering. We must testify as we are witnesses because humanity needs to hear witnesses in order to remain human.

"Yet it is a paradox to study this even, we tell you to come close the gate-but you will never pass through. Only those who were there are the witnesses, you are the witnesses to a witness," Weisel said.

"Still there are groups in the U.S., in France, in London everywhere, who try to deny that a Holocaust had occurred," he said. "I know how to fight injustice. I try to be involved in every fight for human justice and dignity, but I don't know how to fight ugliness, or the obscene people who tell us that we didn't go through what we went through."

Weisel, throughout his lecture, stressed the humanism of Judaism. "The Hasidic movement is a protest, the most humanistic protest against ugliness, indifference and especial dispair.

"We don't want hate. We are for justice and compassion, and I don't want more tears to be shed as a result of our suffering. Thanks to our memories we shall have no more tears" Weisel said.

Weisel spoke of literature frequently last night, citing the Bible and Talmud as the highest expressions of the literary tradition. He said he would be willing to trade all his publications to have been able to have written the first line of the book of Genesis.

"Literature is like sculpture; the more you remove, the more remains. Literature contains nothing that is useless, not a chapter, sentence, or word; it must be lean and austere, especially the literature of testimony," Weisel said. The title of his forthcoming book is Testimony.

Strikers receive fines

By RICHARD NAGLE
Collegian Staff

Six University of Massachusetts students yesterday each received $25 fines in Hampshire District Court on reduced charges stemming from last October's strike at Amherst Nursing Home. A seventh student was scheduled for an April 9 pre-trial conference on related charges.

Judge Alvertus J. Morse agreed to recommendations from both defense and prosecuting attorneys that all but trespassing charges be dismissed against five of the defendants. A sixth had his charge reduced from malicious to wanton destruction of property.

Morse imposed the $25 court costs instead of eight hours of community service work recommended by Assistant District Attorney Brian Blackburn.

Morse said there is an overload of people required to do such work putting a burden on officials in area towns.

One of the defendants, Steven Shulman, age unknown, of Amherst, said he wanted a sentence of community service work because he could not afford the court costs.

Morse rejected Shulman's request and scheduled the pre-trial conference. Shulman faces disorderly person and trespassing charges.

The strike at Amherst Nursing Home, which lasted from Oct. 23 to 27, was marked by several confrontations between strike supporters and police escorting employees through a picket line.

The strike ended when District 1199 of the New England Health Care Employees Union, which represents about 60 workers at the Home, and Nursing Home Management settled on a two-year contract.

Pleading guilty to trespassing charges were: Daniel LaBarre, 19, of Holyoke; Elizabeth Hill, 20, of Amherst; Gerald Fresia, 33 of Amherst; Joseph Gannon, 24, of Franklin; and Arvid Muller, 20, of Wayland.

Alan Compagnon, 23, of Amherst, pleaded guilty to a charge of wanton injury to personal property.

Charges dismissed against the six included disorderly conduct, interfering with an employee gaining legal entry and assault and battery on a police officer.

All of the cases, except for Shulman's were continued to June 1 without a finding.

No verdict reached in SGA election suit

No verdict was reached last night in the suit in the student courts against the Student Government Association over the results of last October's Undergraduate Student Senate elections.

Michael Cohen, clerk of courts, said the three-justice panel deliberated late into Sunday night following closing arguments. The judges were expected to meet again last night, he said.

Cohen said he doubted the tribunal would reach a decision yesterday, and added that he could not tell when they might come to a verdict. The case is being decided by justices Christopher Cook, Richard Banks and Melinda Ordway.

The trial, which ended Sunday night, is against the SGA and senate, charging that constitutional violations occurred in last semester's senate elections. Among the charges are that a candidate's name was misspelled on the ballot and that decisions about the election were changed frequently.

Cohen said that when a decision is made, it will be typed and copied by him before it is distributed to "the necessary people."

Male residents of Atlanta project to patrol area

By RICHARD T. PIENCIAK
Associated Press

ATLANTA — Male residents of an Atlanta housing project said Monday they have formed a 24-hour patrol group armed with baseball bats in an effort to protect their children from the killers of 20 black youngsters.

The multiracial squad, consisting at the start of about two score 16-to-21-year-olds, will patrol in pairs, armed with wooden and metal bats and walkie-talkies.

Back at a command post, the adults at the Techwood-Clark Howell Homes, many in possession of licensed firearms, will be ready to roll into action.

The project — one of 40 in the city — is the same one whose residents vociferously shunned the Guardian Angels, volunteer crime-fighters from New York City, who showed up last week. The Angels, known mainly for patrolling the subways, said they sent a delegation to Atlanta to train young people to defend themselves.

Public Safety Commissioner Lee P. Brown, who oversees the 80-member task force investigating the 20 slayings and two disappearances of black children, reacted strongly against the idea of the patrol squad.

"There is only one police department in this city and we will not condone any group that will be performing police activities," he said.

But Beverly Harvard, Brown's spokeswoman, said the department would take "a wait-and-see attitude. Our only concern would be if they are in fact trying to perform police-related functions. We'll wait and see before considering any type of action."

'All is not lost' for liberal arts majors

By STEVEN A. COHEN
Associated Press

BOSTON — For young people entering this technological world with a liberal arts degree, all is not lost, says the state Division of Employment Security.

You will have to work harder to find a good job than graduates with a technical degree, but the agency says "job opportunities for liberal arts graduates look good."

The division has opened a pamphlet campaign aimed at specific segments of the population, giving advice on how to find work.

The best opportunities for liberal arts graduates exist in sales, including retail trade, manufacturing and insurance, She said people working now who were born in the post World War II baby boom took jobs at "slightly depressed salaries" because of competition in the job market when they left school, and they "can expect lifetime earnings to be slightly depressed."

"We have identified maybe 30 different areas that we want publications on," Betsy Munzer, director of research at DES, said yesterday. The liberal arts report and one upcoming, giving teen agers advice on finding summer work, are timed to help people who will be looking for jobs when schools close this spring.

For the graduating student, Ms. Munzer said, the first job also may be critical in determining lifetime earnings.

"The most scary thing," she said, "is that people who do studies of this sort of thing say your lifetime earnings tend to be a function of your initial salary."

Tsongas: utilities should develop renewable energy

BOSTON — Electric utilities should be forced to develop conservation and renewable sources of energy before they are allowed to build new nuclear plants or burn coal, says U.S. Sen. Paul Tsongas.

Tsongas, speaking at an energy conference at Northeastern University, said critics of the utilities miss the point if they criticize the fuel adjustment clause, which passes along the rising price of oil. There is no question, he said, that oil prices have increased dramatically.

"The question we should be asking is, 'What are they doing to get us out of oil dependence?'" he said. "The fact is, they basically denigrate conservation and renewables."

"Renewables" are such energy sources as the sun, wind, wood, water and even waste — sources that are endless or can be replaced.

Prop. 2½ may have force in full value assessments

BOSTON — Proposition 2½, a double-edged sword, may have more impact than the state Supreme Court in forcing all communities to full value property assessments.

The reason seems clear: the higher the assessments, the more the cities and towns can spend.

The more they can spend, the fewer the layoffs.

It is hardly a solution to 2½ for many communities, although it can ease the burden of compliance for a few.

For the property taxpayer — especially in communities where higher assessments will not lower tax rates proportionately — this is not good news.

Relative wealth among the 351 cities and towns is a critical factor in distributing school aid and, outside Boston, in assessing county costs. Higher assessments, therefore, can mean less state aid and more county expenses.

Massachusetts Sheriff says First Lady's gun a bad example

BOSTON — "I think the First Lady is setting an example with the teency-weency little gun and the teency-weency little bullets in the White House," says former Middlesex County Sheriff John Buckley.

Buckley asked the legislative Committee on Public Safety yesterday to support his bill to ban all handguns in the state except those for police, security guards, target shooting clubs and businessmen seeking protection.

"Do you know of any system to get guns away from criminals?" asked Rep. George D. Bourque, D-Fitchburg.

"If all the law abiding citizens turn them in, it will cut the death rate," said Buckley.

"That's not what the FBI reports say," retorted Bourque.

"The FBI statistics are notoriously wrong," said the former sheriff.

The exchange came in a six-hour session covering a variety of bills to change the state's first-in-the-nation requirement for a citizen's permit to keep firearms in the home.

Sen. Jack Backman, D-Brookline, called the bill "one more step toward the elimination of violence."

Youth allegedly caught with drug-laced animal crackers

WINCHENDON, Mass. — A 17-year-old faces charges of distributing drugs after he and a companion were allegedly caught with animal crackers laced with potent LSD, a psychedelic drug, police said.

Danny W. Parmenter of Winchendon will be arraigned today on charges of unlawful possession of a controlled substance and possession with intent to distribute a controlled substance.

He and a juvenile were taken into custody Saturday after Winchendon police stopped their car for a traffic violation. Officer Fred Cloutier said an unspecified amount of the tainted crackers were found in the vehicle.

Previously, Police Chief Selvino Marinelli had received reports the drug was being distributed in the crackers.

There were no reports of anyone accidently ingesting the drug, however.

Several months earlier, New England police departments reported LSD was being distributed on the back of stamps picturing Mickey Mouse.

Los Angeles integration plan expected to be dismantled

LOS ANGELES — Some parents who took their children out of public schools to avoid court-ordered busing began re-enrolling them in neighborhood schools yesterday, confident that the school board would quickly dismantle a mandatory integration plan.

Nineteen students, all of whom had been in private schools, enrolled at two San Fernando Valley junior high schools, and officials there said that if many more enrolled immediately, it could cause a teacher shortage.

The board was to meet last night to decide what steps to take folowing a ruling by the California Supreme Court last week. The high court upheld the constitutionality of a voter-approved intiative that forbids mandatory busing unless segregation has been deliberate.

School officials said students who have been bused under the district's mandatory integration program would have to await board action. Four of the six board members have said they would vote to allow all students to return to their neighborhood schools after spring vacation ends April 20.

Mine workers union willing to negotiate beyond deadline

WASHINGTON—The United Mine Workers union indicated yesterday it is willing to talk beyond a midnight negotiating deadline in the search for a tentative contract agreement with the soft coal industry. It was an apparent signal that progress was being made toward a strike-free settlement.

Even though the current three-year contract between the UMW and BCOA does not expire for another 10 days—when any strike would begin—the two sides agreed beforehand on the Monday midnight limit for a tentative agreement.

The reason, simply, is the union's contention that it needs 10 days to complete ratification by its 39-member bargaining council and the approximately 160,000 rank-and-file miners in the eastern and midwestern coal fields. UMW policy forbids any work without a contract.

Union spokesman Eldon Callen quoted UMW President Sam Church as saying he was willing to "talk all night if necessary" if a settlement seemed imminent.

Church had said earlier that "we have a shot" at averting a strike. But B.R. Brown, the top negotiator for the Bituminous Coal Operators Association, said late in the day, "I'm not optimistic."

If a strike should occur, it likely will not have much immediate impact outside the industry. Coal stockpiles are high, and many non-union strip mines in the West would continue to produce.

Fact-finder's report reviewed in court

By DIANE KADZIS
Collegian Correspondent

Attorneys for 40 University of Massachusetts students and the school's Board of Trustees are scheduled today to discuss in Hampshire Superior Court a court-appointed fact-finder's report which recommends dismissal of the suit against the trustees.

In his fact-finding, or Master's report, Springfield Att. Frank Uman called invalid the students' claim that the board illegally approved dormitory rent hikes and the construction of a $47,000 mini-store in the Student Union building. The report states that the trustees acted within their power granted by state laws.

Uman was appointed Master Jan. 22 by Superior Court Judge Raymond Cross.

At a Feb. 18 hearing, Uman ruled on evidence submitted by attorneys for the students and the University. His full report as well as discussion on the findings will be presented today.

At issue is the board's failure to consult with the UMass Building Authority when plans were drawn up for rent hikes and renovations. Both expenditures exceed $5,000 and are required to be approved by the authority, the suit claims.

But according to Uman's findings, "the trustees are authorized to enter into contracts in excess of $5,000 for maintenance, repair, replacement, restoration or reconstruction of buildings without the approval of the Authority, unless the work is to be undertaken after a casualty or is to be paid from proceeds of insurance."

Uman's report also concludes that the Trustees may act as an agent of the building authority in matters concerning rates, fees and rentals.

Branagan's liquor license suspended

By MARK L. CURELOP
Collegian Staff

The Amherst Board of Selectmen voted last night to suspend Branagans' liquor license for two days.

Branagans, located at the intersection of Route 9 and University Drive, was cited by Amherst Police Chief Donald Maia for violation of the present liquor license by serving customers at 1:31 a.m. on Feb. 15. The license says the establishment is allowed to serve liquor until one a.m.

Presently, the restaurant is overseen by the regional office of Branagans in Connecticut, while a new manager is being trained, said a spokesperson for Branagans. The new manager was issued a liquor license last night.

Selectman Donald Routh asked the board if the establishment had the right to operate under the conditions of not having a license issued to the present manager.

Town Manager A. Louis Hayward and Chairman of the Board of Selectmen Bill Atkins said no.

Branagans liquo r license will be suspended April 1 and 2.

In other business, the Trustees of the Jones Library discussed with board members the fiscal crunch the library will suffer brought on by Prop 2½.

A spokesperson for the trustees said that $37,000 is needed for operational costs.

The board did not take a stand on the issue.

The board opened the meeting to the public for a hearing on revenue sharing.

A public hearing must be held prior to Town Meeting, scheduled for March 30, to meet federal regulations, according to a memo from Hayward.

Bluewall re-naming vote to be repeated due to controversy

Because of what Bluewall and Campus Center officials describe as "a large amount of overstuffing," the balloting to re-name the popular watering hole will be held again after spring break.

Paul Flaherty, student supervisor and bartender at the Bluewall, and a member of the re-naming committee, said the committee decided to re-run the voting after it discovered a large number of ballots had similar markings, indicating that they may have been filed by one person or a small group of people.

Flaherty said the voting would be held once again on the Tuesday or Wednesday after next week's vacation. This time, however, ballots printed in the Collegian will have a space for people's names and student identification numbers. The names and numbers will be checked, he said.

Flaherty also said the committee decided not to announce how the first vote had gone, so it would not prejudice the second vote.

The original ballot, which appeared in last Thursday's Collegian, asked students to select one of 10 names for the recently-renovated bar and cafeteria. The names included the original, "the Bluewall," "the wall," "the Concourse Cafe," "the Park Bench Cafe," "the Bedrock Cafe," "the Quarry," "Park Place," "the hole in the wall," "the University Tavern," and "George's Place."

Last month, students were asked to submit potential names to the committee, which were then placed on the ballot. The person who originally submitted the chosen name will be awarded a prize, which includes a dinner at the Top of the Campus restaurant.

Global awareness needed to face world problems

By STEPHEN M. PORTER
Collegian Correspondent

The problems the world faces are increasingly global, Richard Perl, co-coordinator of the Project for Global Education said last night, and there must be a global awareness to deal with them.

Speaking to a group of 11 people at the School of Education, Perl said that though it took until 1900 for the world's population to reach one billion, the population is now increasing to reach one billion, the population is now increasing by one billion every nine years. Moreover, Perl said, 30 people starve to death every minute.

Quoting Confucious, Perl said:

"Unless we change our direction, we will end up where we're headed."

"If we continue acting on principles of national sovereignty...and in limited parochial self-interest ways, we won't last much longer," Perl said.

The Project for Global Education is sponsored by Global Education Associates, Institute for World Order, Planetary Citizens and World Federalists Association, but is responsible for its own funding.

The purpose of the project is to encourage colleges to offer courses which will address the question: "How is the human species going to survive on this planet in some sustainably ecological, just and peaceful manner? It is concerned with promoting a concern for an understanding of alternative world futures.

Perl, who recently visited 12 different colleges in Western Massachusetts and Vermont, will meet with faculty from the Five College Area today at a luncheon. He plans to discuss two courses to be offered to area students.

The first will be a two-week intensive course offered at UMass over the summer. The second, entitled Global Interdependence, will be offered at UMass next fall through the Future Studies program, and next spring at Hampshire College.

Coalition plans tentative rally on important issues

By JOHN DiPALAZZO
Collegian Staff

Students aiming to form a coalition of all University of Massachusetts student organizations made tentative plans to hold a mass rally to educate students on issues facing them, especially financial aid cuts and tuition increases.

At the group's meeting yesterday, organizer Greg Tarpinian said the rally is tentatively set for shortly after spring vacation. Tarpinian said he hopes the umbrella coalition will include the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy, student government groups, Third World organizations, women's groups, MassPIRG and Students Advocating Financial Aid.

Tarpinian said that the coalition would oppose tuition hikes and cuts in the University's budget by the state legislature, and would push for increased financial aid, affirmative action programs, and student input into decision-making, including student representation on the Board of Regents.

In addition to the rally, which may include state legislators as speakers, the group wants to organize a trip to Washington, D.C. to lobby Congress for increased financial aid, and also go to Boston on April 15, when the Board of Regents is expected to decide on UMass tuition increases.

Group members also expressed interest in lobbying state legislators to prevent cuts in the University budget when that comes before the legislature in late April.

A steering committee was selected to organize the group's next meeting, tentatively scheduled for March 30, and to discuss which issues the group will address and what actions the group will take. The steering committee will also formally decide on a name for the organization.

"The coalition will be organized around broad initiatives that all groups could support," Tarpinian said, adding that even though the group will concentrate on financial issues now, it will consider other issues also.

Literary magazine expected

By JULIE GEANAKAKIS
Collegian Staff

Spectrum, the art/literary magazine at UMass, is expecting. The brainchild of collegiate poets, photographers, artists and prose writers is due to arrive in late March from the publisher. The cover of this semester's first issue will feature in Intaglio in red and yellow by Kate Hanlon. Inside there are twenty written works and an equal number of art plates.

Melodie Wertelet, Spectrum's managing editor, believes that the volume of submissions received for their spring issue shows that students are writing as an extra curricular activity. Spectrum received approximately 350 poems and 30 prose pieces, she said.

"Cutbacks in Spectrum's $11,454 annual budget are expected in the near future," Wertelet said. The question is whether Spectrum will survive as a biannual magazine or become a yearly publication. Spectrum cuts production costs by having staff members do typesetting, editing and layout work.

Nine new members have recently joined the staff. Wertelet said "student interest" is necessary for the magazine's survival.

Since the response to Spectrum's initial deadline was below it's expectations, the second semester issue will not appear until late September. The deadline for this issue is March 30 for poetry, and April 9 for artwork and photography. Spectrum's reading Series will be held in the Commonwealth Room of the Student Union on March 31 at 7:30 p.m.

Cabinet divided on auto import issue

WASHINGTON — With his cabinet sharply divided, President Reagan likely will decide soon on whether to seek curbs on Japanese auto imports — a move some advisers believe could jeopardize his economic recovery plan. .

A cabinet level task force headed by Transportation Secretary Drew Lewis has been grappling with the import issue for weeks, causing delays in its report to the president on the plight of the auto industry.

The issue will be debated again today, and a decision by Reagan may come later in the week, although there remains wide disagreement among the chief executive's top advisers.

Entomology Department members study fly that causes blindness

By JOHANNA HOSOM
COLLEGIAN Staff

Dr. John Edman of the University of Massachusetts Entomology Department and graduate research assistant Kenneth Simmons have recently joined froces with national and international researchers to fight in the World Health Organization's battle against a crippling disease, river blindness.

The disease, carried by the African black fly species Simulium Damnosum, which lives in the fertile plains of western central Africa, has infected approximately 35 million people in that area. A similar strain has been discovered in mountain villages of South America, but its effects have not reached the proportions of the disease in Africa.

Presently, nearly 50 percent of the population of river villages have been blinded by the disease, thus its name, river blindness. Once blinded, victims often do not live for more than five years. The result is a diminished workforce in a region that depends on its entire population for economic survival, Edman said.

"Researchers hope that by studying the African flies in controlled laboratory conditions, it will enable them to isolate the species, and to test its resistance to experimental pesticides and to study the effect of the pesticides over several generations," Edman said.

"Through laboratory techniques involving artificial breeding grounds, the method of transference can also be pinpointed and immunology studies and vaccine development can be done," he said. "Unfortunately these studies have to wait until the basic physiology can be determined."

Two years ago, Edman and Simmons developed an artificial stream at UMass in which they raised 17 successive generations of North American black flies, an unprecedented event in laboratory colonies.

"We hoped to use this system to raise the African black flies. However, the eggs which I brought back from Africa did not adapt ot the environment, and a new system had to be developed," Edman said.

Analyzing the requirements for a better habitat, Simmons built a new stream consisting of an upended pyramid lying just below the water surface.

Water flows down over the sides along four ramps, each zig zagging down one side of the pyramid to provide a necessary effect of streaming water. The water then flows through a gravel filter and pump which maintains water temperature as well as cleansing it, Edman said.

"The water is recycled into the environment, and if for any reason the pump does not work, the water backs up, keeping the ramps flooded," he said. "This is essential to the black fly larvae which attach themselves to the ramp sides because they die quickly without fresh water."

This system has the advantages of being able to sustain life in the event of a power shortage, provide portability, and of being relatively inexpensive. The newer system costs $250, while the first cost $5,000 to build and run. "This is especially important in the poor, underdeveloped countries affected by the disease," Edman said.

River blindness disease begins as an organism which infests the mouth cavity of the black fly, Edman said. When the fly feeds, it releases the organism into the lymph system of its human prey. A worm develops over the next 10 to 15 years, then produces microfilariae.

"These microfilariae live for two weeks, invading the lymph system. When they die, the body produces antibodies and an alergic reaction occurs," he said.

"The first symptom is a constant itching and often shedding of the top layers of skin," Edman said. "Eventually, the organism reaches the area behind the eyes, and as scar tissue accumulates, blindness occurs."

Presently there are no effective drugs for these people, Edman said. A few drugs kill microfilariae, but as their death causes the allergic reaction, they are only moderately effective and just delay the occurence of blindness. And because they are relatively expensive, they are not easily availabe.

There are no drugs which kill the worms without seriously affecting the individual whose been infected.

"In cases where the worms are treated, it is merely a matter of killing the worms faster than killing the person affected. Hopefully future research can determine information which will lead to effective immunology," Edman said.

Israel angered by reports on U.S.

By MARCUS ELIASON
Associated Press

TEL AVIV, Israel—Israel reacted angrily yesterday to reports that the United States plans to equip Saudi Arabia with flying radar stations, which Israeli military experts claim will allow the Saudis to scan Israel's most secret defenses "like a closed circuit TV camera in our bedroom."

Foreign Minister Yitzhak Shamir told Parliament that because of the sale of new weapons systems to Saudi Arabia, "friendly relations with the United States are being clouded." He was referring to a U.S. plan Israel contends could expose all military movements in the Jewish state.

Reports of the AWACS (Airborne Warning and Command System) deal surfaced last Wednesday, a few days after the Israeli government decided to avoid a head-on collision with the new U.S. administration over the sale of extra equipment for Saudi Arabia's American-built F-15 jet fighters.

The United States decided to upgrade the Saudi air force in an effort to discourage Soviet expansion in the oil-rich Persian Gulf region, according to Reagan administration sources who said the United States had decided to sell four of the radar planes to Saudi Arabia.

Former Foreign Minister Abba Eban, speaking for the opposition Labor Party, accused Shamir of getting Israeli relations with the Reagan administration off to a bad start by failing to "confront the United States" on the Saudi arms issue.

Students hit hard by budget cut, claims union official

JOSEPH BARRETT
Collegian Staff

Students are one of the groups that will suffer the most under President Reagan's proposed budget cuts, an AFL-CIO education official said.

"Public education especially will suffer since education budgets are tightening nationwide," said Dorothy Shields, AFL-CIO director of Education in a student press conference in Boston last week.

Shields, who was the first woman ever elected to a Director position in the AFL-CIO, said that "with the tightening of federal student assistance, education will become more difficult to afford. Unions have always held the position that education should be available to all, and clearly this administration does not agree."

Shields said there is a "group feeling" in Congress that the President has a mandate for these cuts, and said the students should work through their congressman and mobilize to show the administration where students feel the cuts should be.

"As it stands now, students are really going to be hurt," Shields said.

"To give you an example of how students are being hurt, the National Science Foundation has provided high school and college students with internships, teacher training programs and other educational opportunities. This administration plans to cut their budget from $80 million to $9 million," she said.

Shields said that it has taken years for the government to develop programs to give equal opportunities to the disadvantaged and minorities, and that these programs are now going to be dismantled.

"There is a realistic chance of these budget cuts getting through unless mobilization and lobbying techniques work, and these efforts need a vocal public behind them to be effective," said Shields.

"Another twist to these proposed cuts is that it might close the road to a four-year education for many, who may now have to stay closer to home and get a two-year education because other opportunities will now be closed, and this is said," she said.

Shields, when informed that University of Massachusetts President David C. Knapp predicted that up to 3000 UMass students may not be able to afford to return to school next year, said "It is up to us to make sure that public education remains public in the truest sense of the word."

Tennis courts

It did not take the Ward Commission's report to tell students here at the University of Massachusetts that all is not well with campus buildings. A walk through the Campus Center and garage, or a visit to the Library Tower could tell one that. Likewise, athletic facilities here at the University leave something to be desired.

The North Physical Education (NOPE) building's gymnasium is closed due to a leaking roof; Boyden building is perennially overcrowded; Curry Hicks Cage is decrepit and perhaps the worst facility used by any Division One basketball team in the nation.

Most recently, it has been learned that unless funds can be allocated for repair work, all 32 University tennis courts will have to be closed indefinitely after this semester. All eight courts located between NOPE and the Sylvan residential area have already been closed for safety reasons.

The repercussions of having no tennis facilities on this campus go beyond the fact that 36 varsity tennis players will no longer be able to compete in an intercollegiate sport. Thousand of people—students, faculty and administration—will be left without a place to play tennis in physical education classes, intramural and general recreation play.

This is not a new problem. Conditions of the courts have deteriorated over the last few years, while repair work has consistently been put off. Last summer, a Physical Plant estimate placed the cost of repairs needed on all 32 courts at $51,000. Though the courts were scheduled for repair work, funding mix-ups within the School of Physical Education and the Provost's office caused this work to be delayed for still another year. Meanwhile, this winter's cold temperatures caused even more frostheaves on the court's surfaces, adding an estimated increase of 10 percent to the original work needed. The situation is getting worse.

And as the situation gets worse, each level of administration—the Provost's office, the athletic department and Auxillary Services—seems content to pass the blame to someone else. For any progress to be made, all levels of administration will have to be willing to work together to put up the necessary funds. With tight money, especially in the face of state budget cutbacks, the need for efficient communication becomes all that much more important.

If, in fact, University officials are prepared to allow the facilities to be closed, they must also ask themselves whether they are willing to accept the consequences of such an action, such as incurring the cost of revising all University literature that claims the campus has 32 operating tennis courts on this campus.

Most importantly, though, for the thousands of tennis players at this University, it would not only be unwise to allow the sport of tennis to die, it would be unfair.

'What's so radical about that?'

John Hudson

For months now I've heard talk of "The New Right," "Right to Lifers," and "The Moral Majority," yet I hadn't yet come across the chance to meet one. While preparing to leave the twenty-sixth floor of the library the other day, after a long afternoon of studying, a man stepped on to the elevator just as the doors began to close. The buttons on his plaid leisure suit clued me to his identity. "Abortion is MURDER," "Jesus Wasn't a Jew," "Gays are not God's children,"—the messages jumped out and challenged me to confront him. I decided to start on a light note.

"Beautiful day, wouldn't you say?"

"Sure," he answered, "if you like getting accosted by those damn radicals outside the Student Union handing out this un-American literature!"

He thrust forward a pamphlet describing the trouble in El Salvador and decrying our economic and military involvement there.

"What's so radical about that?" I asked.

"The communists are getting closer and closer every day! Look at Afghanistan, at Poland. If we don't stop 'em there they'll be breathing down our necks before we know it!"

I considered arguing, but decided for decorum's sake to tactfully change the subject.

"You looked like you were in a hurry."

"Yes, I'm on my way to a meeting. My group, 'Americans for a Free and Moral Country' are holding a rally on Tuesday in Washington."

"Just what is it your group stands for?"

"Let's see...we're anti-abortion, anti-gun control, anti-evolution, anti-homosexual, anti-communist, anti-government, anti-ERA, anti-Jewish and anti-bussing."

"Sounds positive. Is there anything you're not again?"

"Why of course! The family, God, and the old red, white and blue!"

"How can you say things like that!?", I screamed, "People like you and the things you represent went out with McCarthyism, the Klu Klux Klan and The John Birch Society! This is 1981, not 1951!"

"Look," he said, "I know that, but no one else does. Look at your own campus apathy and complacency everywhere. A 33 percent turnout for the SGA elections isn't exactly earthshaking. We know we're a minority but our power comes from the inaction of the majority. Because of your inaction, we control the U.S. Senate and elected the most conservative president in twenty years. If no one fights us, our goals are easily achievable."

I hated to admit it but he was right. When was the last time I had truly fought for something? It seems as though my own views had changed from fierce liberalism to appeasing laziness. His argument was sobering and I pulled back from my challenging instincts.

"By the way," I asked meekly, "are you a student here?"

"No...could you tell me what time it is? I have an appointment at Whitmore personnel office."

"It's ten of five."

"Good...I should make it just in time. I heard the Chancellor's job is up for grabs...."

References to Baha'i are 'offensive'

About a month ago a Collegian cartoon strip entitled "Nuke the Whale" made an unflattering reference about the Baha'i Faith. The incident created some concern among the Baha'i community. However, it was felt at that time that the item was not worth making an issue of. But, on Thursday, March 12 and again on Friday, March 13, the same cartoon strip made derogatory references about the Baha'i Faith. The Baha'is in Amherst are puzzled and concerned by this thoughtless and insensitive reference to the Faith.

The central teaching of Baha'u'llah, the Prophet-Founder of the Baha'i Faith, is that mankind is one and that all the peoples of the world should unite in love and fellowship. For espousing this spiritual truth members of the Faith all around the world, and throughout the 137 year history of the Faith, have been severely persecuted.

The recent references to the Baha'i Faith in the comic strip "Nuke the Whale" are especially offensive at this particular time. During the past year persecution of Baha'is has escalated dramatically in Iran, the birthplace of the Faith. As an example, during the period when these three comic strips were printed, Dr. Manoucher Hakim, an eminent Baha'i physician, was abducted from his home and executed by fanatical elements in Iran. These same elements later returned to his home, took all his possessions and left his family homeless and destitute.

Some of the teachings of the Baha'i Faith are: the compatibility of science and religion, the independent investigation of truth and the elimination of all forms of prejudice. We encourage the editors of the Collegian and the author of the comic strip "Nuke the Whale," to apply these principles in their future publications. We ask that you desist in making derogatory and prejudicial references to the Baha'i Faith.

Cutbacks threaten legal rights

Among the various social service cutbacks proposed by the Reagan administration is one which threatens the very basis of our system of justice and of equal access to the courts.

It has long been recognized that the legal system has an obligation to provide access to the Courts to those who cannot afford a private attorney. Equal representation under the law and adherance to due process of law are fundamental rights guaranteed by our Constitution. Yet the present session of Congress is attempting to severely reduce and possibly eliminate legal services to the poor. My concern is pronounced by the fact that the need for legal services is especially great when social services become increasingly insecure. How may the poor possibly receive just treatment when the only available means to them are denied?

It is no coincidence that the drastic action against legal aid accompanies the ambitious desire to deregulate industry. Workers will undoubtedly bear the burden of increased competition yet as they struggle to combat poor work conditions, their one vehicle, legal services, will not be available to them.

The Legal Services Community has responded to this threat by forming a coalition which intends to develop a network of support for the Legal Services Corporation. Their speedy action indicates the sense of urgency felt by the profession. Those interested in joining a Coalition to save Legal Services Corporation can contact our office.

Steve Forbert rocks the Nail

By RON MILLER

STEVE FORBERT
RUSTY NAIL, FRIDAY MARCH 13

With heavy lids, an ear-to-ear grin, and guitar in hand, Steve Forbert came soaring into the Rusty Nail Friday night.

Forbert's energy came on slowly. For the first half hour it was pretty dull, and the surprisingly small crowd seemed bored.

His ballads lacked the impact of studio versions, and his words of wisdom lost their meaning in the live context. However, Forbert and his back up band didn't take long to prove they could rock out.

Both Forbert and the audience quickly gained momentum. People crowded near the stage to dance and get a closer look. Forbert's effort showed as his muscles strained with each note and sweat dripped from his face.

He performed songs from all three of his albums, as well as several covers including the Cascades' a "Rhythm of the Rain."

Forbert played so many encores I lost track of the exact number, but he came back a total of three times, the last time playing at least six songs.

His final encores consisted of a set of classic rock and roll tunes including "All Shook Up" and "Roll Over Bethoven."

Forbert proved he came to play, when after what appeared to be his final song the lead guitarist and keyboardist got up to leave. Forbert, however, wasn't done yet. As he walked up to the mike for one more song his fellow band members peered over with disbelief, but they returned to their instruments, and the crowd was treated to another song. Everyone was still ready for more, but the exhausted band had had enough and those familiar lights signaled that the show was really over.

Forbert and company were preceeded by a new local band, The Pleasure Dots. This band gave a surprisingly strong performance, although they were somewhat rough around the edges. Watch out for this group. Given time they could be quite good.

Nobody left the Nail dissapointed with an entertaining back up band and Forbert's exhausting performance, no one could claim they didn't get their money's worth. "Little Stevie Orbit" was flying high Friday night.

New dog licenses available in Amherst

Amherst dog licenses for 1981 are available from now until March 31 at the Town Hall.

Town Clerk Estelle M. Matusko said the 1980 licenses expire on March 31 and new permits must be obtained before then. Proof of rabies vaccination must be presented at the time of licensing, as well as a certificate from a veterinarian, certifying that a dog has been spayed. The license fees are $4 for males and spayed females and $7 for unspayed female dogs.

Matusko also said all dog owners should be reminded that town by-law requires all dogs must be leashed and prevented from running free at all times.

Health Services offers workshop

The University of Massachusetts Health Services will be offering a three-hour workshop entitled "Understanding and Coping With Stress," tonight from 6:30 to 9:30 p.m.

Dyann Matson, a member of the health education staff who will co-facilitate the workshop with Lynn Kirk of the mental health staff, said the workshop is open to all students and their dependents to help them "recognize and manage stress we face in every day life." Several techniques for coping with stress will be explored, she said.

Pre-registration for the workshop is required and can be done by calling the health education office at 549-2671.

Head of Residence sought for Cance

Students interested in applying for the position of student head of residence for Cance House in the Southwest Residential Area may pick up an application after March 16 at the apartment of the current Cance head of residence.

The deadline for returning applications is April 1 at 6 p.m., and interviews will start on April 3. All interested candidates should attend an information session at 8 p.m. on March 17 and a candidate forum at 7 p.m. on April 2.

Cance is an equal opportunity/affirmative action employer.

Members of horse show team chosen

The University of Massachusetts Department of Veterinary and Animal Science has chosen Pattie Carbone, Joanne Copeland, Rick McGrath, Sue Nowak and Ken Whelihan as members of its 1981 season horse show team.

The students, all of whom are animal science majors studying in the Equine option at UMass, will compete on University-owned horses at shows in the New England area. Their first show of the season will be a dressage show on March 28 in Pepperell.

The team will be coached by Sue Blinks, the director of riding at UMass, and managed by Karin Laemle, a recent graduate of the Department of Veterinary and Animal Science.

US competitiveness topic of program

The final Great Decisions 1981 program is scheduled for tomorrow at 8 p.m. in the main lounge of the Noah Webster in the Orchard Hill Residential Area. Entitled "Made in U.S.A.: Is U.S. Competitiveness Slipping." This topic coincides with public debate over an issue of American foreign policy: should the U.S. protect itself against the importation of Japanese automobiles?

Panelists for this topic will be Virginia Galbraith, professor of economics at Mount Holyoke College; Kenneth Flamm and Leonard Rapping, both members of the economics department at the University of Massachusetts; and Bertil Liander, associate professor of Marketing, School of Business Administration, at UMass.

As usual, Luther Allen, political science professor, will be the moderator. There will also be an extended period for questions and comments from the audience.

The program, which is open to the public, takes place on Wednesday evening, March 18, at 8 p.m. in the Main Lounge of Noah Webster House, Orchard Hill. A tape of this program will be broadcast on Sunday evening, March 22 between 9:30 and 11 p.m. over WFCR (88.5 FM).

Kenny Fulgham tipped in four consecutive layups to stretch the Bears' lead to 39-23. The final score was 41-25 and Fulgham ended up with 19 for the Bears.

Horsefeathers matched Los Conquistadores almost bucket for bucket in the first half of their quarterfinal contest. Los Conquistadores led 32-29 at the break. Horsefeathers was at a disadvantage height-wise, but they used position and muscle under the basket to make up any difference. Billy Shea penetrated for a quick layup to start the second half and give Horsefeathers its first lead of the game. Mike Shea, who finished with 9 assists and ten points, kept finding either Steve Hart or Timmy Leary (the big one) underneath for an easy two.

John Loeffler, who assaulted the boards with gusto in the second half, found Mike Shea all alone underneath with a full-court touchdown pass to stretch their lead to 55-44 with four minutes left. Horsefeathers went into a good recreation of the North Carolina four-corner stall with two minutes left with Timmy Leary (the smaller one) directing the play. Behind Bill Shea's 17 points, Horsefeathers stayed alive, 64-54. Wayne "Ice" Stockton had 20 for Los Conquistadores.

In other men's quarterfinal action, Pink Steel silenced the Gunners, 48-40, and will play Horsefeathers tonight in the semis.

In the Grad-Fac-Staff quarterfinals, defending champs Education, behind 20 first-half points from center Steve Johnson, rolled over Unnatural Acts, 85-39. Edcuation will face LARP, who won by forfeit last night, in a semifinal matchup tonight. Ubiquity upset the Macaques, 45-43, and will meet the Wobblies in the other semifinal. Both Grad-Fac-Staff games will be played at 6:45 p.m.

In the only women's game, the Whimps won a semifinal spot by swamping the Dukes 60-28.

BODY BUILDING: Body building is generally the goal of someone who lifts in the dead weight room three-to-four, or even seven times a week. The emphasis on body-building is not as much on strength as muscle development.

Seltzer said there are levels to the seriousness of the body builder. He said there are participants at different levels at Boyden, where some men or women lift just to look better while others are working seriously on specific body parts. A large mirror in the dead weight room there gives the lifter an image of the muscle lines or "cuts" being developed; and what exercises and movements will effect them.

"In a way, the serious body builders are like artists," Seltzer said.

TONING: "Body building is an intense version of toning," Seltzer said. To the lifter aspiring to be in tone, repetitions with a more manageable weight are the means.

Lifters normally work in "sets" of repetitions or "reps". An example of each can be drawn from what some instructors consider the basis for all weightlifting, the bench press.

A power lifter may punch up 300 pounds once or twice. The body builder or toner will lift 175 pounds ten times (repetitions) in each of the five turns (sets) under the bar.

There will be a mandatory sports staff meeting for anyone interested in a spring beat tonight at 7 p.m. at the sports desk in The Collegian office.

IM hockey finals tonight

Bears face GQ in semis

Horsefeathers battle P. Steel Crowdpleasers in co-rec final

By STEPHEN FREKER
Collegian Staff

The present state of affairs in the intramural basketball program's men's division playoffs going into tonight's semifinal round tapoffs is a fmiliar one for the innumerable Boston Celtic-philes and Bird-watchers around here.

It is fitting that such a similar situation should crop up on this day when the Green is so much in the limelight.

Celtics fans will point to the fact that their team will have to play the Philadelphia 76ers in a playoff round in order to make it to the NBA finals.

Well, IM hoop fans, this will be the case tonight in the Boyden gym at 5:45 p.m.

No. The Celts aren't playing the Sixers. But, more importantly, defending champion GQ 11 will lock horns with the crown challenging Bad News Bears in a semifinal encounter tonight.

This matchup will probably be the best game of the entire intramural season in terms of individual talent and team play. The Bears may have a slight overall height advantage compared to GQ, but GQ bridges this small gap adequately with its superb team leaping ability. Key matchups under the boards will be Marc Thompson, Bob Seltzer and Gary Lee of the Bears against GQ's Max Jones, Wilbur Jackson and Ray Murphy, who doubles as a ball-handling guard for the defending champs.

Both teams have a quick backcourt. The Bears' Larry Powers and Kevin Downing bring the ball up and look for the pass underneath first but will settle for the short jumper. GQ has better long-range talent with Garry Pearson and Dwayne Lopes as well as Murphy when he wants to shoot.

Neither team had much trouble with its quarterfinal opponent last night. Kennedy's Phil Martin gave GQ an early scare when he pumped in the game's first seven points to give his team a quick lead. GQ 11 put things back into perspective with a Jones jumper, a twisting Murphy drive to the hoop, and back-to back three-point plays by Lopes and Jackson. GQ 11 continued its first half dominance and led at the break 31-14. The final was 57-39 and Martin finished with 22 for Kennedy.

A Kevin Downing behind the back dishoff to Marc Thompson for an above the rim layup, broke a first half 10-10 deadlock in the Bad News Bears' quarterfinal with the Vapors. Larry Powers hit a pullup jumper with five seconds left in the half to give the Bears a 23-13 lead. The Bears returned to a fastbreak style in the second half and

McCrone eighth in championships

By JAMES GRAHAM
Collegian Staff

Though Pocatello, Idaho isn't exactly the weekend dream vacation spot in the minds of most students as they look forward to spring break, UMass junior Judy McCrone was happy to travel there last week as a competitor in the National collegiate women's indoor track championships held at Idaho State College last Saturday.

McCrone finished eighth in the 3000 meter run with a time of 9:51 over the 200 meter board track. It was her best time for the 3000 meter indoors and ranks her among the Nation's top distance runners. McCrone has run a best 3000 meter outdoor of 9:39. She said the slower times of the field were due to the poor track conditions and the 5000 foot altitude of Pocatello.

McCrone qualified for the Nationals in the Eastern championships held March eighth at Harvard when she finished fourth in the two mile with a time of 10:23. It was the fifth time McCrone has qualified and traveled to a National championship in the last two years.

During the winter season McCrone has proven to be the leading distance runner for the UMass team, running every distance from the half-mile on the relay team to the two-mile.

Other runners from New England who competed well in the Nationals were Nancy Scardini of the University of New Hampshire who finished seventh in the 3000 meters just in front of McCrone and Darlene Beckford of Harvard who won the 800 meters.

McCrone's time in the two mile has qualified her for the Nationals this spring to be held in Texas. "I'm psyched for spring. I'll be running the mile and half mile early in the season to build up my speed and then the longer races later in the season," McCrone said.

Weightlifting: A popular form of exercise

By MIKE ESTRADA
Collegian Staff

"The way I approached weight lifting gave me alot more discipline. It's given me a sense of accomplishment."

—Bob Seltzer

For the goal of just getting into better shape to envisioning oneself as a potential Arnold Schwartzeneggar, weightlifting has become increasingly popular at the university.

On any given afternoon at the universal weight room in Boyden Gymnasium, students and faculty stand in lines, sometimes six deep, to wait to use an apparatus that can accomodate only 13 persons at one time.

The more serious lifters in the basement of Boyden now have the benefit of dumbbells in addition to bars and plates.

In the past four years, the number of conditioning and weight training courses offered by the General Physical Education Department has jumped from seven to 11, with three more scheduled for the fall. Not only are these classes filled, but vastly oversubscribed.

GPE director Chet Gladchuck said new universals would be placed in Curry Hicks and North Physical Education, adding more programs for women.

As a means to the end of physical fitness, weightlifting can be a do it all activity. A person working with weights can build muscle, lose weight or improve wind just by varying forms of training and dietary habits.

Among the more prolific lifters who work out regularly at Boyden is Bob Seltzer. Seltzer, 23, received his Bachelors Degree in Exercise Science and is currently a graduate student here aspiring to his Master's Degree in Nutrition and Exercise Physiology. His knowledge of the activities of weightlifting come both from textbook work and hands on experience.

"Lifting is so flexible that you can do anything with it," he said. "Its applicable to any needs from power lifting to weight reduction. And with certain exercises can be applied to any sport."

"I started lifting to get bigger, put on a little weight, and get stronger. The way I approached it gave me a lot more discipline. It has given me a sense of accomplishment."

Seltzer outlined the major forms of weightlifting and the results each produces.

POWER LIFTING: "Power lifting," Seltzer said, "is a scientific routine to develop strength, and is not geared to muscle tone or size."

Valerie Alexsyev is a power lifter. His large stomach may be a bit unsightly, but it is the source of the Russian's amazing strength. Power lifters are normally into some sort of competition where the tone and shape of the biceps and pectorals are inconsequential to how much weight he or she can lift..

Power lifters move a lot of weight few times. They concentrate on pushing their strength to the limit each time for maximum improvement. Theyare more serious about strength and are generally more rigorous withthe one objective in mind.

Why they lift

The reasons men and women lift weights, from simply toning up to repairing an injury, are as individual as the participants themselves. The following random student comments were gathered last Wednesday and Thursday at the universal and dead weight facilities in Boyden.

"I lift to keep in shape mainly," said Joel Kestenberg, 19, a Zoology major from Sharon. "The exercise keeps me busy and fills in a couple of hours a day. It's a good transition from classes to homework keeps the motivation up.

"I want to get stronger and this is a good way to do it," said Susan White, 28, a graduate student in Sociology from Deerfield. "I wouldn't lift regular weights because they're too dangerous. the universal gives me a good feeling. I can focus on different parts of my body."

David Hudson,22, of Newton said he "was just trying to put on a few pounds. I think running is really boring," he said, "lifting weights gives me more physical results."

"This is probably one of the easiest ways to keep in shape," said Lisa Kershaw, 19, a journalism major from Melrose. "Normally, I don't get much exercise exceptwalking to class."

"I lift for track practice, I want to get strong for workouts," said Kirk Skinner, 21, who competes in the hammer and the shot put for the UMass Minutemen.

Cathy McGrath, 20, of Amherst, said "the reason I lift is to keep myself in shape and keep firm. I work out every other day (on the universal) but sometimes I don't have the time."

Blaize Conte, 21, of Reading, said he was working out to "try to repair some twisted ligaments in the arch of his foot." "I used to be a runner," he said, "I'm trying to get back in shape."

"I started lifting over intersession because I didn't want to sit home and watch television," Nancy Nadler, 21, of Natick said. "I work out Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday to tone up and get in shape."

The Natick native started lifting in his freshman year at UMass. Since then he has added 50 muscular punds to his more than six foot frame.

Seltzer said that weightlifting, because of its flexibility, can be an activity for anyone interested in exercise.

Puck finals tonight

The championship final of the intramural hockey program will be played tonight at 9 p.m. at the Greenfield Rink.

In the semifinals held last night, Breen's Bruins played the Chowderwombs in the first game while the Motherpuckers skated against Puckoff in the second game. The two winners will meet tonight to decide the intramural ice crown.

Two upset victories were recorded Sunday night in the quarterfinal playoff round.

Puckoff, led by the play of Bob Ouellette, buried number three seeded What the Puck, 10-4. In game two, Marty Daly scored the winning goal for the Chowderwombs in their victory over the fourth-seeded Americans, 5-1. Steve Hunneman was outstanding in net for the Chowderwombs.

March today against U.S. intervention

By PAUL BELVAL
Collegian Correspondent

About 1000 people are expected to participate today in a march sponsored by some 40 area groups protesting U.S. intervention in El Salvador, said Pete Bohmer, a march co-ordinator.

"It'll be one of the largest demonstrations in the area in years," Bohmer said.

Bohmer said the purpose of the march is to show protest to U.S. intervention in El Salvador. "We want to show that a large number of people are not going to sit idly by," he said.

The program begins at 2 p.m. in front of the Student Union Building with brief solidarity statements by the committee members. At 2:30 p.m. the march will begin by going through campus towards Southwest and down to Fearing St., then over to North Pleasant Street, and through the center of town to the Amherst Commons.

The marchers plan to arrive at the Commons at about 3:15 p.m. where they expect to be joined by a few hundred more people from the Amherst area and the other colleges.

Many students at Hampshire College have asked to have classes cancelled for the afternoon.

A rally will begin at 3:30 p.m. on the Commons. The speakers will include Eqbal Ahmad, Rev. Charles Kimball, and a speaker from the Western Mass. Latin America Solidarity Committee.

In the event of rain a teach-in will be held in the Campus Center Auditorium from 2 to 5 p.m.

Bohmer said there will be a much larger demonstration in Northampton on April 25, and a "long series of protests" are being organized, he said.

The organizers are considering other courses of action, including teach-ins, and letters to the editor. They also hope to persuade schools, community organizations, churches and labor unions to take a stand against U.S. intervention in El Salvador.

Dismissal recommended for candy counter suit

An attorney for 40 University of Massachusetts students who filed a suit against the University yesterday said he will not object to a court-appointed fact-finder's recommended dismissal of the case.

Legal Services Attorney Michael Pill said the suit, accomplished his goal of pressuring University officials to act on construction problems in many campus buildings.

The suit, filed in Hampshire Superior Court Jan. 22, claims the Board illegally approved dormitory rent hikes and the construction of a $47,000 mini-store in the Student Union Lobby without the required approval of the UMass Building Authority.

Pill said that although specific complaints in the case became moot after the Authority approved the rent increase at its meeting Feb.19, the suit forced the Authority to meet for the first time in 15 months.

He also said because the Authority scheduled another meeting for April 2, students may have an administrative channel to voice concerns about construction defects in campus buildings.

The Authority has asked Gov. Edward King to fill the vacancies on the nine-member panel insuring regular quorum.

The Authority was charged with the construction of campus dining commons, dormitories, the Campus Center and Parking Garage worth $80 million. All have been plagued by problems from leaking roofs to cracking walls.

In Hampshire Superior Court yesterday Pill and University counsel Sidney Myers suggested several wording changes in the fact-finder's or master's report but did not contend the recommendation.

Kocot-Mangan detail plans of council housing hotline

By PAUL BASKEN
Collegian Staff

Student Government Association co-presidents-elect Kevin Mangan and Larry Kocot yesterday said they plan to establish a presidential council and a residential hotline to further student involvement in campus government. The SGA co-presidents discussed these goals and other plans in a Collegian interview this week.

Mangan said the presidential council will consist of both SGA co-presidents and various presidential area government members and will involve all university students. The council would operate on a continuous three week cycle in which the co-presidents would gather student input on issues affecting them and the campus. ween the co-presidents and area government representatives to exchange ideas. Council members would then go to the individual residents areas the following week for further student discussion. Mangan said he and Kocot would hold a meeting the third week with any University students interested in further consideration of the issues.

Kevin Mangan

Mangan said the council is part of a plan to avoid becoming "so heavily involved in politics, you forget about the student."

The residential hotline, will be a direct phone line set up by the president's office for students with complaints concerning the residential halls to call and get action.

He said SGA knowledge of campus operations can and should assist students who "do not know where to look." Kocot said students need to have a clear path to follow in the settlement of dormitory housing disputes.

Mangan stressed the importance of reducing the cost of attending school, and said he was concerned that students do not fully realize the seriousness of warnings. "When they get their financial aid statement in the mail...that is going to wake up a lot of people. Not until it hits people directly do they notice," he said.

Kocot explained that a 20 percent tuition hike proposed by the Board of Regents would not only force many students to drop out of school, but also raise board costs for students remaining in school who will pay increased rates to compensate for the resulting vacancies in dormitories.

He said the justification given for the tuition increase is that it is the only way to receive increased funding from the state. Kocot countered this argument by claiming the University has not received a state budget increase since 1976. Undergraduate tuition in that period has increased 150 percent.

Kocot also stated his plans for changing the core requirement and keeping intact the pass/fail option.

He confirmed plans to attempt to eliminate the rule prohibiting a student from fulfilling a core requirement with a class from within their major.

Kocot also reaffirmed his support of the pass/fail option. He refuted a claim that the pass/fail option prevents students with a serious interest in a class from registering in it due to the presence of students brows-

Southwest Assembly appoints new co-presidents.

By KATHLEEN HOWLEY
Collegian Staff

The Executive Council of the Southwest Assembly unanimously voted Sunday to appoint Ruth Mazzola and James Budreau as Assembly co-Presidents. The appointment must be confirmed in the assembly by a two thirds vote.

Mazzola has served as Assembly President with Kevin Mangan, who was recently elected co-President of the Student Government Association. Mangan will resign his Southwest presidency Thursday night to fill his new position.

Mazzola was a losing candidate in the SGA presidential elections held last week

According to the constitution of the assembly Mazzola could continue as sole president until the election of new officers in three weeks.

Mazzola said the appointment of Budreau, current co-vice-President of the assembly, would open a position for a new vice-President and "keep, the assembly strong."

"It was decided among the executive staff, Mazzola said. "The vote was unanimous because of his (Budreau's) experience."

Budreau has been a member of the assembly for two years, and has served, with Nancy Phillips, as co-vice-President for three semesters.

Mazzola said the assembly will consider Thursday night revising the constitution to include a position on the executive staff for an information coordinator. The coordinator would be appointed by the Executive Council and confirmed by a two-thirds vote of the assembly.

Mazzola said the coordinator would chair the Southwest Issues Team, and serve as a liaison to the Student Center of Educational Research and Advocacy.

Mazzola said she was not sure if she would run in the Southwest presidential elections in three weeks.

"It depends on who's running," she said.

U.S. embassy in El Salvador attacked by rifle fire.

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador — Two unidentified men with automatic rifles fired 10 shots at the U.S. Embassy here as they rode past in a small pickup truck yesterday, an embassy spokesman reported. No damage or injuries were reported.

It was the second time this month that gunmen attacked the heavily fortified U.S. mission in this violence-torn capital. U.S. officials blamed the earlier shooting, also carried out from a passing vehicle, on extreme rightists who want to bring down the American-supported civilian-military junta governing El Salvador.

Bill proposed to provide tax credit for tuition costs.

BOSTON — State Rep. William F. Galvin, D Boston, said yesterday that "equity demands" state income tax credits for people who send their children to private schools.

Galvin has filed a bill, scheduled for a hearing before the Legislature's Taxation Committee on Wednesday, providing credits of up to $250 per student.

"The bill is broadly structured and probably too expensive as it stands," he said, but credits of at least $50 per student should be available.

Senate delays planned vote on elimination of dairy price hikes

WASHINGTON—President Reagan's economic program yesterday faced its first test on either floor of Congress as the Senate took up, then delayed, his proposed elimination of an April 1 hike in dairy price supports.

A planned vote on the measure was put off when Republican majority failed to muster enough strength to reject proposed amendments out of hand. Majority Leader Howard Baker Jr. of Tennessee called off any further roll calls, apparently in a bid to regroup GOP forces for another attempt Wednesday.

Directed by
Orsen Welles

Considered by many to be a perfect film, possibly the best American film of all time, Citizen Kane is a compelling, fascinating study of powerful newspaper tycoon Charles Foster Kane, played by Orsen Welles. Welles produced, directed, and co-wrote this extraordinary cinematic tour de force, patterning his character after William Randolph Hearst.

BOG results late, worker apathy cited

By GREG VOLPE
Collegian Staff

Lack of involvement by many Campus Board of Governors (BOG) in recent Board proceedings, was cited last night by some Board members as the principle reason why the BOG election results have not been completed.

As of press time, just over 50 percent of the results had been tabulated, and only four out of the 19 Board positions had been determined, since the campus-wide SGA/BOG elections ended last Wednesday night.

Peter Lucas, present BOG treasurer, said one of the major reasons why the Board has been having problems in tabulating results is that members are not helping with the process.

"The problem is that people on the Board have been ditching us. The Board has simply not been working as diligently as in the past, and I think part of the reason for this, is that vacation is coming up and mid-terms are taking up a lot of their time," he said.

Lucas also cited more serious problems, which he says have affected this election as well as other actions the Board has taken in the past two weeks.

"Although, there is a definite backbone to the Board of some strong, hard working members, there are also some members, in the past few weeks, who have been slacking off and have just absolved themselves from the Board. They've just washed their hands of us (BOG)," he said.

Martha Casey, ex-BOG vice chairperson, agreed with Lucas' assessment of the Board's problems, and said that part of the present problems could be a result of an underlying feeling of "apathy" among some members.

"We've been working hard to regain power as a board, and there's a definite need for more active involvement among members. It's real upsetting when things like this happen," she said.

Correction

On page one of yesterday's (March 17) Collegian, it was incorrectly reported in the headline and story "Strikers receive fines" that five University of Massachusetts students received $25 fines on trespassing charges and a sixth on a wanton destruction of property in connection with last October's strike at Amherst Nursing Home. The six were required to pay $25 in court costs, not fines.

It was also incorrectly reported that the students pleaded guilty to the charges. No pleas were entered. The cases were continued to June 1 without a finding.

Dean's List to be restored pending approval

By CARLA LESH
Collegian Staff

The Deans List, a long-time academic institution may be coming back to the University of Massachusetts because of a proposal started by the local Isogon Chapter of Mortor Board, a national honor society.

"We felt the Dean's List was something the school should have. We hope it will promote school spirit and academic incentive," said Alexander Hamilton, co-chairman of the Deans List committee of the Mortor Board.

If the Faculty Senate approves it, the Deans List will be published sometime this April for the fall 1980 semester said Dean of Students William Field.

The Deans list would be published every semester in the Collegian and in the home town newspapers of the students pending Faculty Senate approval, Field said.

Any undergraduate student who has earned a 3.5 grade point average and is a full time student would qualify for the Deans List, Field said. Students who do not want their names published need only tell the Dean of Students office, he added.

The Deans List was stopped in the early 1970's when the grading method changed and F's were not counted against a student's GPA, Field said. "It was possible to get on the Deans List if you had four F's and an A because the F's were not counted against you.

"At one time seven pages of names were published in the Collegian, if your grades were bad enough you got on the Deans list. It got ridiculous so we stopped publishing the list," Field said.

The Deans List will give more people a chance to be recognized for their academic achievment, Field said.

"Even is someone has a lousy freshman year they will be able to make it up in their sophmore year," he said.

Field estimates 14 percent of the undergraduate population is elgible for the fall 1980 Deans List.

"I hope this will improve the university's image. I think the time is right to reinstate the Dean's List," he said.

SGA endorses coalition to fight tuition increases

By MALCOLM CAMPBELL
Collegian Correspondent

Members of the University of Massachusetts Undergraduate Student Senate Coordinating Committee last night endorsed the formation of a student coalition to combat proposed tuition increases, and budget cuts.

"The coalition is seeking the common denominator for all students, the threat to an accessible institution which offers a quality education," said Linda Geary, speaker of the senate. Geary believes that the increase for UMass students could be from 17 to 20 percent, or about $170 per student per year.

Governor Edward J. King's proposed budget for fiscal year 1982, beginning in July of this year, is $5.6 million below the University's requested budget of $91.7 million.

In addition to the budget cut, the Board of Regents will meet early next month to vote on suggested tuition increases for all of the state's colleges and universities in order to raise $12 million for the state's higher education budget, according to Assistant Chancellor Marie McDemmond.

McDemmond said that so far there has been no indication of how the Regents will vote, although King is "interested in increasing revenues."

The coalition, which is as yet unnamed, will be built around five areas of student concern: tuition increases, budget cuts, financial aid cuts, affirmative action, and student representation on the Board of Regents, Geary said. Individual task forces will be created to deal with each separate issue.

Ken Moore, chairperson of the senate's public policy committee, is a strong supporter of the coalition which already has the backing of several student organizations such as the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy, and the Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group.

"When we have such a large number of people we gain in flexability. When an issue comes to a head, the coalition provides backup, and it can push resources into the committees when each reaches a crisis point," Moore said.

"We are hoping for continuity into the following semesters. These issues come up every year, they are not going to go away," Geary said.

Geary said that there is an organizational meeting planned for March 30 at 4 p.m. She said that they are trying to recruit all student group which have an "organizational effort or energy" in order to create the broadest base of student support and participation as is possible.

Smith professor urges women to organize and work for change

By LISA PEDULLA
Collegian Correspondent

Women in the workplace must take an active part on all levels and organize themselves, an economics and labor relations professor told a group of about 30 at Smith College last Friday night.

Susan Woods, of the Smith and University of Massachusetts faculties, conducted a discussion entitled "Where Are the Women in the Unions?" as part of Smith's celebration of Women's History Week.

Lack of organization is the "leading factor contributing to the conditions in which women work," Woods said.

Issues such as sexual harassment, child care and maternity leaves are not negotiated in most union contracts, Woods said. She said women should push for these demands.

While unions can provide health insurance, pensions and job dignity for women, they can also be dangerous, Woods said.

"Male unions as they exist today are male institutions which reflect male values," she said.

In the past, women have been discouraged from attending meetings, Woods said. Now, however, unions have turned to women to help strengthen the organizations where memberships are declining.

Woods said women must help change these organizations; not merely be absorbed in them.

Historically, Woods said, white male workers have gone on strike to keep women and minority workers off jobs. Precautions must be taken against such strategies, she added.

Women's caucuses have been organized in some places to address these problems, Woods said.

The discussion, sponsored by the Sophia Smith Collection of the Smith Library, was part of an endowed lectureship in the name of Florence Simms, a woman who helped organize working women in unions.

In his master's report, Springfield Attorney Frank Uman recommended dismissal of the case stating that the trustees had acted within their powers by approving the hikes and construction.

Uman was appointed master by Superior Court Judge Raymond Cross at a Feb. 5 hearing in the case.

On Feb. 18, Uman received evidence submitted by Pill and Myers.

His findings issued in a draft report earlier this month, concluded that the Trustees may act as an agent of the Building Authority matters concerning rents, student fees, and construction.

No date was set for the next hearing in the case.

The 'Spell' of Blue Magic

By DEIRDRE EARL

March 14, 1981, The Black Student Union of Amherst College gave their annual Spring Caberet featuring the enchanting wizardry of Blue Magic.

After a moment of silent recognition for our children in Atlanta, the crowd was entertained by The Magic of The Blue (Magics' five piece traveling band). Shortly afterwards, the M.C. Michael Randolph announced the arrival of Blue Magic.

Consistent with the artistic majesty of such groups as the Temptations, and the Delfonics, Blue Magic demonstrated the dedication of serious artists.

Clad in white on white with white, the five members of Blue Magic appeared on stage. The group, Vernon Sawyer, Wendall Sawyer, Richard Prat, Ted "Wizard" Mills, and Keith Benton began the hypnotic evening with "Spell." Instantly, the audience was captivated. From that moment on, Blue Magic continued to prove that "in order to get it, you have to give it."

Consistent with the artistic majesty of such groups as The Temptations, and The Delfonics, Magic demonstrated the dedication of serious artists. Their carefully correographed steps, their pelting delivery, and their ever so important message was evident in every song. The audience was quick to respond to Magics' plea for love and togetherness.

"Women, you've got to keep your heads together and your men in your hearts. Brothers you've got to watch out for your ladies, care for them, and let there be love between you."

Following the performance, NUMMO and Black Affairs went backstage and discovered that Blue Magic has big plans for the future. After their Saturday night performance, Blue Magic plans to go on tour to introduce their new album which will be released April 1, 1981. The group has been putting the album together for the last four months. The album "Welcome Back" will be released under Capital records as the group tours in the Carribean, and California. Hopefully, Blue Magic will have another release in 1982.

The Residents
Commercial Album* (Ralph)

What a bargain! Ralph Records presents The Residents Commercial Album. Forty—count 'em—forty one-minute gems. Each and every song is guaranteed to stick like peanut butter to the roof of your memory.

The Residents have pulled out all the stops. This album has tons of commerical appeal; and it manages to sacrifice not one iota of the Residents' unique sound.

It's also a lot of fun.

Each song features something different. One man's house is on fire; but he won't leave, saying "My Work Is So Behind." Lene Lovich (or a skilled imitator) is recruited for the bouncy "Picnic Boy." "Suburban Bathers" is a song for factory workers on holiday in loud Bermuda shorts. And machines get to churn out fun during "Margaret Freeman."

The Residents love to tweak a mundane scheme of things.

Yesterday my second wife fell in the afternoon Slipped into hysteria and talked about the moon This was only temporary, so the doctor said So I watched a football game and she went off to bed .

The Residents Commercial Album is perfect for listening to closely, or as background music for washing dishes. As Ralph Records says, "Let the strangeness wear off through a couple of plays. Soon you too will whistle the merry tunes."

EDITORIAL/OPINION

'I think you should know'

Dear Mom and Dad,

I am writing because I'm doing something I think you should know about, and I wanted to be the one to tell you about it.

To be honest, I'm really worried that you're not going to like what I'm doing or understand where I'm coming from, but something important is happening in my life and I want to share it with you.

Jackson Katz

You see, I'm starting to get involved in the new anti-war movement. I'm going to march and rally today against U.S. involvement in El Salvador, and I'm sure that this is only the beginning.

When they reinstated draft registration last summer, I though it was a symbolic thing to show the Russians that we were serious about using military force to protect our interests. I didn't think registration was any big deal, and I really didn't think we'd have to worry about a draft, but things have changed a lot since then. I'm really worried now.

In the past few months, all those conservative right-wing big shots have been talking about how Vietnam is ancient history and that we can forget about it once and for all. But I can't forget. This thing with El Salvador is just like Vietnam happening all over again.

Just look at what's going on. Reagan's sending millions of dollars in weapons and hundreds of "advisers" to support a military-backed elite government against a popular leftist movement. That's exactly what Kennedy and Johnson were doing in the early sixties. If we don't stop this thing now, we may soon be sending troops to El Salvador. Once that happens, they'll start the draft up again, and it'll be Vietnam all over again.

Sure, this is the eighties, not the sixties, but the issues aren't all that different. Only the names and places have changed. And if there's one thing we learned from Vietnam, it's that we can't trust what the government or the media tells us. Kennedy, then Johnson, then Nixon, lied and lied to us about the war. Why should we think for a minute that Reagan's not lying to us now?

I can't just sit back while all this is happening. In the sixties, young men were dying for years before the rest of the country woke up. How can we let that happen again? Haven't we learned anything from that experience?

This time, we don't have to wait until young men are dying to stop this thing. You know that famous saying "if we don't learn from history, we're surely condemned to repeat it?" That's why I'm getting involved now.

Things are now sort of like they were with Vietnam in the early sixties. People are organizing teach-ins, showing films, and generally just trying to raise the people's awareness of what's going on in El Salvador. Call it radical if you want to, but what it is is just a lot of concerned people trying to make sure that we don't have to re-live the tragedy of Vietnam all over again.

I hope you hear what I'm saying to you, and I hope that you will try to understand why I'm doing what I'm doing. It's not like I enjoy this stuff, or that I'm just on some kick or something. This is a real serious issue, but like you always told me, you have to stand up for what you know is right.

Me and my friends getting drafted and dying in El Salvador isn't right.

U.S. out of El Salvador

The United States is on the verge of a military quagmire in El Salvador. This escalation of a Vietnam-type war, has many dangerous implications toward peace and stability in the world. The danger of the situation is obvious when one considers that the most militaristic, conservative administration since World War II is now in Washington. The media continues to report of up to 100 million dollars being given to one of the bloodiest and brutal regimes in Latin America by the United States. The regime in El Salvador has killed about 13,000 workers, peasants and students in the last year.

El Salvador is a small Central American nation—about the size of Massachusetts. It has a population of about 5 million people. Since 1932, when the government massacred 31,000 peasants (rebelling against economic injustice), a repressive military dictatorship has ruled this country—with total support from Washington.

Today, against the background of bloody repression and an archaic social order locked in crisis, the oppressed masses have organized into a popular movement in order to defend themselves against the U.S. backed military regime.

As a result of this organizing for justice the Revolutionary Democratic Front (FDR) was formed.

However, the Reagan administration has decided to do all that it can to prevent the establishment of a popular government in El Salvador. They do this under the excuse of "fighting communism."

The United States' military budget is projected to be more than one trillion dollars in the coming five years. This is to be combined with budget cuts in the social programs for the unemployed, minority groups, students and the poor in this country. As the living conditions of the working class in this country deteriorate, big business extracts huge profits from the backs of these workers and third world people.

Considering the growing danger of military involvement in El Salvador and Central America, it is of necessity that the American people protest U.S. military involvement in El Salvador and to support the right of self determination for the Salvadorean people.

For this reason we strongly urge the people in this area to attend a rally and march as a protest to U.S. aid to the genocidal regime of El Salvador. The rally begins today at 2 p.m., in front of the Student Union Building.

Protection from a 'sucker punch'

As the manager responsible for training Navy enlisted personnel in the operation of the TRIDENT defensive weapons systems, and a UMass (BS-'58), I felt compelled to respond to Mr. Richard Morrison's letter regarding this vital submarine program.

Since Mr. Morrison believes we can better understand such things as TRIDENT and Hiroshima by the use of meditation, I submit that there are other subjects which might also be worthy of a few seconds of this quiet practice.

Try meditating about how to convince a mugger not to beat on you anymore after he has just given you a "sucker punch" with brass knuckles and you're lying on the ground. Translate and extrapolate that mugger into a country with an incredible nuclear first strike capability.

Think a bit about the joys of living in Poland, or an Afghanistan, or a Hungary, and picture them being instead in Texas, or California, or even Canada. How about the whole U.S.?

Have some deep thoughts about Pearl Harbor, and what a posture of national unpreparedness can do for a country's future...or non-future!

Try envisioning twenty major cities like New York, Chicago, Boston, San Francisco and others flattened and stilled because an aggressor knew that after a first strike, the remaining people would not have the ability to retaliate, and in this one strike, the beginning and the end were simultaneous!

Then meditate on the fact that TRIDENTS are not being built to be used...They are being built so that all out attack or war will never be a logical alternative.

Rape won't go away

On March 15th, we took part in a "Take Back the Night" march at the University of Vermont in Burlington. The march was in reaction to two alleged gang rapes which occurred at a fraternity house there. Although this march was organized to protest a specific incident, the anger and frustration expressed by the 300 women and men who marched was indicative of the anger that has accumulated for years over the unchecked violence against women. Rape is not a problem which is unique to the UVM campus. Rape is prevalent here at UMass as well and its occurrence can no longer be ignored and silenced.

'Killer' has hazardous potential

The game is now called "Survivor." But let's not use any more euphemisms; the game is Killer. The object is to "stalk your opponent and assassinate him. At the same time someone is stalking you," according to the game rules.

We, as students, are not animals. We are mature, intelligent people attending an institution of higher education. As such, we must address not only the game, but also its connotations for and ramifications on the UMass Community.

In a letter to the editor (Collegian, 3/11), the organizers of Killer said, "The insinuation that this game harbors an attitude which perpetrates or sympathizes with violent and brutal acts against women and Third World people is absurd and totally contrary to the intent of the game." We have to realize that there is a big difference between intent and action, depending on the persons involved, the environment and other unforeseen circumstances.

In this game each player gives their picture, address, phone number; type, color, and year of car; bus route, list of locations and times; as well as a class schedule. What if for example you were a female student playing this game. You have a late class on Wednesday night. Afterwards, you have to walk all the way back to your dorm in Southwest. Your opponent knows where your class is and where you are going after it. What would happen if your opponent was a man who wanted more out of this "game?" Do we then call this game "Play Rape?"

What happens if a white student is assigned to "kill" a black student and the black student is hurt? Or visa versa? Then we have a racial incident. Does our community need these problems?

Stuart Sajdak, promoter of this game at UMass, is quoted as having said, "I can't say whether anyone will get hurt. Also that "you learn to be stealthy." Who needs to learn how to steal?

Our University is not a small, controlled environment. The on-campus population alone is 14,000 students. As students there are monay academic and social pressures placed on us. Do we need any more problems to worry about? Do we need any more violence in our community?

Today, as you, my fellow students, are reading this letter, we have the ability and potential to set the standard for all the universities across the country for abolishing this type of game from campuses. Therefore, I am asking for your voice and support, as intelligent human beings living in one community, one student body, to stop this game. The decision is yours.

ing the with security of the option. Calling such a situation "one in a hundred," Kocot said he understood the need of the majority of students to sample classes.

Mangan said he will begin immediate work to represent the student mandate support of coed bathrooms. Mangan expressed displeasure with the proposal forcing a situation on students which they have rejected. He said he has applied to Channel 40 for air time to reply to the station's recent editorial broadcast, in which station management supported single-sex bathrooms and dismissed the controversy as "another thing students are protesting."

Kocot and Mangan said they will continue work on all of these issues before taking office April 1. Kocot reported receiving "full cooperation" from current co-presidents Rich LaVoice and Rich Moran, and said he "looked forward to a smooth transition."

CARP protests porn and film 'Emmanuel.'

Campus representatives of the Collegiate Association for the Research of Principles, an organization connected with Sun Myung Moon's Unification Church, yesterday said they plan to protest tonight's showing of the film "Emmanuel" in the Campus Center.

CARP member Richard Panzer said his organization, along with "several" others, will be picketing and handing out leaflets against pornographic films. Panzer declined to identify the "other groups concerned."

"We don't want to infringe on people's rights to see the film," Panzer said, adding that the protest would condemn "a multi-billion dollar industry that exploits people."

GQ II takes it from Bears in double OT, 59-55

By STEPHEN FREKER AND DONNA SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

If you enjoy roller coaster rides, Russian roulette, NFL sudden death overtime games and reruns of the 1976 Boston Celtics Phoenix Suns playoff series, then you would have had a great time last night at Boyden gym for the intramural basketball semifinal playoff game between the defending champion GQII and the Bad News Bears.

A standing-room crowd of 300 roaring IM hoop followers witnessed the classic emotion-filled barn burner as GQII outlasted the Bears, 59-55, in a double overtime marathon.

"It's gonna come down to the last five minutes," GQ II guard-forward Ray Murphy said, about an hour before the game last night.

Murphy, who should consider taking a part-time job as a fortune-teller, could not have predicted a more accurate finish to this pre-championship slugfest, although the game could have been decided in the last five seconds. Twice.

With two ticks left on the clock, the Bears' Marc Thompson was pushed while in the act of shooting. He stepped up to the free throw line and GQ's Garry Pearson started his helicopter windup with his arm over his head. The crowd roared and Thompson couldn't connect.

The finish of the first overtime period was a carbon copy. Bears guard Larry Powers was tripped at midcourt with six seconds left and his team down, 50-49. He hit the first to knot the score, but the second shot rolled off the front of the rim and Pearson yanked down the board. Double overtime.

The second overtime period began with a two point bomb from the corner by Ray Murphy. Murphy, who had Larry Bird like stats, (12 pts., 16 rebs., 7 assists) was instrumental in maintaining GQ's composure on the hardwood. It's pretty tough to stay calm when your team has an acute case of fumbleitis with your passes, but Murphy didn't seem to mind at all.

It took two consecutive follow-up layups by GQ's Jackson (the second, an exaggerated fall-away that ended up with Wilbur sprawled on top of two Bears) to ice the victory. Jackson was an iron-man in this hoop war. He played the entire game, scored 20 points, and ripped down 14 boards, many of them on the defensive.

GQ II's Ray Murphy (white shirt) looks for a rebound in last night's intramural semifinal. GQ II won the double overtime game 59-55 to move into tonight's final.

GQ led throughout most of the first half on the strength of Pearson jumpers and drives by Murphy. Bob Good hit for seven of thirteen points to keep the Bears close, as GQ led 17-11 at the break.

Bears forward Kenny Fulgham decided to do some damage in the second half. He took complete control of the game for a six minute stretch, grabbing boards, tipping in layups and dishing off for more Bears points. Almost singlehandedly, Fulgham got the Bears into the lead, 41-37, with 1:45 left in regulation, before fouling out. Bob Seltzer, who was high man for the Bears with 20 quiet points, picked up the slack, hitting three form-perfect jumpers to keep his team afloat.

GQ will defend its crown against Horsefeathers tonight at 5:45 p.m. in the championship final.

Mike Shea calmy dropped two free throws with seconds left to play to assure the Horsefeathers of a 44-42 victory last night over Pink Steel to propel his team into tonight's matchup with GQ. Bill Shea scored 15 for Horsefeathers while Mike Shea finished with 13.

In one women's semifinal, Low Budget started the second half down by just one 14-13. The second half belonged to the height of the Combinations though, as they held Low Budget to only four points while scoring 20 for a 34-17 rout and a chance to play for the title tonight.

Carol Progulske sunk all of her nine points in the first half including a four-point midway through the first half, that gave Low Budget an 8-6 lead that was held until just before halftime.

Combinations' Carole Crowley (game high scorer with 10 points) stole the lead with 15 seconds left in the half, and from there the Combinations continued to jack up the score until the final whistle sounded.

The Combinations will be playing the Buckos tonight at 7:45. The Buckos, led by Paula Murphy's 11 points, edged the Whimps 33-27 last night.

In the Co-Rec final, Carole Crowley sunk both free throws with three seconds remaining in the game to snap a tie and give Parkside under a 44-42 win over the Crowdpleasers.

Ubiquity will go against Education in tonight's grad-fac final at 6:45. Education's Tom Cafaro mauled LARP, pumping in 24 points in the 72-32 embarrassment. Ubiquity outscored the Wobblies 51-31 to gain the championship berth.

Weightlifting: Fact and myth

By MIKE ESTRADA
Collegian Staff

Editors note: This is the second in a three-part series.

Weightlifting is an activity with a personal nature.

Improvement is marked not by advancement in a nationwide, evaluative council or association because none exists.

Those men and women who become weightlifting instructors in the General Physical Education Department are not expected to show certification, like a Water Safety Instruction Certificate to teach lifesaving. Instructors are chosen, GPE director Chet Gladchuck said, for their experience at weight clubs and recreational areas and for a knowledge of the activity shown in a screening situation.

Clearly, those students who take conditioning and weight training courses are not just enrolled to earn an easy grade, Gladchuck said.

One question in the GPE's mid-semester evaluation asks the student why the course was chosen. The choices are 1) to participate in an activity for credit, 2) to learn an activity or 3) to earn an easy credit by just making the attendance requirement.

'Lifting alone won't gain weight, nor can you live just by the scale.'
—Bob Seltzer

"In Fall, 1980," Gladchuck said," only 1.5 percent answered number three, to earn an easy elective or grade."

"That means 95 percent of those who took the activity wanted to participate or learn. Minus the 30 percent who were there just to participate, and you get 65 percent of those who enrolled were there to learn the physical activity."

Weightlifting has the potential to be detrimental to the physique if proper techniques and correct training methods are not applied. The personal nature of the activity also promotes myths of what body building and weight training can and cannot do.

Bob Seltzer, a weight training instructor while an undergraduate at the university, now teaches a class at the Hampshire Fitness Center.

Seltzer, who said he has "concentrated on developing a program for people who have never lifted before," outlined some of the more common myths about weightlifting.

The first misconception is that weightlifting and weight training is not for women. While most women do not have the hormones to produce large muscles, Seltzer said, proper training can produce desirable muscle tone and conditioning. In fact, he added, there are more women in the United States training with weights (at fitness centers such as Gloria Stevens) than men.

The second most popular myth is that men aspiring to be proficient weightlifters must, by nature, be big and bulky.

"Actually the strongest guys are the lightweight lifters," Seltzer said. While every man does not have the genes to produce large muscles the lighter trainers have the potential to be "a lot stronger pound for pound," he said.

"A lot of it is genetic. If a body builder does not have the genes, the hormones or the potential to be big, he can't do it."

The relationship between body weight and weightlifting has produced another set of myths.

Every human is born, Seltzer explained, with a certain number of fat cells. The size, and not the number of these fat cells changes with diet and exercise.

Diet or exercise alone will not produce as complete an effect on the body as both together because of the relationship between fat cells and muscle fiber. The serious body builder seeks to decrease the size of the fat cells through diet while increasing the size of muscle fibers through exercise. The combined effect is well-formed musculature.

"Lifting along won't gain weight, not can you live just by the scale," Seltzer said.

To say a well-developed body builder will go fat when workouts stop is not necessarily true. When the muscles are no longer exercised regularly, they atrophy, or become smaller. Only if the body builder continues to eat the same amounts of food as the training days will enlarged fat tissues replace muscle.

"A true measure of how strong you are is actually your percentage of body fat," Seltzer said. Found through an exercise science examination (done in a tank of water at Boyden) the proper percentage of body fat for men is 15-18 percent and 22-25 percent for women.

Another myth is that the more often a person lifts, the better. Most muscles, Seltzer said, need 48 hours to rest because of the physics involved.

When working out, blood rushes to the muscle fiber. Simply put, the muscle rips and bleeds and needs time to repair itself. To keep tearing the same muscles by working the same body parts each day could cause irrepairable damage.

Weightlifting, finally, is not just an activity for the young. "There are no age barriers at all, but an older person should see a doctor first," Seltzer said.

He said that in the class he taught at the Hampshire Fitness Center there were 50-60-year-old persons who were lifting weights.

"The best lifter was a 60-year-old woman," Seltzer said. "She could lift more weight than a lot of the men."

1,200 march for El Salvador

UMass Graduate student Peter Bohmer helps lead about 1,200 supporters through campus towards Amherst Common during yesterday's El Salvador Rally.

About 1,200 students and townspeople marched on the Amherst Town Common yesterday protesting American involvement in El Salvador.

Chanting "no draft, no war, U.S. out of El Salvador," and several other slogans, the protesters formed a quarter-mile long procession from the University of Massachusetts campus to the center of town, where an hour-long rally was held.

UMass and Amherst police blocked off traffic along the 1.5 mile arch route while protesters carried signs and banners declaring "U.S. out of El Salvador," "Your proof is vague Gen. Haig," and "Reagan's war El Salvador. Stop the murder of the poor," plus others.

While marching through campus, workers in the Whitmore Administration Building and students in the Southwest dormitories lined the windows to watch the march. While passing by Southwest on Sunset Avenue, the marchers began chanting, "Out of the dorms and into the streets."

The protesters encountered both encouragement and some hostility along the way. While some motorists honked their horns in support of the rally, other people insulted the marchers. As the group passed MacKimmie dormitory, a group of students hung a U.S. Marines' recruiting poster out the window while playing a recording of the "Ballad of the Green Berets."

On the Town Common, the crowd gathered to listen to the band Bright Morning Star perform. People climbed trees to watch the protests and one group carried a cardboard coffin containing a "gold" body.

Peter Bohmer, an organizer of the 43 groups from area colleges and communities which participated in the march, compared the protest to those during the Vietnam War.

"There has been a lot of parallels with the Vietnam War, the same justification, same situation and the same kinds of people," said Bohmer, 36, a UMass graduate student and member of the Western Massachusetts Latin American Solidarity Committee. "This (rally) just really shows the extent of opposition to U.S. intervention in El Salvador," Bohmer said.

At a rally preceeding the March in front of the UMass Student Union Building, representatives from area groups, including 10-year-old Lisa Coons and her sisters Michelle, 8, students from the Che Lumumba Elementary school on campus, denounced U.S. intervention in the Latin American nation.

"We send our love to the children of El Salvador. We are the future together. Power to the people," Lisa Coons said.

Other groups involved in the rally and march included the UMass Students Against the Draft, the Commuter Collective, Student Coalition Against Nukes Nationwide, the UMass Office of Third World Affairs, the Progressive Student Network and others.

Rev. Peter Sabey, of the UMass United Christian Foundation and the Hunger Task Force, listed about 10 religious groups which have condemned U.S. intervention and said the clergy would continue to stay involved in the effort, as it did during the Vietnam War.

"God has two names — love and justice. What the U.S. is doing in El Salvador has nothing to do with love and certainly has nothing to do with justice," Sabey said. "The religious community, this time around, is waking up and speaking out."

Amidst the anti-U.S. intervention banners carried by protesters in front of the Student Union Building, a group of four members of the Collegiate Association for the Research of Principles (CARP) stood holding signs declaring "Communism is a cop-out," and "Most Communists want the U.S. out so they can go in to El Salvador."

Myles Cavanagh, who identified himself as a UMass student and a CARP member, said the group wanted to make their feelings known.

"I think the alternative to U.S. withdrawal is more Soviet Vietnamese and Cuban support, which would mean another Marxist takeover and oppression of human rights far greater than exists now," Cavanagh said. "We're going to stand up for what's right."

Other UMass students expressed various reasons for participating in the rally.

"I received a leaflet and I learned more about it (El Salvador)," said Gail McCrosky, a freshman living in Van Meter South dormitory. "I didn't know any of the details. I came to find out and learn more. Every extra person helps."

Chancellor announces action against harassment

By DEBORAH ASBRAND

Chancellor Henry Koffler yesterday announced a series of clear cut and stringent measures of action intended to toughen regulations on acts of racism, sexism, and anti-Semitism occurring on the University of Massachusetts' Amherst campus.

"We will act decisively and use the means at hand to the fullest," Koffler said in a two-page statement. "Clear cut measures must prohibit ethnic, racial, religious and sexual forms of harassment."

> "We will act decisively and use the means at hand to the fullest...clear cut measures must prohibit ethnic, racial, religious and sexual forms of harassment."

Koffler said he has asked Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Dennis L. Madson to prepare specific courses of action that will be taken against students found to be involved in any of these forms of harassment, with suspension from the University being the penalty in cases of serious violations.

Koffler's actions follow the release of the first report of the Chancellor's Commission on Civility in Human Relations, established in December 1979 to study the increasing incidences of anti-social behavior on the Amherst campus.

In response to the commission's recommendation on the establishment of an Office of Human Relations, Koffler

Lee elected speaker of senate; Goldman voted as treasurer

By KATHLEEN HOWLEY
Collegian Staff

Edward Lee was elected speaker of the Undergraduate Student Senate last night in a secret ballot vote requiring two-thirds support of the senate. Richard Goldman, who ran unopposed, was elected Treasurer by a voice vote.

Lee was opposed by Ken Moore, chair of the public policy committee.

Lee, 22, a junior majoring in public health, is a veteran senator of two years. He was an unsuccessful candidate in the recent Student Government Association presidential elections.

Lee said he believes there should be an increase of student input into academic and residential decisions.

"I want to approach the administration with a different attitude. We should be assertive," Lee said.

Lee said he wanted to initiate a "revitalization" of student interest in the SGA.

"We're talking about outreach," Lee said. "I want to turn students on to what student government is all about."

Lee said he sees a need for "solidarity in the senate" and said he would like to develop a process for the senate to evaluate itself.

Goldman, 20, a junior majoring in accounting, has served in the senate for one year and has worked with the treasurer's office as a liason from the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy. He is a member of the Academic Affairs Committee and a resident assistant in James House.

Goldman said he wanted to maintain student control over student funds and "work well with the administration."

"As an accounting major I have the knowledge to deal with the administration," Goldman said, "...but the main thing I'd like to see is good communication with the students. The treasurer's office should be used as a resource by the students."

In other business, the senate unanimously approved the Community Day budget of $169,625 with an additional 10 percent for leeway in the Union Program Council (UPC) decision making.

The senate also approved the SGA presidential election results after a presentation by Jim Murphy, chair of the Governmental Affairs Committee.

Senate votes on proposed benefit cuts

By DAVID ESPO
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Senate Budget Committee, in virtual lockstep with President Reagan's economic program, took aim at Social Security, unemployment and welfare benefits yesterday as it neared completion of its guidelines for congressional spending cuts.

On a party line vote of 11-9, the panel's Republicans defeated a Democratic move to budget $1 billion for the $255-a-month minimum Social Security benefits Reagan wants to abolish.

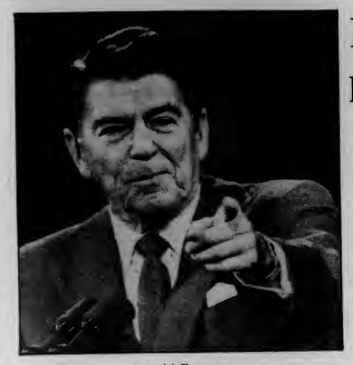
On the same roll call, the committee turned aside a proposal to spend almost $1 billion more on student Social Security benefits than the president is recommending.

By an even bigger vote of 14 to 4, the committee rejected a move by Sen. Donald Riegle, D-Mich., to soften Reagan's proposal for $1.2 billion in cuts in unemployment benefits beyond the regular 26 weeks.

The votes were strong indications the committee would back Reagan's call for more than $8 billion in cuts in welfare, Social Security, unemployment and other social programs when the roll was called.

But it was unclear whether the committee would back Reagan's plea not to change the system of automatic increases in Social Security benefits to account for inflation.

In addition, the committee faced decisions on cuts in public service employment, mass transit and other programs long popular in Congress as it reviewed Reagan's proposals for $48.6 billion in reductions in the 1982 budget he inherited from former President Jimmy Carter.



Ronald Reagan

The panel recommended $12.5 billion in cuts in its first day of work on Tuesday, departing infrequently from Reagan's blueprint. Sen. Peter Domenici, RN.M., the chairman, said he hoped the committee could complete its work by the end of the day.

Meanwhile, Budget Director David A. Stockman, in an appearance before the Senate Finance Committee, again defended the president's economic forecasts and discounted an estimate by congressional economists who said the administration has underestimated 1982 federal spending by as much as $25 billion.

Reagan dumps policy of arms sales

By R. GREGORY NOKES
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Former President Jimmy Carter's policy of minimizing global arms sales has been reversed by the Reagan administration, which argues that military security can help build healthy minds in friendly nations.

It is partly for this reason, says Undersecretary of State James L. Buckley, that President Reagan is asking Congress to approve a sharp increase in military aid and arms sales around the world next year.

A more important reason, of course, is that strengthening the military capability of friendly governments improves the U.S. defense network, too.

Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig, Jr., told the House Committee on Foreign Affairs yesterday that "friendly states we support can themselves help us assure our most vital national interests."

But Buckley, who is in charge of security assistance programs at the State Department, said in an interview Tuesday that the benefits to the local population shouldn't be overlooked.

Buckley, a former Republican senator from New York and the brother of conservative journalist William F. Buckley, said the Carter administration policy of minimizing arms aid, especially in nations where it disapproved of their human rights record, contributed to making matters worse.

"To the extent that people feel an inner sense of security, the less temptation there is to be repressive, and to the extent that the United States withdraws from countries and adds to their feeling of insecurity, to that extent we are apt to encourage an atmosphere where repression will become attractive," he said.

Coal miners threaten to strike; Stalled contract talks continue

More than 6,000 coal miners in Kentucky, West Virginia, Ohio, Pennsylvania and Illinois staged wildcat walkouts yesterday as leaders of their 160,000-member union predicted they would strike nationwide when the contract runs out at midnight March 26.

Unauthorized walkouts by nearly 3,000 miners apparently came in response to the collapse of contract talks in Washington, D.C., according to spokesman for the United Mine Workers union and coal companies.

"It's itchy feet," said Norvel Wagner, a UMW field representative in southern West Virginia, where about 1,000 miners were on strike. "It's close to the end of the contract."

An additional 3,300 miners were off the job yesterday in western Pennsylvania and northern West Virginia in a dispute not directly related to the contract talks. The dispute stemmed from the disciplinary firings Monday of six miners at a U.S. Steel Corp. mine in Kirby, Pa.

Salvadoran government awaits U.S. advisors to train army

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador — Heavy fighting was reported yesterday in a guerrilla-infested area near the Honduran border as the government awaited a final contingent of 12 U.S. advisers to help train the Salvadoran army.

In Washington, D.C., Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. called the guerrilla mission in El Salvador part of a communist "hit list for the ultimate takeover of Central America."

Warplanes backed infantry attacks against guerrillas in the north and northeast, part of a cleanup operation now in its third week, military sources said.

The heaviest action was reported 120 miles east of here near the border with Honduras, according to the military sources who asked anonymity.

One national guardsman was reported killed. The area has been a guerrilla stronghold for two years.

The final 12 of 54 U.S. advisers due here to help train the Salvadoran army are expected to arrive this week, along with four UH1-H helicopters for troop transport.

Cape Island officials propose taxing visitors to offset 2½

BOSTON — Officials on Martha's Vineyard and Nantucket, scrambling to offset the revenue loss of tax-cutting Proposition 2½, are considering a 25 cent head tax on visitors to the resort islands.

Local officials would impose the levy on all ferry and airplane passengers arriving from the mainland. They estimate it could raise more than $500,000 each year for the islands.

The Legislature's Taxation Committee is studying the bill filed by Rep. Howard Cahoon, R-Chatham, who favors taxing island residents as well as tourists arriving by boat or plane.

Shipping strike could cause food shortages in Alaska

SEATTLE — A strike by 1,000 tugboat crewmen in Washington state has brought shipping to a near standstill, and officials warned yesterday that the walkout could cut food supplies to parts of Alaska and spread to other West Coast ports.

The strike over wages and benefits began Tuesday, idling ships in Puget Sound and Alaskan ports. No new negotiations were scheduled.

"What we are proposing is to shut down the entire industry in Washington and Alaska and to expand the strike as necessary," said Don Liddle, Seattle's local president of the Inlandboatmen's Union of the Pacific.

Minister urges reflection of Iranian crisis implications

By STEPHEN M. PORTER
Collegian Correspondent

Praising the peaceful resolution of the Iranian hostage crisis while criticizing the media's handling of it, Charles Kimball, one of the first Americans allowed in Iran to see the hostages, said last night that is is important for this country to reflect upon the crisis and study its implications.

"This is a teachable moment in our history," Kimball said. "What are we prepared to learn?"

Speaking to about 90 people in Mahar Auditorium, Kimball, a Baptist minister who met with, among others, Ayatollah Khomeini, Iranian President Bani-Sadr and the students, criticized the U.S. administration's apparent belief in strong-arm, militaristic solutions to crises.

"We can be sure this will be neither the last nor the most difficult crisis our government will face," Kimball said.

Now is the time to remind those who offer militaristic solutions to crises "that non-violent, diplomatic negotiations do work," he said.

Kimball accused the media of blowing the hostage crisis out of proportion and painting an unrealistic picture of the Iranian people. The media portrayed the Iranians as mobs of crazed people, Kimball said.

"Fully 70 to 80 percent of the people we met wanted to end the hostage crisis peacefully. Most of the people in Iran that I met were not for the continued holding of the hostages.

"In the entire time I was in Iran, seven weeks...not once did I receive so much as a hostile glance from any Iranian. Never. There was never any personal hostility towards us," Kimball said.

Kimball said that Khomeini is not the ranting, raving maniac he is characterized to be by the media.

"I have a great deal of respect for him as a religious leader and as a deeply pious man," Kimball said.

Kimball also said the image Americans have of Khomeini is so bad that one person who interviewed him on the "Good Day" television show "couldn't believe I met Khomeini and lived to tell about it."

Kimball said the hostages applauded former Secretary of State Cyrus Vance when they learned he had resigned because of the aborted rescue attempt. The hostages were angry at former President Jimmy Carter because they felt they had been used as bait, Kimball said.

Condemning U.S. involvement in El Salvador, Kimball said, "The U.S. government is pursuing many policies which have a devastating effect on many people, particularly people in developing countries.

"Simplistic rhetoric and a rapid deployment force are not going to work. The 1980's are not the 1950's," he said.

Kimball said the U.S. could learn a great deal if they would remember the words of the Iranian hotel manager who said, "Please don't forget us. There are 36 million of us here, and we are not crazy. We just want to be free."

Problems of high enrollment face BDIC students

By KEN BAZINET
Collegian Correspondent

Since 1972, the Bachelors Degree in Individual Concentration (BDIC) program has been providing students with alternative majors, but the program is having some problems, says its director, Frank Fata.

"The pressure of high enrollment in marketing and management courses by BDIC students is causing different reactions," said Fata, who added that BDIC students with concentrations in business programs are not getting into courses that are essential to their major.

Professor Chris Allen of the marketing department, who has sponsored several BDIC students, said that programming in marketing courses was "a question of priority."

"Tight budgets, recourse restraints, and a limited faculty are all problems that limit BDIC enrollments," said Allen.

Allen explained that business majors have first priority in course selections, followed by hotel, restaurant, and travel administration majors as well as fashion marketing majors, and then BDIC students are taken.

Fata said that the only way the problem can be halted is "long term compromise between the departments and rational communication."

Fata said that one problem with relations between the two departments is that the business school feels that some BDIC students use the program to "avoid certain requirements."

Fata also said that when the BDIC counselors detect this problem in a students proposal, they are "weeded out."

Allen said that this problem has never occurred with the students that he has sponsored, but that he has knowledge of students that "have particular hang-ups with courses and try to by-pass them by using BDIC."

Allen also said that he would not accept a student if this were the case.

Fata said one out of 10 BDIC applicants are turned away for this reason.

Job opportunities could be scarce this summer

By PAUL GUEST
Collegian Correspondent

Summer job opportunities are going to be more competitive because temporary employment will be in higher demand from the educational budget cuts proposed by President Reagan, according to Janise Fitzpatrick, coordinator of student employment.

"This year a summer job may determine whether a student will continue his or her education," Fitzpatrick said, "this is the time to begin looking."

A student may begin the process of attaining summer employment by getting their name, address, and qualifications into the computer at the Employment Office located at 239A in the Whitmore Administration building.

A person must talk to an employment counselor and give the pertinent information necessary to be matched up with a job by the computer. Such things to consider are job experience, location, and pay scale, Fitzpatrick said.

"Once one is registered with the computer, they are notified immediately once there has been a match up made. In some instances there could be a delay because a particular might not have come in yet," Fitzpatrick said.

Some of the jobs offered are short order cook, waitresses and waiters, house keeping, child care, camp counselor, and construction work to name a few. Also, some of the jobs might coincide with ones major such as landscaping, accountant, computer programming, or water safety instructor.

"The closer you get to Boston or any other city the pay scale goes up," Fitzpatrick said.

Some of the larger companies such as IBM have paid training programs.

There will be a summer job hunting workshop held Thursday, April 2 at the Campus Center in rooms 904-908 from 12 to 1 p.m.

"We will try to give students an idea of jobs out there and try to give leads on who to contact and how to be prepared for an interview," Fitzpatrick said, "we are delighted to help because we want to fill the gap from the educational budget cuts.

"There are jobs all around the country for students in part-time summer employment and JEMS (Jobs Employment Matching System) provides this service," Fitzpatrick said.

For Cape Cod jobs the office has a used a copy of the Cape Cod Times that lists help wanted for hotels and restaurants. For those jobs people are hired on the spot on a first come first serve basis, said Fitzpatrick.

"Employers are very encouraged with past evaluations and have high recommendations for former employees," Fitzpatrick said. "We want to help in planning for a job by providing where to look, how to look, and what companies have to offer and how to go about getting a job," Fitzpatrick said.

The student Employment Office is a part of the Financial Aid Office.

Problems seen in installing cable television on campus

By JOHANNA HOSOM
Collegian Staff

August Lavelli, general manager of Pioneer Valley Cablevision, told the Amherst Board of Selectmen Monday night that there may be problems installing cable television on the University of Massachusetts campus.

If wired internally, he said, it would be connected to the main system, and this would be illegal as students would receive the channel automatically and have no choice in the matter. External wiring is difficult to install, and "would be ugly on modern buildings," Lavelli said.

The UMass Division of Continuing Education has applied for a grant from the National Telecommunications and Information Administration to provide access to cable television for students, as well as allowing the development of a state-wide telecommunications plan which would serve Western Massachusetts.

Lavelli is trying to expand the cable system in the Amherst area, and said he does not see an agreement in the future.

"There is no agreement to install a system, and I don't foresee one in the immediate future. I have been trying this for ten years, and you can see how far I've gotten," he said.

Selectman Donald Routh asked if it would be possible to lower rates throughout the Amherst area due to the increase in revenue from the University students, as opposed to the 25 cents per month increase proposed.

"I don't know," Lavelli answered. "We could look into that."

Pioneer Valley Cablevision is interested in picking up channels 56 or 7 from Boston. It is requesting that the FCC waive a regulation requiring stations within 35 miles be picked up.

"There is a 95 percent possibility that we are technically able to carry 56, and I know that we can pick up 7," said Lavelli.

West German speaks on youth revolt

By STEVE DALY
Collegian Staff

The greatest threat to West Germany is the revolt of the younger generation, not Soviet military strength, the director of an advisory board to the West Germany defense ministry said in a campus lecture Tuesday.

Hans-Adolph Jacobsen, political science professor at the University of Bonn in West Germany, said it is a "policy of contradictions in German politics" that disturbs the younger generation.

"They are no longer ready to accept our value systems," Jacobsen said of the youth. "More and more high school students drop out, or join movements or demonstrations. They understand the contradictions and will not accept them."

Jacobsen said the contradictions concerned a possible reunification of East and West Germany, disarmament and nuclear energy.

"From a German point of view, all politicians must talk about a possible reunification of the Germans," said Jacobsen.

"Basic law demands such a goal," he said, "and realistically there are no chances at all at the moment of unification. Even our western allies are very happy that there are two German states."

Jacobsen, chairman of the German Society for Peace

Wildlife Society deals with wide realm of issues

By TERESA TEETER
Collegian Correspondent

Editor's note: In response to the series on Recognized Student Organizations printed in the Collegian last semester, the series will continue periodically this semester.

RSO
RECOGNIZED STUDENT ORGANIZATIONS

The University of Massachusetts Wildlife Society offers students the chance to go on canoe trips and hawk watches, as well as attending conferences and getting field experience.

The society began as a recognized student organization in 1968 and is a student chapter of the professional Wildlife Society in Washington, D.C.

While once geared towards lectures and academic advancement, the group now aims towards people being active in the organization, said co-President Naomi Edelson.

"Members deal with everything from social to academic to political issues," Edelson said. "This is important because in the wildlife field you have to have field experience."

Two years ago there were only 15 members in the society, but through organization by senior officers, membership has now increased to almost 60 active students, she said.

The Wildlife Society sponsors a variety of projects and activities having to do with wildlife and environmental issues and schedules speakers bi-weekly.

Although they have never received funding before, the society plans to request RSO funds from the Undergraduate Student Senate soon because of new projects they will be undertaking, Edelson said.

One of the special projects the society is working on this semester is creating a diversity of environments in a piece of land on Northeast Street donated to the Department of Forestry and Wildlife by the University.

Area groups seek conditions for condominium conversion

By MARK L. CURELOP
Collegian Staff

The Amherst Condominium Task Force has received endorsement from area groups on a proposed article in the town warrant for the March 30 town meeting concerning condominium conversion in Amherst.

The proposed article says that conversion in Amherst may only occur if there is a 5 percent or greater vacancy rate during the school year, buildings constructed for more than two families may be converted, and that tenants must receive nine months prior notice to conversion and have the right to refuse to purchase a unit.

"The problem of condo conversion has occurred because of the Jeffrey Amherst Manor and other rental units considered for conversion," said Amherst Condominium Task Force Spokesperson Joanne Levenson.

Levenson also said that there is currently a proposed bill on Beacon Hill that would prevent condo conversion in a city or town that has as eight percent or higher percent vacancy rate.

"The condominiums do not create new housing, and when converted they do so at an inflated price," Levenson said.

Amherst Housing Authority Director Rosemary Williams said the board supports the proposed article.

"We're supporting the article because rental property is limited for family living," Williams said.

Many of the owners of the Amherst apartment complexes have also taken government loans for the original construction. For a certain period of time depending upon each individual contract, the owner must keep the units as rentals. After that date, the owner may sell or convert the units, said Williams.

"People could end up buying a condo, then renting them back to the students for the marked-up price," Levenson said.

Man arrested for trespassing

Richard Toussant, 55, address unknown, was arrested for trespassing in the Campus Center by University of Massachusetts police at 5 a.m. yesterday. Police said he had apparently been hiding in a janitor's closet.

In another incident yesterday, a skill saw belonging to the Physical Plant apparently had been stolen from the North Physical Education Building stage area on Friday. The incident was reported yesterday, police said. The saw is valued at $100.

Seven panes of glass valued at $75 were reported broken yesterday at 1:10 a.m. at Arnold residence hall in the Northeast Residential Area. Police said they did not know how the window was broken. Traces of blood were found near the window, police said.

David Byrne

Brian Eno

Byrne and Eno succeed in new sounds

David Byrne and Brian Eno
My Life In The Bush Of Ghosts (Sire)

By STEVEN L. WINNIMAN
Collegian Staff

On My Life In The Bush Of Ghosts, David Byrne (of Talking Heads) and Brian Eno (all-around musical genius) carry their fascination with African musical forms one step further than they have before. The album is vaguely reminiscent of Remain in Light, Talking Heads' last effort, but while the album could conceivably be called rock, or at least dance music, My Life In The Bush Of Ghosts is more of a musical presentation, aimed at your mind, not at your feet.

There is no singing per say on this album; rather, Byrne and Eno follow Robert Fripp's technique (from the song "NY3") of taking taped bits of dialogue from various sources, making loops of them, and running them over and over to create vocals. Added to this are funky, repeated bass and drum parts, somewhat like Public Image Ltd. On top of all that, Byrne, Eno and various guests are free to inject guitar, synthesizer, and various percussion instruments to create a layered, textured sound that's honestly unlike any other sound around today. The African influence is clear, but the pulsing guitars and echoing synthesizers speak of another musical form altogether.

The sources for the vocals range from "unidentified" talk-show hosts and radio evagelists to Moslem prayer-chanters and singers. When this concept of vocals works, like on "America is Waiting" or "Help Me Somebody," the hyper-repeated lines do take on a special meaning (although probably different than the speakers themselves intended) and serve the purpose of lyrics. When they don't work, however, like on "The Jezebel Spirit," the idea falls apart and the song becomes uninteresting. "The Jezebel Spirit" features an unidentified excorcist trying to drive a demon from someone's body. The meaning isn't clear, we never find out whether he's successful, and the vocal portion of the song becomes merely filler. It would be nice to have some real vocals — both Byrne and Eno have shown themselves to be great singers and lyricists, and their voices are sorely missed. The tape-loop vocals concept isn't bad, but maybe the album would work better with half "synthesized" vocals and half Eno or Byrne singing.

The music, however, is uniformly fantastic. The flair for funk that Byrne (and Eno) demonstrated so admirably on Remain in Light is showcased here to the same glorious extent. The melody of the songs is built around the bass line, which is always pleasingly catchy even when fairly simple. Over this, Byrne and Eno add sounds which range from King Crimson-esque raunchy guitar ("America is Waiting") to delicate strumming ("Regiment") to fluttering synthesizer ("Qu'ran") to expressive percussion (nearly every song). In fact, it's the percussion more than anything else that gives the songs their African feel, much like on Remain in Light. Although none of the songs on My Life In The Bush Of Ghosts is destined to become a big dance hit in the discos, like "Life During Wartime" was, they all are very, very good.

said he has asked Assistant Chancellor Marie McDemmond to begin coordinating all human relations activities on campus. He urged all members of the campus with complaints of anti-Semitism, racism, or sexism to submit them to McDemmond's office.

Koffler also said he has asked Provost Loren Baritz to study the issue of curriculum reform, especially the incor-

The commission's recommendations cited the student-proposed G-core curriculum as an example of the kinds of changes that need to be implemented.

The Undergraduate Student Senate and other groups have endorsed the G-core curriculum, which would require students to take two G-core courses. The proposal is now before the Faculty Senate.

A micro-college will be held in June to organize a series of campus-wide activities for the coming academic year, with a lecture series sponsored by the chancellor's office as the center of the activities.

The Chancellor's Commission on Civility, chaired by zoology Professor Vincent Dethier, developed its recommendations in response to what it termed a decline in civility on campus evidenced by an increase in vandalism, offensive graffiti and problems of residential living.

"There was agreement that these problems should be confronted no matter how painful for the university community," the 18-member commission's report stated. "The urgency of this effort is emphasized by the increased presence in our country and in this region of dangerous organized group expressions of bigotry and racism, such as the KKK and the American Nazis."

The Blue Wall isn't open this weekend, but just think when you come back it might have a completely different name like The Cave, or The Park Bench Cafe, or something really creative like that.

For those of you who aren't heading to sunny skies or Mom and Dad's house there will be something to do; not much, but something.

There can be little doubt that the top act in the valley this weekend will be Robin Lane and the Chartbusters this Friday at the Nail. The band has a new album due out next month so you'll probably be treated to some new material. The Paper Dolls will be the opening act.

NRBQ with Carl Perkins sold out last night in the Student Union Ballroom, so if you didn't get tickets and you've got a real urge to see them, they'll be at Stage West Saturday night.

Reggae enthusiasts might try Loose Caboose Friday at Rahar's.

You can see Martian Highway at the Nail Saturday for absolutely no cover.

If none of this appeals to you there's The Pink Floyd Movie or Rocky Horror at the midnight show at the mall, but I realize this is pushing it a bit.

For those of you heading to Boston, The Paradise hosts none other than Beaver Brown Saturday night. If you liked them last weekend in the Wall, you'll love 'em in The Paradise.

Johnny Winter comes to the Paradise Sunday for the outrageous price of $9.50. I realize he is a quality act, but everyone knows Don Law charges too much for tickets.

Boston is overflowing with rock and roll clubs, so if you look around you're sure to find something to appeal to you at a reasonable price.

Eric Clapton was hospitalized last weekend with a perforated ulcer, forcing him to cancel his four month North American tour, (drag-bummer).

SPEEDWAGON
DOES IT AGAIN.

To a generation raised on rock, the spirit of stereo is a band called REO Speedwagon. After a decade on the road, on the radio, on TV and on the turntable, after the years of platinum and gold, this classic band has busted out with its biggest hit ever. It should come as no surprise. Hi Infidelity is in the great tradition of REO Speedwagon. A well-earned name in the best game there is.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Untruths, injustice and the American way

Dave McCarthy

On a recent trip to New York, I turned on the Superman television show, which I had not seen in over five years. At the end of the introduction, the music rose to a crescendo, and the announcer exclaimed that Superman would fight for truth, justice, and the American way. I had heard this expression for many years during my childhood, but had never given it much thought. Finding the statement ambiguous, I got up, turned off the television, and contemplated the phrase, with El Salvador in mind.

First, what consitutes truth? Truth is the property implicitly ascribed to a proposition by verification or assertion of it. The proposition concerning Soviet support for Salvadorian terrorists, which was reportedly captured during a raid on a rebel hideout in San Salvador, has not been publicly verified, because of the simple fact that it has not been publicly exposed. Other questions concerning the truth of this "white paper" are: If our government's assertion that these documents were captured by the army of President Jose Napoleon Duarte is correct, how did our State Department get a hold of them, and why did the story break in New York and not somewhere in El Salvador?

A second criteria for truth is the track record of the source. Let us look at the track record of the United States. The United States team is centered by our President, Ronald Reagan. If recent statements such as Vietnam being a noble cause, and that the Soviet Union underlies all the unrest in the world are any indication of his "foul shooting ability," the United States team looks tough.

Playing forward for this band of globetrotters is Secretary of State, Al Haig. Haig recently tied America's prestige to a concern about "vast amounts" of equipment awaiting shipment to El Salvador. In the same Boston Globe article (2/25/81) it was stated that he alluded to reports of even larger shipments on the way.

At the other forward, is David Rockefeller. He recently won the World Affairs Council's award for better international understanding. Upon accepting the award, he stated, "the Carter human rights policy was against the best interests of the United States."

Playing guard is Senator Jesse Helms, formerly of the Dixicrat political party, and currently of the Republican party. On a recent segment of Meet the Press, he referred to Latin America as our "backyard." On the same show, he was asked if the (right wing) government the United States supports has the backing of the El Salvadorian people. He replied, "Oh, I think so!"

The United States team is platooning the media at the other guard position. All three players (print, radio, and television) will get their chance to blend in and promote the team concept.

The United States team is currently playing a group, who say they know what truth is. They say that the agitation in El Salvador is not coming from the Soviets, but from the oppressive right wing junta. This team is led by ex-Ambassador to El Salvador, Robert White. He says that the American missionaries and agrarian reformers were killed by the United States-backed government, and not by the leftists. After telling this to a House subcon-mittee, he told reporters, "When you can see we are headed for a new Vietnam situation, you have to take a stand."

At the other forward is Dr. George Wald, Nobel laureate and Harvard professor, who served as chairman of a latin tribunal in Mexico City. He says that reports of a centralist government trying to resist pressures from both sides are inaccurate.

At one guard is Sister Margarita Navarro, member of the Human Rights Commission in El Salvador. She blames mass killings on the government, and says that the peasants do not mind being catagorized as "guerrillas", because they think the word means protecting yourself against those who kill for no reason.

At the other guard position would have been Archbishop Oscar Romero, a strong critic of the United States backed government. But he was permanently sidelined by what ex-Ambassador White termed, "a right wing bullet."

Playing center is the big guy, Pope John Paul II. He recently said, "Any apparent conflict between the exigencies of security and the citizens' basic rights must be resolved according to the fundamental principle...that social organizations exist only for the service of man and for the protection of his dignity, and that it cannot claim to serve the common good when human rights are not safeguarded."

It is time America investigated the real truth. When a country begins to realize the truth about itself, it frequently slows its program for reforming its neighbors.

What is justice? From Teddy Roosevelt in Panama through Ronald Reagan in El Salvador, America has been administering a cruel form of justice. Will we continue to excuse our transgressions in the name of "protecting freedom" and "stopping the Commies?"

Based upon the assumption that our government will continue to intervene in foreign struggles when it feels threatened, I propose a new foreign policy aimed at siding with the political group which can ensure the most human rights. If we are going to intervene in another country's politics, let us put business interests aside, and back the group which has the support of the populace. Jimmy Carter tried it, but he did not have the muscle to back it up. This is one criticism I cannot lay upon Ronald Reagan.

Under this scenario, Washington and Moscow would often be helping the same side, but for different reasons. Thus, alignment would come down to a choice between Capitalism and Communism; two commodities, so to speak. I think most developing countries would find Capitalism a more attractive alternative.

America has gotten off the track and seems to have lost sight of its original ideals. It's time America seriously reexamined the implications of truth, justice, and the American way.

'HOW COME THE MEDICAL EXPERTS ARE ALWAYS THE LAST TO KNOW?'

If mace won't work, machine guns will

Bob Conte

"Hello, sir."

"Come in, come in, young man. Have a seat. Would you like a drink? Have a drink. It's always nice to meet with you students. We're only here to serve you, you know."

"Come on, sir, you know I can't believe a word of that. Shall we cut the garbage and get down to business?"

"It's always nice to get right down to business. That's why I like dealing with you students. You so enjoy getting right down to business. So, you got any plans for vacation?"

"Sir, I have a mandate here from 94 percent of the student body in favor of keeping the bathrooms coed. We really resent you people in Whitmore playing bureaucratic crap games with our lives and we want to know why you're being so unresponsive to student opinion."

"Well, as I've said..."

"And as sort of a personal aside, sir, I think you guys are being really ridiculous about this."

"As I've said many times, this is no longer a negotiable issue."

"What, that you're ridiculous?"

"No! The bathroom issue is dead, kaput. You understand? It's over and I don't want to hear another word about it!"

"Why are you people being so unreasonable? It's just a bathroom. What do you think we do in there? We go to the toilet, we brush our teeth, we spit, and we leave. Pretty depraved stuff, ha?"

"I'm sick and tired of hearing about the damn bathrooms. You can talk all you want, but I'm not listening anymore!"

"Sir, you have to listen..."

"I can't hear you!"

"Sir, would you please take your hands off your ears?"

"I can't hear you!"

"Sir...Sir...Please come out from under the desk, sir. I just want to talk."

"I can't hear you!"

"For God sake...Oh, hey, look who just walked in with a beautiful homemade pie for you. Why, oh how nice sir, it's your mother..."

"Mommy?"

"Uh huh. And she wants you to come out from under your desk for just a minute to say hello and have a nice hot piece of pie. How's that sound, sir?"

"Mommy...where are you mom...My mommy's not here! That's a cruel trick, mister! I should have you shot for that."

"Sir, we have got to discuss the bathrooms."

"Will you give me a break? Will somebody just please give me a break? You think I like dealing with all these idiotic parents? And the plumbers? And the students? And the dorm staffs? And the press? I've had the bloody bathrooms up to here! You can all go piss in the woods for all I care!"

"North woods for men, south woods for women?"

"Get out of my office, you arrogant little simp!"

"Listen, I'm just trying to save Whitmore a lot of embarrassment. How would you people look if you went to all the trouble of enacting a new rule and everybody ignored it? You'd look like a bunch of real imbeciles, don't you think, sir?"

"What do you mean, boy?"

"Do you really expect someone who has been living on a hall for, say, a year to stop using the bathroom just because you put a new sign on the door? Be serious, sir. Your naivete astounds me."

"He damn well better."

"Dream on. You'll be the laughing stock of the whole academic community."

"Don't think that we can't enforce our rules, twerp! You remember the alcohol commandoes from two years ago?"

"How could I forget?"

"Well, you're gonna be seeing 'em again, in full uniform and armed to the teeth in front of every last bathroom on this campus. A woman tries to get into the men's room and, pow, she's blown away!!

"Dead?"

"Even better. Maced! You think you're gonna die but you don't. You squirm and scream for hours and your eyes turn purple..."

"That certainly ought to keep 'em away, sir. Listen, why don't you lie down for a while and try to take a little nap, okay? I'll go talk to someone else. You don't seem quite up to it."

"And if mace doesn't work, I know where we can get some submachine guns real cheap..."

Times are hard, they're tough

Eric Janszen

Times are hard. They're tough, like the people in them. We're tough these days. We don't drive down the street to buy a chunk of brie, a box of Wheatstone crackers and a six-pack of Heinekens. Not anymore. We walk.

We used to sit in the living room watching television, drinking Heinekens, munching brie and crackers, in shorts and a tee-shirt, in January. Not anymore. We pull on designer jeans and tuck an afghan up around our necks. At least the Heinekens stay cold longer.

It's getting to be like the Great Depression, which we know all about from watching The Waltons, with beer and crackers and imported beer: Papa Walton owns a lumber business, and business is bad. He can't buy milk for Elizabeth and Jim-bob. They're getting skinny, their faces grow wan from the careful attention of the studio makeup artist. So Ma Walton goes out to sell raspberry preserves to her impoverished neighbors, who buy them out of kindness.

There's a lot of kindness around in the Great Depression. Closeness, too. There's no heat in the Walton house, but there's closeness. The family huddles around Papa Walton's cigar and listens to FDR reassure them of the coming of brie and crackers and imported beer.

It's getting that way now. Times are hard but there's kindness. Dad works all day at the office where he sends apologetic letters and talks on the phone to other Dads who return his letters and call him back to apologize. They regret to inform each other that business is bad. Mom clips coupons from newspapers and arranges car pools for the PTA meeting. She will drive the Japanese family station-wagon, which looks and rides like a shopping cart.

Dad and the kids come home, and Mom's burned the Hamburger-Helper. But nobody complains. Because there's kindness. After eating the burnt hamburg leavened with textured soybean protein, they watch The Waltons on the black and white t.v. from the Castro-Convertable. One of the kids folds the couch down into a bed. He sleeps there after the Waltons finish listening to FDR and goodnighting each other to death.

He used to have his own room. Not anymore. The family had to move out of their $60,000 split-level Colonial, with basement, attic and garage, into a single-deck home, with aluminum siding and an open car-port, which costs $120,000. The makeup artist puts a drop of glycerin in the corners of the boy's eyes and he cries because he has no place to display his Star Wars models.

But that doesn't mean he's not tough. He's as tough as you and me. In these hard times.

The truly needy

Laurie Zucker

I was drinking in the bar, when my friend from the CIA crept in disguised as a vampire. Good cover. People threw lemon peels at him, thinking he was a Punk. He whispered in my ear, "The Great Gaffer in the big white house is throwing a party for the truly needy." He whirled around twice, and disappeared in smoke. Or was it a bat...

I boarded the first bus, and made my way to Washington. I almost didn't recognize the White House.

So, those disturbing rumors I'd heard en route were true. By executive order, The Great Gaffer had airlifted Disney architects to re-do the White House for the party. They had painted it in cheerful rainbow colors. Little plastic bluebirds flew over the lawn. Donald Duck himself came out to shake my hand, and Sleeping Beauty gave me her autograph. Then a marine with a big lollipop in one hand, and a bayonet in the other, told me to get the hell off the lawn or he would blow me into chocolate chip cookies.

I went around back, stood on some garbage cans, and climbed through the men's room window. A marine pointed a bayonet at my back.

"Halt! What do you think you're doing?" he said.

"I'm from the Russian Embassy. I have an appointment," I lied.

"Oh, sorry. Carry on."

I go upstairs and hide behind a curtain. The party's in full swing. The Great Gaffer comes downstairs on his wife's arm. She is wearing a diamond chandelier, he is a wearing a white suit and a straw boater. Marines trail behind them carrying large trays of Mint Julips, humming Hail to the Chief. Frank Sinatra is crooning "You're All I Really Need" to the rapt audience of the truly needy. The truly needy are truly pathetic, but they have dressed themselves for the world. All the truly needy are there. All six of them.

Four of the truly needy appear to be jelly-like ameobas, the fifth is a dog-eared beagle, and the sixth is, why yes, my old CIA friend disguised as a garden snake.

Suddenly a curtain on the other side of the room is flung aside; an Afghan Bedouin rushes out, making a beeline for the truly needy. Lousy cover. It's Dan Rather of CBS News.

A soft whine is heard. Mickey Mouse, or rather Gaffer's Economic Advisor dressed as Mickey, grabs Rather.

"Hey, big fella, you're stepping on one of the truly needy."

"How gauche," says Gaffer's wife.

Rather wipes the jelly on his shoe into the lush carpet. Now there are only five truly needy in America. The other ameobas squish quickly away from Rather. Humble folk, I suppose they were too shy to be interviewed for national television. The snake slithers up the leg of Gaffer's wife. "What a cute fellow," she says, and passes out. That leaves the beagle. Rather bends down.

"What do you need?"

"Everything. I'm truly needy."

"How'd it happen? Were you always this way?"

"No. I was once a tall handsome man. Much better looking than you. But misfortune sat on my head and bowed me down. One day I was walking down the street in the daze. I cried to the unfair heavens 'It's a dog's life!' when, poof! I was transformed into what you now see. I've been truly needy ever since."

"That's terrible. How are you enjoying the party?"

"I love it. I've eaten 42 pounds of filet mignon so far. Gaffer is truly a great man. I didn't even vote for him but he didn't hold it against me."

"Oh, why not?"

"Couldn't reach the lever."

"Gee, you poor dog. I feel so bad for you. Is there anything I could get for you, just name it, what do you want?"

The beagle stands on his hind legs, and looks longingly at Rather.

"Could I lick a hostage?"

Good job could be better

I would like to commend the Collegian for their fair and unbiased reporting that the student body was presented with during the recent SGA elections. It was a welcome change from last year's coverage, which included an unsigned editorial in support of LaVoice-Moran (the current co-presidents). In an election of this size, where the only information the average student receives is from the Collegian, it was refreshing to see detailed descriptions of all the candidates' views and positions rather than editorials in support of particular co-candidates.

With regard to Ed Levine's evaluation of the election (Collegian, 3/13) the reason for the unusually high voter turnout, in my opinion, was not the bathroom question. Rather, people voted to change the representation which let it become a question at all. Also, at the end of this particular article, Levine writes, "they (Kocot-Mangan)...spent most of their energies attacking LaVoice with often unfair accusations" and "LaVoice also stretched the truth a bit. He took credit for things he did not do."

What were these false accusations and stretched truths? Why wasn't the student body informed of these misrepresentations before the election? Perhaps the Collegian will do an even better job next year by reporting what is going on and who the candidates are and also by interpreting, without bias, what is being said.

Although I am not partial to him, I will restate President Reagan in saying it truly is "time for a new beginning." We all hope Kocot and Mangan will start it (and congratulations to the winners).

Majority doesn't dictate

Lately, so-called "moral majority" groups throughout the country have tried to promote their conservative, right-wing views as being "American." By implying that a "majority dictates what is American," they, by the very nature of what they say, are being un-American.

The basis and origins of freedom in America rest on principles that defy any "moral majority" and its philosophy. The Pilgrims risked their lives for an uncertain future in an American wilderness. They were a religious minority in their native land. The American Revolution itself was an escape from oppression against overwhelming odds. Our country and all principles and beliefs it holds dear originate from a spirit of dissent from a greater majority.

Our Constitution embodies this spirit and recognizes the human right and perogative to disagree. By this Constitution all Americans are given the right to advocate their own views even if they are extreme.

We allow an American Communist Party. We allow American Nazis to parade down our streets. These splinter groups may advocate views which run contrary to our most basic morals, but the members of these groups are no less American than any member of the "moral majority" or even the Rev. Caldwell himself. America is a land of free thinkers. To insinuate that there is a moral consensus and that this consensus represents the views of Americans is ironic. American is a bastition of individual freedom, not moral values. This is the very essence of our Constitution.

Morality is the perrogative of the individual. The belief that the so-called "moral majority" is representative of America threatens our freedom to disagree, and violates the principles our country was founded upon.

Money for Atlanta victims

The Northeast/Sylvan Anti-Racism Practicum, in conjunction with the SCERA Anti-Racism Team and the NE/S Racial Awareness program, asks the support of the University student body in our effort to raise money for the Atlanta Fund.

During the week of March 30 to April 2, we will be selling green ribbons — a symbol of life — at the northern entrances to the Worcester Dining Commons. The monies raised will be presented to Camille Bell, a mother of one of the victims of the senseless slayings in Atlanta. Ms. Bell, head of the Committee to Stop Children's Murders, will be speaking on campus on Wednesday, Aprii 1. These events will take place during the observance of Martin Luther King week at the University.

We are urging all concerned citizens of our community to join us in this effort to increase awareness about the Atlanta murders, while contributing to the aid of the victims' families and the investigation of these brutal killings. Please stop by our tables, Monday through Thursday, 4:30 to 6:30 p.m., March 30 to April 2.

Write a letter

Wednesday afternoon hundreds of concerned University people gathered united against an increasing problem — U.S. involvement in El Salvador. The student union steps echoed calls for brotherhood, justice, and the freedom of a nation to choose its own destiny. Mainly, good points were made, but some basic and very important ideas were neglected.

I was totally frustrated in my attempt to get on the list and talk to this determined and motivated crowd. The organizer had no time for me, I wasn't representing any group. I wanted to get a point across to this large assembly.

Rally and demonstration are great ways to pass information, but they are also means of organization. I wanted to stress to these people how much of an impact a letter from each of us would make on U.S. senators and congressmen. Who on the Foreign Relations Appropriations Subcommittee of the Senate Appropriations Committee voted Monday 6-2 to allow Reagan to give $5 million more dollars in military aid to El Salvador? This money was originally appropriated by Congress for other programs. Who is on the similiar House of Representatives committee that will vote this next Monday? Who is your district congressman? Do you write to them when you believe a point should be made? We all should take advantage of this freedom Uncle Sam grants us. (In Goodell there is a list of federal congressmen, committee members, and their districts.)

As I watched an enthusiastic crowd unite for a political cause I couldn't help wonder how many have written letters, how many will write letters, and what sort of impact we could have made if the power of these people were used to its full and realistic potential?

and Conflict Research, said the "precondition of survival for the next generation is disarmament, and yet everything runs more for the military and the modernization of weapons.

"The younger generation is asking why we need more and more weapons when we have a sufficient capacity for defense, and a sufficient capacity for overkill," Jacobsen said.

Jacobsen said the present difficulty between West Germany and the United States centers around different perceptions on detente.

"The Americans don't understand enough that detente, especially since 1970, was of great benefit to the Germans and the Poles," said Jacobsen, also a member of a West German bilateral committee with Poland.

"There is, and must be, a dialogue between the superpowers," Jacobsen stressed.

Describing detente as a "substitute policy for reunification," Jacobsen said if there is a return to the Cold War the opportunity for unity is gone.

Jacobsen also said that detente is dead if Russia invades Poland.

"We hope that the Polish can stabilize their situation without outside interference," he said. "Perhaps then we will have a chance at detente."

Jacobsen said the Soviet Union won't moderate its build up in weapons because of feelings of inferiority.

"Their military build up is a policy of compensation," he said, explaining that "balance of power" is not just an aspect of the military, but also part of the economy, technology, communication system and political stability.

"If you take all these together, we are not inferior to the Russians," Jacobsen said.

ferent species of birds to the area and create a more "fruitful" environment for nesting birds, said co-President Chris Ricardi.

"It should be emphasized that the cutting will benefit other species such as rabbits and deer. It will create a better environment for wildlife in general," Ricardi said.

"The key reason in undertaking the project is so that students can learn basic principles and techniques of wildlife management," Edelson said.

Rennovations for this long-term project begin this week. The area is open to the public.

The club has also formed a committee to deal with environmental problems and issues relevant to today. Committee members write letters to senators expressing the society's opinion in political decision and have also written editorial letters to the Collegian in order "to inform the students of pressing issues," Edelson said.

This week is National Wildlife Week and the society has set up a table in the Campus Center Concourse in order to "educate people who are unaware of local wildlife," Edelson said. The table features displays of different species native to Massachusetts such as the black bear and the beaver.

Some of the recreational activities society members enjoy are canoe trips to New Hampshire, a trip to Quabbin Reservoir for eagle watching, and hawk watches in the fall.

Several members plan to represent the organization at the National North American Wildlife and Natural Resources Conference this spring.

"This will be an opportunity for students to meet and talk to professionals in the field," said Ricardi.

The society also plans on attending the Northeast Conclave Conference, a gathering of students from colleges in the northeast who will hold meetings and gain experience through field trips.

"You can be an active or non-active member of the society, and anyone is welcome to meetings," said Ricardi. Meeting notices are posted in Holdsworth Hall.

MADAM CHAIRWOMAN, IT IS WITH GREAT CONFIDENCE THAT I RECOMMEND TO THIS COMMITTEE THE AD-MINISTRATION'S ECONOMIC RECOVERY PROGRAM.
I BELIEVE THAT IN THE VERY NEAR FUTURE, AMERICANS CAN EXPECT TO SEE AN ECONOMY IN WHICH INFLATION IS LOW, PRODUCTIVITY HIGH, THE FED-ERAL BUDGET BALANCED AND THE DOLLAR MIGHTY ONCE AGAIN!
HOW DO WE PROPOSE TO DO THIS? WELL, SIMPLY BY ADDING THREE ANNUAL TAX CUTS TO A TIGHT MONEY POLICY, A BURST OF DEREGULATION, A MASSIVE MILITARY BUILD-UP, AND A SET OF CHANGING EXPECTATIONS.
TAKEN TOGETHER.. DON'T FORGET THE EYE OF A NEWT.

'Tribute': some flaws, but tender moments

By ANDREW GORDON
Collegian Staff

Tribute, a new movie adapted from the Broadway play of the same name, has a good script and great actors, but has a flaw inherent in all Broadway adaptions. That flaw has to do with the differences between film and theater. Transposing plays to film has always been a problem in Hollywood and, with the exception of Hair and, to a lesser extent, Equus, movies taken from theater tend to look stiff and stagy. Tribute looks stiff and stagy. It is also overly dramatic, whereas film tends to be a more subtle medium; excessively wordy, where film needs action and movement; and forces emotion on you, as opposed to film's usual objectivity. These theatrical characteristics by no means ruin the movie; Tribute has a strong, solid script, but it really would have been better off left in the theater.

Jack Lemmon stars as a hyper, outspoken Broadway P.R. man. When he finds he has terminal cancer he sends for the son he never knew, played by Robby Benson, and tries to pass on his zest for life. Sounds like a simple enough story, but you wouldn't believe what a long, emotionally draining and, at times, unpleasant two hours it is.

Lemmon's performance earned him an academy award nomination and with good reason. Recreating the role he originated on Broadway, his performance is super-charged with energy. There are a few inconsistencies in his character, however, and while those around him constantly praise his funniness and charm, he often comes off to the audience as superficial and overbearing. His quiet, tender moments do come through, and ultimately we care about him.

As Lemmon's serious son, Benson is great. His character is easily identifiable and probably his best role to date. Lee Remick is also good as Lemmon's ex-wife, as is John Marley as his business partner.

Kim Cattrall, however, is disappointing as a girl Lemmon picks up to help his son's stay be more enjoyable. She showed promise in Rosebud a few years ago but in this movie she comes off conniving. It remains to be seen what the characters of Lemmon or Benson would see in her.

Bernard Slade adapted the screenplay from his original script but, like his recent Same Time Next Year and Luv, he changed relatively little, if anything at all.

If the characters are somewhat puzzling, so is the choice of filmmakers. Bob Clark and Reginald Rose, respectively, directed and filmed the movie. They did a nice job but I am curious why they would be chosen for such a sensitive project, based on their most recent past pictures. Clark is the director who brought us The Meatcleaver Massacre, Dead of Night and Black Christmas. Directors should not be judged on their past works, apparently; Tribute is warm, compassionate and well-paced and Bob Clark is, indeed, a fine director. Reginald Morris, however does not fare as well. Also the cinematographer for Empire of the Ants, Food of the Gods and Black Christmas (with Clark), Morris subjects us to dizzying and over dramatic camera movements and consistently lops off the tops of actor's heads.

No matter, Tribute is a nice, human film with good characters and a good script and is worth seeing. Be warned though, Tribute has a few emotional wallops that are felt rather than observed. Bring a handkerchief.

Tribute, rated PG, is currently at the Mountain Farms 4 in the Mountain Farms Mall.

Byrne & Eno

A final strong point about My Life In The Bush Of Ghosts is that it successfully survives the inevitable comparisons with Talking Heads and Eno's previous work. Perhaps the reason David Byrne didn't sing on this album was to specifically avoid creating a Talking Heads sound-alike song. At any rate, nothing on this record really sounds like anything Byrne or Eno has done before (reminiscent of past work, but not similar). Clearly, both men were out to pioneer a totally different direction; they have done so with no small measure of success.

GQ's Ray Murphy goes up for two of his twelve points against Horsefeathers' Tim Leary. GQ won, 39-35, in last night's intramural basketball championship.

IM Hoop

The game was a dogfight in the first half with Education hanging onto a slim 20-18 lead with just under six minutes to play. But, Tom Cafaro (15 pts.) and Ron Mayer (17 pts.) brought their team to a 34-22 edge at the half with their shooting expertise.

Education, behind Jefferson, stretched its lead to 52-37 in second half and left Ubiquity in the dust with their fastbreak offense. Bob Jennings finished with 16 points for Ubiquity as did Ed Herbert. Dennis Robinson chipped in 16 for the winners.

In the women's division final, the Combinations staved off a late-game rally by the Buckos and held on to a 39-34 victory and the championship.

The Combos led at the half, but the Buckos came roaring back in the second half to build up a seven point lead with ten minutes left to play.

The Combos' Sandy Mayer had seen enough and began bombing from outside to get the lead back on her side. She finished with a game-high 19 points. Judy Strong had ten for the champions.

Sweepy Voll: A skiing Standout

By ANTONY KUNDERT
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts' Suzanne "Sweepy" Voll finished 25th in the giant slalom, 22nd in the slalom, and a remarkable 19th in the combined when she competed in the Association of Intercollegiate Athletics for Women (AIAW) National Ski Championships, March 4-7 in Bozeman, Montana.

"She was competing against the best college skiers in the country," said coach Bill MacConnell. "She did an incredible job to ski so well in that kind of company." There were several former members of the U.S. ski team competing.

This was the first time a woman skier from UMass has competed in the Nationals. The UMass men's team has previously qualified only one man to compete in the Nationals. That was John Allard, both in 1976 and 1978.

Voll, a sophomore, has been skiing, in one form or another, for practically all of her 20 years. She started skiing when she was three years old at Bousquet Mt. in Pittsfield which is just the town over from her hometown of Dalton. At Bousquet she took lessons and rapidly became an accomplished skier. Moving over to nearby Brodie Mt. she began skiing competitively at the tender age of seven. Her first races show her promise as a ski racer as she won many.

The Brodie Mt. race program provided Voll with a number of talented coaches from France which aided her in honing her racing skills. Coming from a family of four girls she was able to use her older sisters a models for her skiing. She and her younger sister Bobbi (who is a freshman at UMass and also skis for the team) progressed quickly in this environment and both became top competitors in their age groups.

Sweepy Voll is an extremely gifted athlete having collected 12 varsity letters in high school. Competing in soccer, softball, and skiing. The skiing involved cross-country as well as alpine. She was a consistent winner in both the events and was the Mass. Interscholastic champion for all four years, 1975-1979.

"I come from a very athletic family," Voll said. "My father was a semi-pro hockey player, he also raced speed boats and used to beat everybody by a mile. Now he's into bicycle racing. All of my sisters are involved in sports too."

In the off season Sweepy races canoes with one of her older sisters. They are ranked third in New England.

The races at the Nationals were held at Bridger Bowl in Bozeman, which is an altitude of approximately 8000 feet. The first event was a giant slalom and was held on March 4th. It started off on a very steep pitch and leveled out and ended with a final steep.

"I had never seen anything that steep before," Voll said. "I was scared."

That didn't show in her run as she was just under three seconds away from the leader after the first run having started 33 out of the 80 women competing. Voll had some problems on her second run (5 seconds out) near the bottom of the course. She ended up in 25th spot for the day.

The slalom event was held on March 6 on the same slope. Voll started well back in the field in 47th position and moved up to 25th after the first run. She finished the race in 22nd.

"I was happy with my first run but it was a real disadvantage to run so far back in the order because it got so icy," said Voll.

The alpine combined is arrived at by taking the competitors placings in each event and adding up the place points. Voll finished in 19th.

"I'm really excited that I came in 19th in the whole country skiing against girls who ski in the summer in Chile or have gone to ski acadamies. That's the closest I've come to my goals and dreams in ski racing and I know I didn't ski up to my potential," Voll said.

Well with two years left, Sweepy Voll may find a way to do just that and prove she is one of the top women skiers in the country.

IM finals: GQ, Bruins keep crowns

Horsefeathers edged, 39-35; Education Grad-Fac champs

By STEPHEN FREKER
Collegian Staff

Everyone knows how the story goes.

The unknown team with the unfamiliar players walks into the big game, plays its heart out, and knocks off the big guys.

The crowd cheers and everyone goes home happy. Let's hear it for the little guy, the underdog.

For most of the championship final game of intramural basketball's men's division last night, it truly looked like this would happen. But, it just wasn't meant to be as GQ II successfully defended its title by edging Horsefeathers, 39-35 at Boyden gym.

This game wasn't decided until ten seconds were left to play and Horsefeathers' guard Mike Shea was forced to foul GQ's Dwayne Lopes. Lopes sank two free throws to send the 'feathers back to Northeast to wonder what went wrong in their bid for a spot in IM hoop history.

If GQ thought they would be able to win this game by just showing up and going through the motions, they were dead wrong. Horsefeathers came to play and they made it known from the start.

The 'feathers got this far in the playoffs by relying on the backcourt leadership provided by the tandem of Bill and Mike Shea. The two combined to quarterback a patient, disciplined offensive attack which gave the fastbreak oriented GQ team fits.

Bill Shea was on fire throughout the first half and Mike Shea contributed several inventive steals to keep Horsefeathers in the lead. Bill Shea pumped in eight in the half, all of his points coming on 18-footers from the top of the key. He and cousin Mike worked well defensively also, holding GQ's backcourt of Lopes and Garry Pearson to just seven first half points.

Ray Murphy and Wilbur Jackson were strangely quiet for GQ in the first half. Their rebounding effectiveness was virtually negated by the boardpounding of Horsefeathers' Tim Leary, whose six points and seven rebounds aided in the 'feathers' 21-19 lead at the break.

GQ decided to cut the somnambulist act and play some basketball in the second half. Lopes came out gunning, hitting two in a row to put his team up 25-23. Murphy helped increase this lead to four when he stripped the ball from Mike Shea and found Harold Chaney underneath for two.

With nine minutes left and the score tie at 29, Billy Shea caught an elbow over the eye and Horsefeathers thought they would lose their leading scorer. Shea stayed in, much to the crowd's delight, and quickly resumed his Charlie Scott imitation, dropping in two more jumpers to put his squad back on top.

GQ zeroed in for the kill, with the score tied at 31-31. Murphy drove the length of the court for two, then hit Jackson with an assist for two more. He pushed the lead up to six, 37-31, with a minute left with another soft jumper.

All that was left was Lopes at the line, many sad-faced Horsefeathers, and a jilted underdog-loving crowd, although Horsefeathers had certainly not fit the underdog role this night.

GQ—Ray Murphy 4-4-12, Dwayne Lopes 2-6-10, Garry Pearson 3-1-7, Wilbur Jackson 3-0-6, Max Jones 2-0-4. TOTALS 14-11-39. HORSEFEATHERS—Billy Shea 7-3-17, Mike Shea 2-2-6, Tim Leary 2-2-6, John O'Neil 2-0-4, Steve Hart 0-2-2. TOTALS 13-9-35.

Another intramural hoop defending champion was victorious last night. In the Grad-Faculty division, Steve Jefferson led a balanced scoring attack with 18 points, as Education won their second consecutive title, beating Ubiquity, 68-47.

No upset for Puckoffs; White scores two for Breens

By STEPHEN FREKER
Collegian Staff

In a game shortened by a bench-clearing, late second period brawl, Breen's Bruins continued their reign as intramural ice kings by defeating a scrappy Puckoff team, 3-0, in the championship final of the intramural hockey program Tuesday night in Greenfield.

Fighting erupted with 26 seconds left in the second period and the game was stopped by referee and program coordinator, Dusty Burke, with the Bruins leading 3-0.

Puckoff was the decided underdog in this contest. Their 6-4 regular season record could not compare with the sparkling 10-0 mark sported by the top-seeded Bruins.

Puckoff, which had been seeded sixth, last in the playoff field, had snatched the championship berth by virtue of their come-from-behind upset of the previously undefeated Motherpuckers in the semifinal round Monday night. Danny Cook scored the winning goal in the 2-1 victory.

The Bruins did not display any of their regular season dominance in the first period of play. Puckoff skated well and Mark Westfield unsuccessfully tested Bruins' goalie Steve Castaldo with several 20-foot blasts from the right side. The Bruins kept Puckoff netminder, Tom Kendall, fairly busy with a blizzard of shots in the opening minutes.

The Bruins were forced to play the last five minutes of the period shorthanded with players penalized for interference and delay of game. Puckoff could not capitalize and the stanza ended scoreless.

Kendall made a good save on a Tom Breen bullet, but Paul White there with the shorthanded tip-in goal, the eventual gamewinner, at 10:59, to put the Bruins on the board, 1-0. Jim MacDonald blasted a 25-foot direct hit through the net for a 2-0 Bruins lead a minute later.

Puckoff had several good chances to score for the remainder of the period, on bids by Westfield and Bob Hanlon, but they could not stick one in. White knocked in the final tally, his second of the evening, at 2:13 to close out the scoring. The game was halted shortly afterward.

Weightlifting: It's not just for men

By MIKE ESTRADA
Collegian Staff

Editors note: This is the final part of a three-part series.

Effective weight lifting is only one fourth of "total fitness."

According to Alan Dove, who holds a master's degree in exercise science and is the director of the Hampshire Fitness Center in Hadley, there are three other aspects to effective body modification.

Obtained through individualized programs, they are strength (through weight training), flexibility, cardiovascular improvement (achieving and maintaining a target heart rate for a period of time), and nutrition, or diet.

One local woman who has, for the last seven years, dedicated herself to total fitness is Carol LaMarche, a 22-year-old competetive body builder from Lewis dormitory.

It all started for the Worcester native when she and her identical twin sister Cheryl started accepting modeling assignments.

"Everybody who models professionally lifts weights," she said. The agency for which she was working brought in an expert trainer from Europe.

Since her introduction to body building, LaMarche has been recognized by the American Federation of Women's Bodybuilding, and is a certified instructor for Gloria Stevens.

A sophomore at the University majoring in Sports Management, she currently teaches an exercise colloque and assists as an instructor in a weight training and conditioning course in Boyden.

LaMarche is not a large woman. She is 115 pounds of sleek, well-toned muscle.

She said she can bench press her weight but in competition, women are judged not merely on muscle size but development and beauty. The nature of a woman's bodybuilding competition is an artistic display of choreographed poses set to music.

LaMarche said she is proud of her body, developed from years of training. Currently her goal is to generate interest among UMass women in weight training activities.

She can be seen every weekday between 2:30 and 5:00 p.m. in Boyden Gym, introducing techniques to "about a dozen or so girls that can lead them to body building."

"When I first came here," LaMarche said, "I never saw any women in the downstairs weight room. The biggest problem was that women didn't know how to use the free weights." Without personal instruction, "their only guidelines were the charts on the walls."

"Women would see me working out and say 'you look like you know what you're doing' and I would help them out."

"Now my main intention is promoting. Body building has been very good to me."

LaMarche is quick to point out that weight training can be very different for men and women. She said, for instance, that some male instructors "can't seem to show women what to do."

There is an attitude that exists, she said, that women who lift weights are somehow less feminine than those that don't; "and women who display an interest in weight training are 'invading' what has been a male-dominated activity.

"Thank goodness, and I have to say thank goodness," LaMarche said, "that women's body building is not the same as mens. We have our limitations. Some of us have the potential for larger muscles, but not as big as men."

"Every woman can lift weights and the activity shouldn't be thought of as just a man's sport. I enjoy being a woman and retaining my femininity."

LaMarche's weekly exercise routine, be it performed by a man or a woman, is plain tough.

She trains with weights six times a week, working the same body parts on alternating days. She runs and swims four times a week and can display a very impressive stretching routine.

Where to work out

Boyden dead weight room: Boyden basement is reasonably well-stocked with benches, bars, weight plates and dumbbells. There, the weight trainee can work on body building, power lifting, or toning through stretching, sit-ups, and pull-ups.

The experienced weightlifters there are usually happy to provide tips and demonstrate exercises and techniques the new trainee might like to try.

Boyden Universal: The universal is a large exercise apparatus having different stations that work particular muscle groups. There is also a leg bench, a running machine and two floor mats in the caged-in area adjacent to the coed equipment area.

The universal can provide circuit training; a workout that entails exercising many muscle groups at the same time while moving from station to station. With many repetitions, instructors consider circuit training a good way to help lose weight.

Nautilus, in the Mountain Farms Mall: For a membership fee of $225.00 a year, the trainee can learn the Nautilus system of exercise.

Manager David Waters explained that Nautilus machines provide "resistance throughout the range of motion." Dead weights, Waters said, work only the middle of the muscle (through resistance techniques can be used in dead weights too). Nautilus machines "apply resistance to the full length of the muscle."

Nautilus provides instruction on a one-to-one basis for the first three to four workouts, Waters said.

Hampshire Fitness Center, Hadley: At the Center the trainee acquires an individualized program that promotes total fitness (see story).

Director Alan Dove said the gearing of the Center is "as far away from a health club that you can get. People don't just come here to lift weights."

Among its offerings, the Hampshire Fitness Center provides instruction and facilities for competitive weightlifters and persons seeking cardiac and physical rehabilitation. The overall philosophy of the center, Dove said, is preventive health.

Regents to vote on tuition increase

By DEBORAH ASBRAND

The Board of Regents is expected to vote on a proposed tuition increase for students attending the state's 28 public colleges and universities at their next meeting on April 14.

While no specific increases have been announced yet, an additional $12.6 million in revenue is expected to be raised for the state's higher education budget as a result of the proposed hike.

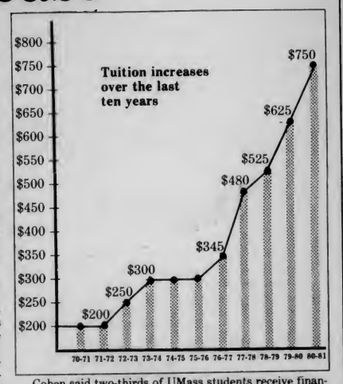
University of Massachusetts officials said yesterday any increase over $75, or 10 percent of the $750 tuition, would be considered unreasonable.

"If it is decided by the Board of Regents that there should be a tuition raise, then based on our studies we feel anything over a 10 percent increase for UMass students would be an excessive burden," said Carole Cohen, director of University Relations and spokeswoman for the University.

Given the level funding for the University that has been recommended by Governor Edward J. King for UMass, and the recent federal budget cuts mandated by President Reagan, Cohen said it would be unfair for UMass students to pay any increase in tuition without some easing of the financial aid cuts.

King's recommendations for UMass-Amherst's proposed 1982 budget is $600,000 below the campus' 1981 allocation, and $5 million less than the University's 1982 budget request.

Cohen said if the proposed increase is voted into effect by the regents next month, the University would expect additional financial-aid funds to be made available to students.



Cohen said two-thirds of UMass students receive financial aid of some kind.

The Board of Regents has the power to review and raise tuition for the 100,000 students attending Massachusetts' state colleges and universities according to the reorganization bill passed last June.

Chancellor search

Regents mull three finalists

The Massachusetts Board of Regents is expected to select a chancellor for state higher education tomorrow, almost a month past their March 1 deadline.

The search for the chancellor, who will be responsible for the regents' administrative work for the state's 28 institutions of public higher education, suffered a set back earlier this month when all three final candidates for the job dropped out of the running.

Although the three former finalists left for different reasons, the regents and Gov. Edward J. King have submitted legislation which would allow them to raise the salary of the Chancellor to a level similar to others across the country.

According to University of Massachusetts student Ronald W. Keefe, Jr., a member of the chancellor search committee, the committee looked over original applications for the position and has come up with three more final candidates.

The Regents are expected to meet with the three candidates tomorrow and make a final selection. The names of the three have not been released to the public.

The three former finalists were Albert Bowker, former assistant secretary of education under Jimmy Carter; Thomas Erlich, dean of the Stanford Law School; and James Murphy, president of Bennington College in Vermont. Of the current three finalists, two are reported to be from in-state and the other from out-of-state.

The 15-member Board of Regents assumed control of all state institutions of higher education March 1 under a plan to re-organize higher education in the state.

Protect against theft during spring vacation

By MARK L. CURELOP
Collegian Staff

As thousands of UMass students prepare to leave for spring break, dorm residents and apartment dwellers may be concerned about how to secure their residences.

UMass police said the best preventive measure to insure a safe dorm room or apartment is to keep the door closed and locked.

"If people kept their doors locked, the amount of theft could drop 30 percent," said Lawrence G. Holmes, assistant director of Public Safety.

Alpha Delta Phi service fraternity has been engraving student belongings in the five UMass residential areas to prevent theft.

"People don't steal something they can't fence or sell," Holmes said.

Since Alpha Delta Phi started the engraving program, 44 percent of students' belongings have been marked, compared to 15 percent last year.

Apartment complexes are harder to protect than dorms, Holmes said.

Amherst Police Chief Donald Maia said that someone should watch the vacant apartment in times of excessive absence, such as spring break.

"The apartment should appear as occupied as possible," Maia said.

Maia said residents should hide valuable items so they are not in plain sight.

MORE THAN A CRAFT SHOP The craft shop in the Student Union building offers more than supplies for craft projects. To the left, Butch Lakota, 17, ALP student, is restaining the boots he's wearing. To the right, Odette Vandenbroke, 19, Fashion Marketing major, uses pottery making as a release from everyday pressures.

Haig on Cuban arms flow: Go to the source

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Secretary of State Alexander M. Haig Jr. said yesterday the United States is eyeing a wide range of options, including military force, for going "to the source" to stop Cuban-routed arms to guerrillas in El Salvador.

Haig, in testimony to the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, said also that the U.S. has learned that "sophisticated arms" from Eastern Europe, including advanced air defense weapons and possibly tanks, have been introduced into Nicaragua.

The former NATO commander stressed that no military action is in the works to interdict the flow of arms in Central America.

But, "it is the responsibility of the executive branch to consider a whole range of options," including political and economic moves, he said. "And I can assure you that process is under way."

Military action against Cuba, he said, "should not be ... excluded from any consideration."

Haig disclosed that the administration is studying "intensely" whether to cut off U.S. aid to Nicaragua because of daily reports of arms shipments from Eastern Europe.

That aid was suspended after reports that large-scale arms shipments were being introduced into El Salvador through Nicaraguan territory.

Haig said the U.S. has observed "some moderation" in the flow of arms into El Salvador and has received "some private assurances" from Nicaragua that "they won't permit that country to be used as a base for that subversive activity in El Salvador."

However, he also disclosed that U.S. intelligence agencies report that some Nicaraguan officials apparently are attempting "to find an alternative route" for the arms shipments.

Haig also testified that that a piece of windshield glass embedded in the body of one of four Roman Catholic women in El Salvador has led investigators to theorize that the group may have been killed by local security forces when they tried to run a security roadblock.

He called this "the most prominent theory" in the unsolved December 2 murders of three Maryknoll nuns and a Catholic laywoman.

Senate committee approves cuts

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Senate Budget Committee, doing President Reagan's bidding with unusual dispatch, applied the final touches last night to $36.4 billion in spending cuts. Majority Leader Howard Baker Jr. vowed floor action on the blueprint next week.

Chairman Peter Domenici, RN.M., won a final committee vote of 20-0 on the overall package, which falls heavily on social programs and actually trims $2.3 billion more than the president asked in the areas under the panel's purview.

In all, Reagan wants $48.6 billion slashed from the fiscal 1982 budget he inherited from Jimmy Carter. Congressional aides said the remaining savings could be found in other legislation or in administrative actions that don't require statutory approval.

Domenici later hailed the vote as proof that even Democratic liberals on the panel "are feeling the pressure from constituents" to limit federal spending.

He called the committee's action the first step in "the most historic exercise in restraint that has even been attempted by the Congress," but conceded the package of reductions faces a hazardous course in the House.

Church group accuses right of terrorism in El Salvador

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador — A Roman Catholic Church group claimed yesterday that right-wing terrorists and security forces killed 147 schoolteachers and carried out 150 attacks on the church in the past 14 months, in some cases with the help of U.S. advisers.

A U.S. Embassy spokesman called the alleged U.S. involvement "ridiculous" and Salvadoran military sources said the report was "communist propaganda."

The report was issued by Socorro Juridico, which was set up in 1975 by the San Salvador archbishop to advise peasants of their rights and give them legal assistance.

King offers energy proposals in statewide televised speech

BOSTON — Gov. Edward J. King announced plans last night to stabilize fuel adjustment charges on utility bills primarily by accelerating conversion of oil-fired generating plants to coal.

King's strategy, presented in a televised address to the state, also calls for no-interest energy conservation loans for homeowners who use gas or electricity for heat.

Digest

By the Associated Press

The governor, in addition, endorsed restructuring utility rates to reward frugal consumers and offer a "lifeline" discount on electricity to the elderly poor. He also disclosed a tentative agreement to get cheaper oil from Venezuela for utilities and other Massachusetts industries.

Tax group releases study to help towns make '2½' work

BOSTON — Citizens for Limited Taxation, the prime mover behind Proposition 2½, says it has a responsibility to help cities and towns cut spending, and released a study yesterday intended to show communities where they might consider trimming.

The group also said it was surprised to find that some of the suburban communities will have more difficulty than many cities complying with the taxcutting law passed by voters in November.

Farmers press for unions as Polish strikes threaten again

WARSAW, Poland — Private farmers mounting a new campaign for trade union registration issued a tough list of demands yesterday as the threat of new strikes spread to a region of northeastern Poland on the Soviet border.

West German Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher, meanwhile, met his Polish counterpart, Jozef Czyrek, for two days of talks expected to focus on East-West relations and Poland's mounting multibillion-dollar foreign debt.

Communist Party leader Stanislaw Kania made a surprise visit to Hungary, apparently to discuss economic and labor troubles stemming from last summer's widespread labor unrest which led to formation of the independent union Solidarity.

Task force to distribute condo leaflets

By MARK L. CURELOP
Collegian Staff

The Amherst Condominium Task Force will be distributing leaflets in the center of town today from 4 to 6 p.m., and again tomorrow from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m.

The distribution of the leaflets was brought about by the recent conversion of the Jeffrey Amherst apartment complex into condominiums.

An article on the March 30 Town Meeting warrant would prohibit condominium conversion unless the vacancy rate in Amherst is five percent or higher during the school year.

A similar proposed bill on Beacon Hill would prevent condominium conversion in a city or town where the vacancy rate is below 8 percent.

Joanne Levenson of the Amherst Condominium Task Force said the Amherst Housing Authority and a group of Amherst lawyers support the article.

Four more win in BOG race

By GREG VOLPE
Collegian Staff

Four more University of Massachusetts undergraduate students last night captured seats on the Campus Center Board of Governors, as the BOG election tabulations were again halted, due to the late hour, with 15 percent of the results remaining to be counted.

Only four positions out of the possible 20 available on the board had been determined last week, because of problems which had plagued the tabulation of the results since the campus-wide elections ended last week.

With the Southwest residential area results remaining to be counted to determine the winners of the "At Large" catagory, the top three student winners out of a field of four, who ran for the three open seats in the commuter representative category are: Jim Mathison with 193 votes; Nancy Jane Baily, 179; and Jeff Figgie, 134.

For the one open Greek representative seat, incumbent Lori Dratch beat Christina Kelly 54-40 respectively.

With 85 percent of the vote completed for the 10 open "At Large" positions, the top 10 student leaders are: Scott Cashman with 1644 votes; Susan McLaughlin, 1631; Timothy F. Burke, 1625; Mike Ferrigno, 1572; Judy Sterns, 1532; Scott Freedman, 1530; Jay Englander, 1519; Kathleen McGettigan, 1466; Greg Dennis, 1464; and James Buckley, 1424.

Future farmers to honor two UM professors

By BRIAN SULLIVAN
Collegian Staff

Two University of Massachusetts professors will receive honorary degrees from the Future Farmers of America (FFA) at the Massachusetts FFA conference which will open on campus next week.

Dr. Kenneth Parker and Dr. William Thuemmel, both professors of education, will receive the highest honors the FFA can bestow for their continuous support of the association over the years, Martha McGrail, president of the Massachusetts chapter of the FFA, said.

The Stimpson-Held Collegiate Chapter will also be receiving its official charter at the state conference which will be held March 25 to 27, McGrail said.

The Stimpson-Held chapter of the FFA has been recently reactivated by a group of interested students and faculty, McGrail said.

Membership in the university chapter of the FFA will be open to all students of the Stockbridge School of Agriculture and the College of Food and Natural Resources, she said.

This year's convention will feature Glenn Caves, National FFA vice president, speaking March 26, in the Student Union Ballroom during the FFA award banquet, McGrail said.

A poet writes sonnets that aren't worth reading

Books

Sonnets (Pantheon Books)
By R.D. Laing

By SCOTT McGRATH
Collegian Correspondent

"No poet writes sonnets these days," you might say, and yet here we sit with a volume of 39 brand-new love songs by that wacky trickster psychologist who dares to challenge your convention with a convention. Yes, R.D. Laing dares to publish sonnets — new sonnets! These are the voices of an acidhead Petrarch masquerading as Nietzsche, reinforced and contemporized with a lot of what I call "relationship rhetoric" — "you have to be you" kinds of stuff — balanced occasionally with an exalted, pompous pseudo-Shakespearean voice, but with bad imagery and intolerable poesy.

Excuse me, this book is not only, we must remember, poetry, but also psychology. Although most poetry is that too, this volume is especially psychology, because our poet is a poetical psychologist. Of course the poems are in simple language; but no matter — after all, we were willing to listen in the first place.

What I really object to about the poems is the fact that given one or two basic truths about life, one or two dangerous and powerful ideas, and a mild sensitivity to language, this intellectual really goes berserk on the page, without earning a single response. He's like Rod McKuen with big ideas. For example, one sonnet, after tossing around crucifixion and fire images, concludes with this couplet:

"Love cannot help but always wish all well.
Its denial is the essence of hell."

This is meant to be ultraprofound; Get it? We might not always be nice in our intentions to love, but we do it anyway, because it's really a great emotion. Yet the poet has proven very little, for love is exalted, abstracted, etherialized, and mostly — sentimentalized. But it is sentimentalized with a high tone, a crude, unsubtle, pretentious diction. Another:

"When we begin to wrangle and dispute
Over what's past our discernment,
We're merely idiots who have not learnt
The mind can't see or know the Absolute."

Here is an existential idea we can sympathize with; still, it is all talk about life. Since it merely talks about the emotions in abstract terminology and never does anything, the response tends to be something like: "Okay, maybe; so what?" In other words, herein lies no poetry.

For the prose-minded, the end of the book is a section of "Adages." Some of these are spontaneous wisdoms along the lines of: "I was making love. I was not making friends." Others are quotes from the Bible, Luther, Nietzsche, Spinoza, and the likes, followed by a commentary:

"Lord forgive us for we know not what we do. The self which condemns itself is the last to realize that it is not only the self it condemns that stands in need of forgiveness, but the self that condemns."

Kochman's book raises questions about Man & God

Shall We Believe in God and the Meaning of Life (Vantage Press)
By Max Kochman

By LYNN M. RZESZUT
Collegian Correspondent

Max Kochman's book, Shall We Believe in God and the Meaning of Life, is, at first glance, a presumptive work of dubious credibility, but the theory of false first impressions holds true. Kochman's theory of universal "oneness", which becomes exemplified as a God, strikes a harmony with my own beliefs. My only criticism stems from this. This book is unlikely to raise problems from any but the most iconoclastic.

Kochman feels that the spark of creativity which inspires great masterworks serves as a prime divider between the material world and the spiritual world, which is synonymous with the concept of God, or soul. From here on in, the argument of what comes first, the man or God, is successfully skirted with observations concerning Darwin, atheism, and the omnipotence of a God ideal. Overall, Kochman's book offers interesting reading in raising questions surrounding the validity of society's definition of religion.

MR. SLACKMEYER, WOULDN'T YOU AGREE THAT THE MOST INDEFENSIBLE ASPECT OF YOUR TAX CUT PROPOSAL IS THE UN-CONSCIONABLE WAY IN WHICH THEY FAVOR THE RICH?
NO, SIR, I CERTAINLY WOULD NOT. IF WE'RE GOING TO AVOID AN ECONOMIC IMPLOSION, THEN WE HAVE TO MOVE BOLDLY. WE CAN'T AFFORD TO ENGAGE IN A FISCAL BATTLE OF ATTRITION WITHOUT OUR CAPTAINS OF INDUSTRY!
FROM PAST EXPERIENCE, WE KNOW THAT THE WELL-HEELED ARE THE ONLY CLASS THAT CAN BE DEPENDED ON TO PUT THEIR TAX CUTS INTO SAVINGS AND INVESTMENTS!
AND THE POOR?
STUDIES SHOW THEY TEND TO BLOW IT ALL AT THE TRACK.

Cohen said it was uncertain when the decision on the tuition hikes would be announced, but said it would be unfair to students to postpone a decision too long.

"In fairness to the students we feel the decision should be made as soon as possible," Cohen said.

The Undergraduate Student Senate's Coordinating Committee on Tuesday night endorsed the formation of a student coalition to fight the proposed tuition increases and budget cuts. The coalition will hold its first meeting on March 30.

Finally, the results of the Sylvan area representative seat were not available at press time. Paul Bruno is running uncontested in this race.

No one ran for the one available Northeast residential area representative seat in the election.

The present and eventual BOG election winners were scheduled to begin their terms last night, but as a result of staffing problems which have prolonged the tabulation of ballots, the students will be "seated" April 2, at the Board's general meeting.

BOG Chairman Brian DeLancey, voicing his concern for all students running in the election, said the final results will "definitely" be made available next week.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Out of Control — A boring sandwich

The other day I had a peculiar passion to eat something at lunch besides the usual campus version of a "fast-food" sandwich. Perhaps I was bored with hot dogs, hamburgers and french-fried buckskin crisps. It all hit me when I rushed to the food counter and reached for the 12.6 cents per ring onion rings, and suddenly felt my appetite lurch to a halt.

Steve Masse

Not that I wasn't still hungry. I had spent the entire morning in arduous research at the Goodell Library, which was sure to close sooner than I was ready to finish my work, thus leaving me with very little time to get lunch. But the library is another story. Here I was, foaming at the mouth with hallucinations of real food, like open-faced turkey sandwich and hot buttered vegetables and mashed potatoes, or American chop suey, or anything that could make my twelve minute lunch break worthwhile. Food! Food! My kingdom for real food! (any slumgullion will do, as long as it's different.)

But a boring sandwich was all I could find.

I used to work in a snack bar here. Every once in a while, I rehash for my own mastication those idyllic days when campus cafeterias had a "Today's Special." I remember Alice, our laughing and personable supervisor, who often made home-cooked specials that brought customers practically fighting for places in line. There was baked macaroni and squeeze, roast beast, fishie and chips — a bustle of help behind the counter scrambling for drinks, fresh-frying the french-fries, scooping good helpings onto plates. I still see Alice serving her Polish style meat loaf, or stuffed cabbage, or kielbasa.

People like variety — more than just switching from hot puppies to burgers to cheeseburgers and back again. That is hardly what I'd call a decent lunch, sandwiches on whole wheat bread notwithstanding.

There are probably about five thousand students who do not eat in the dining commons, and many of those can't get home for lunch. Some carry a lunch, some buy one. So far I've tried lunch at the Hatch, the Coffee Shop and Whitmore. None of these places offer a daily special (though Earth Foods may have offerings, the atmosphere doesn't quite match the better-frequented places). What would it be to set up a two-hour daily special? If junior-high cafeterias were as limited as the coffee shops for daily food, there would be a State investigation and a bitch heard all the way to the coast. Why is it that older students must be put at the mercy of fortieth-rate "convenience" nutrition?

It's queer that a thing so important and revitalizing as a good meal is overlooked in favor of productivity and convenience. How many short-term pains in the ass do we suffer, while at the same time bashing our brains out over long-term problems, and things that don't even affect us? We worry about cancer, but forget that smoking gives us dog breath and foggy windshields today. We worry about nuclear accidents, Third World milk, water salinity and Tomorrow, yet we complacently stuff cardboard burgers down our throats Today. You don't have to be a vegetarian to care about what you eat.

I could lament that the good old days of Alice's UMass Kitchen are over, but that might be jumping to delusions. After all, Alice is still here. And there are many more would-be Julia Childses here, too. Precious talent is being wasted on monotonous food! Can we give these creative people an outlet for their magic, and at the same time give customers something to really enjoy? Or is it too late to program the cash registers to accept such a radical change?

Very little consensus

In an editorial about CARP and Unification theology (Collegian, 3/13), Steve Masse, a self-styled theologian, questioned the soundness of Unification Theology. However, I have to question the soundness of his logic and journalistic integrity. His editorial was nothing but an emotional, highly-biased tirade. It is obvious that he knows very little about theology in general, and even less about Unification Thought and Theology in particular. By what authority does Steve assume he is a judge of what is true and legitimate?

Steve exemplifies the extent of his theological ignorance when he claims that there is a "theological consensus" concerning the fall of man. Among 400 plus Christian denominations, there is very little consensus on anything, even whether the communion wine should be wine or grape juice, let alone a consensus on the true nature of the human fall.

Steve is also unaware that the Bible and Jewish and Christian writings all refer often to the unhappy and suffering quality of God's heart. Steve thinks it presumptuous to see God as having human qualities. Actually, the Unification view is not so much that God is like man, but that man has the potential to be more like God.

For Steve to take such an outraged position about Unification Theology and then to turn around and admit he knows very little about theology is rather "presumptuous" on his part, it seems. What we have here, in miniature, is the age-old clash between "acceptable" doctrines and fresh, new ("heretical") ways of approaching life's problems. At this time, many serious scholars are studying Unification Theology; but in order to appreciate anything new, as they know, they cannot be too enamoured of the past. It seems pretty obvious to me that we need some better ideas than we've had in the past to approach the future with hope.

Master Lee, 8th degree black belt, demonstrates pressure points to his students in his Tae-Kwon-Do class.

Three masters of a fine art

by SHARON PANNOZZO
Collegian Staff

It is a rare occasion for any university to offer three instructors of national prominence in the same program. At the University of Massachusetts, the General Physical Education department has three martial arts experts who are masters in their field: Moo Young Lee, Kazumi Tabata, and Chester Holubecki.

These individuals not only teach skills in the martial arts, but go beyond to teach discipline, respect, and achievement. "We're proud to present individuals of this caliber," said Chet Gladchuck, Director of General Physical Education at UMass.

Moo Young Lee, a native of Seoul, Korea, is an eighth degree black belt. He has spent the last 30 years perfecting his skill in Tae Kwon Do. There are only two other individuals in the United States who hold degrees higher than Lee.

Lee has gained national recognition for his expertise in the martial arts. He is Vice Chairman of the Amateur Athletic Union Tae Kwon Do Committee, a member of the World Tae Kwon Do Federation, and representative to the U.S. Olympic Committee for the AAU.

As chairman of the 1981 U.S. Tae Kwon Do Team, Lee has lead them to first place in the Pan American Games, and will take them to the World Games this summer. Lee owns and operates the United Tae Kwon Do Studio in Hartford, CT.

Kazumi Tabata has been studying karate since the age of thirteen, and is a master of the shotakan style of karate. He holds a sixth degree black belt. In 1968, Tabata left Japan and came to the U.S. where he founded the North American Karate Foundation and the New England Collegiate Karate Conference. He has also helped train tactical police forces in the New England area.

Chester Holubecki owns and operates martial arts studios in Holyoke and Northampton. He possesses a fifth degree black belt in the Okinawan style of Isshin-Ryu Karate.

Since 1967, Holubecki has taught karate at Amherst College, to the Springfield Police Cadets, and at the Rape Prevention program in Holyoke. In 1973, he was the top twelvth fighter in New England. He has also officiated many major karate tournaments throughout the U.S.

These three individuals offer their expertise and skill instruction through the martial arts program of the G.P.E. department. "Having instructors like these is a tremendous addition to our own department, as well as the university community," said Gladchuck.

Sign up early for self defense

by SHARON PANNOZZO
Collegian Staff

The martial arts program in the General Physical Education department here at UMass is one of the most popular and oversubscribed of all the courses offered. It also offers three of the country's foremost experts in the field of martial arts as instructors.

In the past four years, the popularity of martial arts has grown tremendously. This is partially due to the fact that students are interested in obtaining personal skills, such as those of the martial arts that they will be able to utilize once they leave the university. Participation in martial arts also is excellent for conditioning and as a method of self-defense.

From 1978 to 1981, the number of martial arts classes offered has grown from four to 11 sections. Next fall, UMass will offer 16 sections, including instruction in karate, aikido, judo, and basic self-defense.

This semester there are over 350 students enrolled in martial arts classes, with the courses oversubscribed by 255 students. Next semester the program will be able to accomodate even more students reflecting the phenomenal growth in popularity of the martial arts.

Last year, martial arts demonstrations were held in the Student Union Ballroom, attracting over 600 students to each performance. These demonstrations, which featured block breaking and mock knife attacks, were run by instructors in the program utilizing many of the students in the G.P.E. courses.

There are only 19 other universities in the country that offer a G.P.E. program comparable to the one here at UMass. The G.P.E. facilities here are only surpassed by those at the University of Texas. UMass also has one of the highest percentages of their student body involved in the G.P.E. program.

According to Chet Gladchuck, director of the G.P.E. department, their major goal is to offer the finest skill instruction possible. "Students should learn the skills from the best," Gladchuck said.

In the martial arts program, all instructors hold black belts. Previously, most instructors held a first or second degree black belt. However, in the past year, three individuals have taught in the program with black belts of the fifth, sixth, and eighth degree. The highest attainable black belt is the ninth degree. Moo Young Lee, an eighth degree black belt, is an expert in Tae Kwon Do, Kazumi Tabata is a master of the shotakan style of Karate, and Chester Holubecki holds a fifth degree black belt in the Okinawas style of Isshin-Ryu Karate.

For those students interested in pursuing advanced levels of skill in the various martial arts, there are clubs that offer this opportunity. Taking a G.P.E. course is a great way to learn a skill that you will have the rest of your life, and the martial arts are only one of many offered here at UMass.

Spikers lose third in a row

One hundred and thirty year old Judd Gymnasium hasn't hindered the volleyball skills of Springfield College, (16-0), as the Chiefs literally spiked UMass into the ground 16-14, 15-8, and 15-5 Wednesday night in Springfield.

UMass, (12-4), have lost their last three matches all in the same manner.

"They took it from us by putting the ball down on the floor whenever they needed to," said UMass Coach Al Morel of the Chiefs, who have been number one in New England for the past five years.

Against the Chiefs, UMass missed three serves in the second game and were getting outspiked in the middle throughout the match. "We're usually the ones who show strength in the middle," Morel said, "They just took it to us. We're in a slump."

The Minutemen plan to change their offense by using two setters so captain Pat Ryan can use his hitting abilities as well as setting expertise, according to Morel. Ryan, a junior from Northampton, was voted best collegiate volleyball player last month.

Morel, a former UMass volleyball player, and second year UMass coach, was recently honored coach of the year by fellow Eastern Massachusetts volleyball coaches. Morel also is assistant Women's Varsity Volleyball coach.

The Spikers have a week long layoff to dig their way out of their slump before they face Army.

Red Auerbach decides to stay on

By HOWARD ULMAN
AP Sports Writer

BOSTON — Boston Celtics President and General Manager Red Auerbach has agreed to a new 10-year contract after abandoning thoughts of retirement at the end of the current National Basketball Association season.

"Two years ago, Red told me he planned on retiring at the end of his contract, which is this year," Celtics' owner Harry Mangurian Jr. said at a news conference Thursday. Now, he said, Auerbach has accepted what amounts to a "lifetime contract."

Mangurian said Auerbach, 64, will continue as president and general manager of the Celtics as long as he wants, and then will serve as a consultant to the club.

Mangurian has owned the club for four years, in partnership with current Kentucky Gov. John Y. Brown at the beginning, and by himself for the past two seasons.

Auerbach had differences with Brown and seriously considered moving to the New York Knicks before Mangurian became sole owner.

"When you have your ups and downs in this business, you always think of retiring," Auerbach said. "There was no way I wanted to leave once Harry got control of the club.

"It's not that I made up my mind to stay. It's that I made up my mind not to leave," he added. "There's no reason for me to leave."

Auerbach is in his 31st season with the Celtics. In 16 seasons as coach from 1950 through 1966, the Celtics won nine NBA championships. They have won four more since he became general manager for the 1966-67 season.

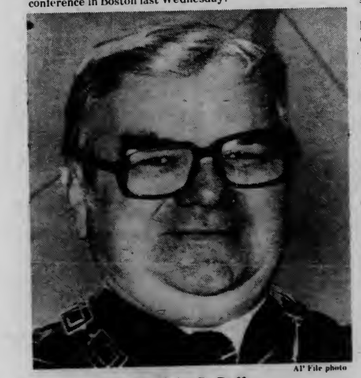
Chancellor of Mass public higher education appointed

By DEBORAH ASBRAND
Collegian Staff

The Board of Regents named University of Lowell President John B. Duff as the first Chancellor of Massachusetts public higher education at a press conference in Boston last Wednesday.



AP File photo

Dr. John B. Duff

Duff will officially assume responsibility as head of the 28 state colleges and universities at the next Board of Regents meeting on April 14.

Duff's appointment ends four months of work by the eight-member chancellor's search committee, which found its task complicated by the last minute withdrawals of several finalists for the $54,000 a year position.

Last month it was reported that the search committee had narrowed the field to two finalists, but both contenders withdrew their names. The search committee had to again open up the competition and begin re-interviewing candidates.

Ten candidates were interviewed on March 14 and 15 by the search committee—on which Duff served as representative for college presidents—and members again selected two candidates and presented their names to the Board of Regents.

The two in-state finalists were University of Massachusetts Professor Franklin Patterson and Holyoke Community College President David Bartley.

Bartley, a former member of the House of Representatives, was said to be Gov. Edward J. King's choice for the chancellor's position.

After two days of reportedly heated debate the regents were said to be split over the two finalists and Duff's name was brought up as a possible compromise candidate for the position by Dr. Charles Sanders, a member of the Board of Regents and the search committee.

Duff, 49, is considered responsible for the 1976 merger of Lowell Tech and Lowell State College to create the University of Lowell.

"I look forward to working with Dr. Duff as he assumes his vital responsibilities in carrying out the legislative mandate of reorganization," University of Massachusetts President David C. Knapp said in a statement issued last week.

Duff was provost and executive vice president at Seton Hall University in New Jersey before assuming the University of Lowell post.

He is a graduate of Fordham University, received a master's degree in history from Seton Hall University, and a doctorate in history from Columbia University.

New UMass basketball coach named

Tom McLaughlin, right, newly appointed head basketball coach talks with Frank McInerney, University of Massachusetts director of Athletics.

By ED LEVINE
Collegian Staff

Tom McLaughlin, an assistant coach at Notre Dame and a University of Massachusetts graduate, was named the new coach of the UMass basketball team last week, replacing coach Ray Wilson.

McLaughlin's appointment was announced last week by UMass Athletic Director Frank McInerny after the close of Wilson's second season where he scored a 3-24 record. In Wilson's first year as coach, 1980, the Minutemen finished with a 2-24 record.

McLaughlin, 30, has been assistant coach under Digger Phelps at Notre Dame for the past three years and was previously an assistant at Stanford University. A 1973 UMass graduate, he captained the 1972-73 Minutemen to a 20-7 record under former coach Jack Leaman, who retired in 1979.

During his three-year playing career at UMass, McLaughlin averaged 9.3 points and 4.7 rebounds per game. The Minutemen compiled a 57-23 record while the six foot, four inch McLaughlin played. His brother, Frank, is the coach at Harvard University.

Wilson, 48, has three years remaining on his contract and must decide whether to remain at UMass doing other, unspecified work or to go elsewhere. He said he was notified of his dismissal on Friday, March 22.

"They told me it was time to get someone else," Wilson told reporters after being notified. "I'm dissappointed I didn't get enough time to turn things around. From where we started, you can't get too far in two years. I felt that we had stopped the slide with some players who will be good in a couple of years. And I felt we had done well with recruiting."

Wilson also said it will probably take McLaughlin some time to get the team going again.

"It's just like he's starting all over again, except that at least the young players have a little experience now," Wilson said.

At a press conference in Boston last week, McLaughlin said he wants to develop more school spirit behind the team and plans to use the fans to both motivate the team and intimidate the opposition. He said he plans to "go into

Hijackers shoot an American

BANGKOK, Thailand — An American hostage fleeing a hijacked Indonesian jetliner parked here was shot and wounded in the back yesterday in the second confirmed escape from armed air pirates demanding the release of 84 "political prisoners" in Indonesia.

Two other Americans were reported among the 55 hostages still aboard the Garuda Airlines DC-9, parked at the Don Muang Airport tarmac since five hijackers diverted it here from a domestic flight over Indonesia on Saturday.

The wounded American, identified as Carl Schneider, hometown unknown, was reported in stable condition. Earlier, a British captive escaped through an emergency exit and raced to a golf course while airport workers refueled the craft to keep its generators — and ventilation system — running.

A Thai government spokesman said Indonesia agreed to meet all the demands of the heavily armed hijackers, but would only disclose the one demand — freedom for 84 Indonesian prisoners.

Spokesman Trairong Suwankiri said, however, it was unclear what country would accept the hijackers and the prisoners.

Abscam trial to begin

NEW YORK — Sen. Harrison A. Williams Jr., the seventh and most powerful federal politician indicted in the Abscam influence peddling scandal, goes on trial today in the most complex case to date.

Although he was one of the first to meet with undercover FBI agents posing as representatives of favor-seeking Arab sheiks, Williams was the last to be indicted.

The 61-year-old New Jersey Democrat, a 22-year Senate veteran whose current term expires in 1982, maintains he is "totally innocent" and says "I will survive."

Jury selection begins today in Brooklyn before U.S. District Judge George C. Pratt in a trial expected to last up to two months.

Williams, former chairman of the Senate Labor and Human Resources Committee, is accused of bribery and conspiracy involving an alleged promise to introduce an immigration bill to allow the purported Arabs to stay in the United States.

Condo collapse victim found

COCOA BEACH, Fla. — Workers uncovered the body of a 22-year-old man among tons of concrete and heavy steel beams yesterday, removing the 11th victim from the rubble of a condominium that collapsed during construction.

His parents and friends, who kept vigil since the collapse Friday, wept and embraced when 22-year-old Darrell Nowakowski's crushed body was taken from the dusty wreckage of what officials say was the worst construction accident in Florida history.

Nowakowski, who began work as a glazier at the site Thursday, was found on what was the first floor before the fivestory structure gave way, smashing the floors one atop another. A crushed tool box filled with concrete chips and a bloody, torn T-shirt were taken out just before medics removed the body.

"When the body was taken away we embraced and had a short prayer," said the Rev. Jim Baugher. "With all the noise that's all we could do."

Fire Chief Robert Walker said earlier that three or four workmen still were missing. He abandoned hope Saturday of finding anyone alive in the mass of broken concrete slabs and twisted steel reinforcing rods.

2 hit and runs over vacation

University of Massachusetts police reported a quiet vacation week marked by few campus incidents.

Two hit and run accidents were reported last week. A 1978 Oldsmobile received $300 damage to the front left side at 5:48 a.m. yesterday while parked in lot 65, police said.

The other hit and run accident was reported at 10:15 p.m. Friday in lot 63. A 1980 Chevrolet pickup truck received $1200 damage when a white vehicle struck it, pushing in the left side of the truck, police said.

A minor was taken into protective custody at 12:45 a.m. yesterday, police said. The 16-year-old male was charged with transporting alcohol and disorderly conduct. Police will file a complaint against him.

In another weekend incident a plate glass window valued at $300 was broken in the lobby of George Washington tower in the Southwest Residential Area, police said. The man told police he was upset with someone in the dorm but gave no other explanation for his action.

Police also had a report of a breaking and entering incident at 7:39 p.m. Saturday in Cashin residence hall in the Sylvan Residential Area. A resident of Cashin returned to his room to find a man inside who said he had come to buy cocaine. The resident of the room said he did not sell it and the man left, police said. After the man left the resident found his stereo unplugged but not damaged, police said.

In another incident, police had a report of a break-in at the Curry Hicks Cage, March 21. More than $1000 in scuba equipment was stolen form the scuba equipment room, police said. The door to the equipment room received $300 damage in the incident, police said. The incident is under investigation by UMass police.

Once again it's time for Oscar predictions

By ANDREW GORDON
Collegian Staff

On February 14, this year's Oscar nominations were announced for the annual Academy Award ceremony to be held the end of this month. The event will not be like those in the past and it looks as though a non-Hollywood production may run off with most of the major awards.

In the category of Best Picture, the five nominated films are The Elephant Man, Coalminer's Daughter, Tess, Ordinary People and Raging Bull. Only the last three are "big" enough to win but because Tess is foreign and Ordinary People too much resemblence to last year's winner, Kramer Vs. Kramer, Raging Bull seems the obvious choice. Bull's director, Martin Scorsese also seems likely, despite his open contempt for the movie industry, for best director. His only real competition in that category is Robert Redford, who made his directorial debut with Ordinary People.

Robert DeNiro [Raging Bull], Robert Duvall [The Great Santini], Peter O'Toole [The Stunt Man], John Hurt [The Elephant Man], and Jack Lemmon [Tribute] have been nominated for best actor. All are great acotrs, particularly DeNiro and Duvall, but because of the physical strains of his role, DeNiro should be a shoe-in for the award.

Despite good performances by Gena Rowlands [Gloria], Goldie Hawn [Private Benjamin], Ellen Burstyn [Resurrection] and Sissy Spacek [Coalminer's Daughter], Mary Tyler Moore will undoubtely win Best Actress for her performance in Ordinary People.

None of the nominalted women for Best Supporting Actress were too outstanding in their roles so it is hard to determine who was best, Cathy Moriarty should get the award for her role in Raging Bull.

For Best Supporting Actor, however, all the nominees are deserving. This is probably the strongest this category has been in years. Jason Robards [Melvin and Howard] has won before so he's out and Michael O'Keefe [The Great Santini] is too new to the field to win over such stiff competition. Of the remaining three, it is hard to predict who will win; Judd Hirsch and Timothy Hutton, both for Ordinary People and Joe Pesci for Raging Bull. In my opinion, Pesci should win. He is most deserving, but in the Academy's that rarely has anything to do with whether or not a nominee will win.

In the category of Best Animated Foreign Short the nominees are...Well, who cares? You'll have to sit through enough of those awards Oscar night until they get to the good stuff.

Robert DeNiro, the Best Actor nominee for his performance in Raging Bull

UMass student killed

Bradley S. Ringquist, a 23-year-old University of Massachusetts psychology major from Duxbury, died early last Sunday morning in an automobile collision on South East and Main Streets in Amherst.

Ringquist and a friend, Charles Coombs, 20, of Dedham, were driving north on South East Street when a car driven by William Orrell, 20, of Pelham, struck their vehicle at 1:22 a.m. Orrell has been charged with vehicular homicide, according to the Daily Hampshire Gazzette. Ringquist was pronounced dead on arrival at the Cooley Dickenson Hospital, while Coombs was admitted to the intensive care unit.

Doctors removed Coomb's spleen last Sunday but he was listed in stable condition yesterday by a hospital spokesperson. Coombs said yesterday afternoon he is awaiting surgery on multiple fractures in his jaw.

The intersection where the accident occured is considered to be one of the worst in the town due to the angles of the intersecting streets, according to Amherst Town planner James P. Cope. He told Gazette reporter there have been 42 accidents at the intersection since the beginning of 1978.

Ringquist was the head of the inter Fraternity council and was elected Greek of the year in 1980. He was a member of Beta Kappa Phi fraternity.

Looking back By Carla Lesh

Freshmen starting their first year at the University of Massachusetts in the 1948-1949 school year were greeted with a "U of M handbook" which introduced the freshmen to the customs, clubs, rules and regulations of UMass.

"Your studies must have first place on your schedule, especially in this first semester..." read President Van Meter's greeting in part. "We are glad indeed that you have come to join our lively campus community and it is a pleasure to welcome you," began President Van Meter's greeting to the new students.

Eleven customs and traditions were listed including Alumni, Commencement and Homecoming Weekends, the Bells of Old Chapel the Junior Senoir Processional, "when the senior girls pass on the traditions of the University to the junior girls."

An annual Mother's Day weekend was held on Mother's Day "To acequaint mothers with the campus and university life of U of M." The Bells of Old Chapel were rung morning, noon, night, to celebrate winning football games and to announce Spring day, when classes stopped at noon and the students and faculty participated in sports and refreshment at the old Rifle Range.

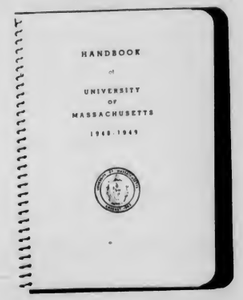
Four formal dances were held at the university as well, the Inter Greek Ball, the Soph-Senior Hop, the Carnival Ball and the Military Ball.

Women students in 1948-49 were given extensive regulations to follow. Closing rules at the three women's dormitories (Abigail Adams Hall, Thatcher and Lewis Hall) required women to be in at 10 p.m. on weekdays and 12:30 a.m. Saturdays.

"Students may not entertain men callers from town before 6:30 p.m. Mondays through Fridays, nor before twelve o'clock noon on Saturdays and Sundays." Town callers could be entertained in the houses three nights per week. Women were not allowed to visit Fraternity houses except during official social functions.

Laundry rooms were to be used only for ironing before 7 a.m. and students were required to use special typing rooms rather than typing in their dormitory rooms after 10 p.m.

Smoking was forbidden in all but special rooms provided for the purpose in each residence hall. Anyone found smoking outside the smoking room was fined $10.



Communist party leader reports an 'open fight against Socialism'

WARSAW, Poland — Independent unionists threatening a nationwide strike are in "an open fight against social- ism," a top Communist Party leader said yesterday at the party's emergency meeting on Poland's labor crisis.

But moderates on the 140-member policy-making Central Committee rose to criticize the way the party leadership has handled the conflict and to call for government concessions to the independent union Solidarity, the Polish news agency PAP reported.

Solidarity has called for a general strike to start tomorrow if the government does not meet its demands.

The meeting of the Central Committee, which began yesterday morning and went late into the night in the gray "Party House" in central Warsaw, was believed to be the setting for a showdown between reformists and hardliners.

Solidarity members in the port city of Gdansk, in a telephone call to The Associated Press, said they had heard rumors all 10 members of the Communist Party's ruling Politburo had submitted their resignations during the committee meeting, which was held behind closed doors. There was no official report of such an action.

The session opened under the shadow of a grim assessment in Moscow of the crisis and an announcement in Berlin that "new units" were being sent to participate in Warsaw Pact exercises on Polish soil and in neighboring countries.

The outcome of the theatened strike "could be unpredictable," said Politburo member Kazimierz Barcikowski in an opening speech broadcast by Warsaw Radio. "This is no longer pressure on authorities, but an open fight against so- cialism. This is a fight for power," he said.

Janina Kostrzewski, a committee member from a Wroclaw electronics plant, said she did not understand why party leaders were unswayed by "voices of common sense," PAP reported.

"My party organization joined the (four-hour warning) strike Friday, fully aware we violated party discipline," she said. "The guilt for the latest strikes rests not with those determined to strike but those who brought about this determination."

Ryszard Byrk, a party leader from Siedlce, was quoted by PAP as saying, "The most urgent thing is finding a way out of the conflict and avoiding a general strike. Every justifi- able compromise is necessary, except a sacrificing of the interests of socialism and the nation."

The East German news agency ADN said "new units" were en route to join the 10-day-old "Soyuz 81" Warsaw Pact maneuvers that have been under way in Poland, Czech- oslovakia and East Germany.

Love the Book before the man

SALT LAKE CITY — Young women should fall in love with the scriptures before they fall in love with men, Mormon Church President Spencer W. Kimball advises.

Speaking on his 86th birthday, Kimball told the Young Women organization of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter day Saints on Saturday that the scriptures "will help you to prepare for the future spiritually." The meeting in the Salt Lake Tabernacle was carried by closed circuit television to 2,150 locations throughout the world.

"You will be a better friend and neighbor, a better wife, a better mother if you have developed gospel attributes — of love, purity and meekness — and gospel skills such as communicating, listening and delegating," he told the women, 12 to 18 years old.

Kimball, as church president, is regarded as a prophet by more than 4.5 million Mormons.

American Pop: Banal cartoons

By ROB HUFFMAN
Collegian Staff

On any level, Ralph Bakshi's much-ballyhooed cartoon/musical/epic American Pop is a disappointment.

As a technical breakthrough in animation, Pop has not lived up to expectations, as a story it's dull, and as a documentary of twentieth-century music, American Pop is artistic apocrypha.

Pop was plugged as having remarkable special effects, but there is truly nothing here that hasn't been done before and better. Much of the pre-release hoopla centered on the use of the rotoscoping process (using footage of real people as the skeletal framework for the animated characters), which Bakshi has successfully employed in earlier films such as Lord Of The Rings and Wizards.

In American Pop, however, he chooses to use this technique not as spice, but as sauce—smothering the sugary, insubstantial, and hard-to-follow plot with stereotypical bozos who move like real humans. Remember the Saturday morning cartoon Scooby-Doo? That's what these characters are reminiscent of.

The situations they portray are as cliche as archetypal vaudeville parody, stock gangster sketches, and "San Francisco acid" scenarios that might have been cut from Yellow Submarine.

The real axe-murders in this film, though, take place when Bakshi aims his cinematic hatchet at what is quite possibly America's finest art form—our music.

Music is massacred, cherished songs are debauched, and through remarkable "trick photography," Grace Slick becomes Janis Joplin. If that isn't enough, Bob Dylan is Bob Seger's father (I kid you not!). These examples are from the rock section at the end of the film, but throughout Bakshi's exercise in ennui the musical selections seem to have come from a grade school primer on pop.

Artists as diverse as Scott Joplin and Alan Ginzburg suffer the ludicrous distinction of inclusion in this piffling picture. Furthermore, in light of the predictable selection of music, it's not surprising that American Pop closes with Lynyrd Skynyrd's well-known anthem "Free Bird." I have departed from tradition in telling the finale of this film not through radical self-righteousness, but through a sense of inescapable responsibility to the reader.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Commemorating a Black leader for humanity

On April 4, 1968, on a motel balcony in Mempis, Tennessee, the Rev. Martin Luther King, Jr. was shot dead by an assassin's bullet at age 39.

In the 13 years that had transpired between the Montgomery, Alabama bus boycott of 1955, which catapulted Dr. King into national prominence, and his death in 1968, Dr. King had come to personify the hopes and dreams of Black people throughout America. His struggle against the Jim Crow system in the South, and segregation in the North -- even when his tactics failed, as they often did, to win local concessions -- brought international recognition to Dr. King and other Black civil rights leaders, in their effort to "assert humanity within the context of racial hatred and violence" in the United States.

HOW DOES IT LOOK, ALEX? WADDAYA THINK?
CRISIS AUTHORITY
I THINK THAT'S MY HELMET YOU'RE WEARING, MR. VICE-PRESIDENT— THAT'S WHAT I THINK!
PARDON ME, NUMBER TWO, SIR— TIME FOR YOUR PEACE NEGOTIATIONS WITH THE JAPANESE CAR MAKERS...
SECOND'S ON FIRST AND THIRD'S ON RIGHT?

Joe Gannon

In 1957, Dr. King helped to organize the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, a religous base from which he was to lead his many assaults against the segregationist policies prevalent in both the North and the South. He believed, as did many Black leaders, in the use of non-violent direct action as a means against those state, local, and civil institutions that refused to confront or even acknowledge the existence of segregationist and discriminatory practices. He knew, as did so many other civil rights activists, "through painful experience that freedom is never voluntarily given by the oppressor. It must be demanded by the oppressed."

A further milestone in Dr. King's career was his break with the Johnson Administration over the issue of the war in Vietnam. In a blistering condemnation of Johnson's war policy, delivered at Riverside church in New York, he moved from the realm of civil rights in America to human rights the world over. His involvement in the anti-war movement -- which came after years of personal and organizational debate -- marked the culmination of his political development. For with it came a change in his views on the reshaping of society. "For years I labored with the idea of reforming the existing institutions of the society, a little change here, a little change there. Now I feel quite differently. I think you've got to have a reconstruction of the entire society, a revolution of values."

A year to the day after his address at Riverside church, Martin Luther King was dead. His death sparked rebellions of outrage in Black communities all over the U.S. while the world mourned this man who was a symbol of so much to so many. Each year since his assassination, legislation has been introduced to Congress that would make Dr. King's birthday a national holiday, and each year it has been defeated. To date only 15 states have officially recognized Dr. King's birthday as a holiday, and yet there are few in the 20th Century who have made as much of an impact on so many people as did Dr. King.

The government's failure to recognize the contributions of Dr. King to our society, by helping to preserve his memory, is testimony to how far Black people have still to go before they can achieve full social, political, and economic freedom.

In lieu of an official holiday to commerate Dr. King, March 31 to April 4 has been designated Martin Luther King Week. During this week, student and community groups -- including some on this campus -- organize a variety of films, speakers, and cultural programs that serve to both honor the memory of Dr. King, as well as to raise the issues of those obstacles that Black people still face today in America.

Martin Luther King was not a slave owner, but a decendant of slaves; not a soldier, but a prophet of peace. He dedicated and gave his life in the struggle for human rights and dignity. Not solely for Black people, but against the laws and customs that preserve a system of oppression which threatens us all when it denies the rights of some.

Despite his "conservative militancy", King believed in standing up to injustice and discrimination, in fighting oppression, and in insuring the rights of all. Dr. King was made of the stuff from which heroes and legends are born. In keeping with his contributions it is only fitting, even crucial, that we insure there is a day in his celebration and make Martin Luther King's birthday, January 15, a national holiday.

Election story is 'speculative'

Regarding: "Election Strategy Responsible for Upset" (Collegian 3/13), if one is going to examine "...some of the factors of a stunning upset..." it would be safe to assume that those who ran the campaign would have been contacted for inquiries about the strategy used. This, however, was not the case; and what could have been an interesting and informative article on SGA presidential politics was nothing more than speculative journalism. As one of Larry Kocot's and Kevin Mangan's Orchard Hill Area co-ordinators I would like to comment on a number of points made in Ed Levine's story.

First, when refering to the high voter turnout at Franklin Dining Commons he states "...that the difference was not made by the candidate's campaign promises or platforms but by the size of the organizations and the campaign strategies." The campaign organization on Orchard Hill grew out of support for the Kocot-Mangan platform and the belief that their promises would be implemented as policies after the elections.

Secondly, Levine says that the Kocot-Mangan campaign "displayed no visible signs of organization..." at the early stages of the campaign and waited "...to come out of the woodwork for a last minute push." If Ed Levine had been the roommate of one of the Kocot-Mangan campaign workers he would have known that we were organized the day nomination papers were taken out. At least three weeks before the elections we had dorm coordinators in Webster, Dickinson, and in the Grayson-Field cluster. Two weeks before the elections we were organized to the corridor coordinator level in most dorms in Orchard Hill and Central. If we were not visible to most of the campus, it might have been that we had no money for posters or flyers at the early stages of the campaign. To be sure, not one of the four sets of candidates was highly visible at the outset because the SGA campaign money (the only money candidates are allowed to spend) was not available until ten days before the election.

The charge that "they refused to discuss specifics and instead spent most of their energies attacking LaVoice..." is so ludicrous that it hardly merits rebuttal. Both Larry and Kevin spent hours on Orchard Hill and in Central going from door to door, talking to students, and telling students how they planned to run the presidency. On Orchard Hill the Kocot-Mangan campaign workers were instructed to stress the candidates' plans for the future and their prior accomplishments.

I share Ed's hopes that all hard feelings will be forgotten and that there will be a smooth transition. Hard feelings (if there ever were any other than those imagined by the reporter) should have been left in the background after the votes had been counted, not on Friday, March 13 after a Collegian staff writer could get in one more cheap shot at one of the candidates.

Joseph S. Forte
Orchard Hill Area co-ordinator for Kocot/Mangan

Cartoonist has 'parochial smugness'

Concerning Dalton Garis' letter (March 17) defending the Baha'i community against Mr. Danny Guidera's insensitive "Nuke the Whale" potshots:

I'm glad someone got on the case before I had a chance to, and I add my whole-hearted support to Mr. Garis' expression of concern.

Although I am not a member of the Baha'i faith, and have no ties whatsoever to this (or any other) religious movement or organization, I take extreme exception to Mr. Guidera's persistent habit of sarcastically mocking and belittling people who do not conform to his version of "mainstream" social acceptability. His parochial smugness is poisonous, corrosive and ultimately pointless.

Let me make a distinction here. Good satirical cartooning is always welcome. Everyone enjoys seeing deserving targets get their come-uppance in a public forum, and from the Ape-President to the CARPing KC1A flacks to the Lobster-King, there's no current lack of eminently deserving targets.

The real difference between a cartoon like "Bean" (which knows how to satirize social "types" in a gentle, affectionate and ultimately winning way), and Mr. Guidera's "Nuke the Whale," seems to lie in Mr. Guidera's underpinning of hard core contempt for everything he touches. I won't go so far as to suggest that this is a therapist's problem being acted out in prime time. But I will ask him to consider much more carefully the impact of his attitude on social relationships, tolerance, mutual understanding and human empathy in a pluralistic and diverse community. How would an ordinary Collegian undergraduate reader feel, when first meeting a Baha'i student, with a subconsciously programmed attitude colored by Mr. Guidera's pointless sarcasm?

Having been witness to a few numbing incidents, in which carloads of Mr. Guidera's socially preferred "cool jock" friends roamed the streets of Amherst heaping verbal abuse on young women (and also, incredibly, on a few men with '60's-length hair), I have to ask Mr. Guidera if this is the version of social tolerance and understanding that he wishes to promote, when he holds "different" sorts of people up to score and ridicule in his cartoons.

The painfully limited, parochial and narrow vision of our multi—cultural human family among male UMass undergraduates in particular—a parochialism which is fostered by the attitude of "Nuke the Whale"—is directly related to America's increasing and armed arrogance toward "alien" peoples and cultures.

The psychological dynamic of contempt is that it is based on fear. I'm sure Danny Guidera has feelings too, and that those feelings can be hurt. Perhaps that's not a bad thing, if it will allow him to suspend his "cool" pose long enough to listen to his conscience and his heart. I've never met Dan Guidera, and I can only hope that he'll give due, mature and measured reflection to our letters. Contrition is a great cleanser—and the capacity to feel it is a sign of great strength.

By the way, Mr. Garis neglected to mention that jazz trumpeter-superstar Dizzy Gillespie is a deeply committed member of the Baha'i faith, along with folk-rock hitmakers Seals and Crofts. Anyone who wants to understand the Baha'i message of world harmony need only listen to their music.

If Mr. Guidera was looking for a safely "bizarre" and "eccentric" "off-the-mainstream" target for his corrosive satire, he missed by a factor of Warp 3. Can't he do something more satirically positive with his time, and the Collegian's space?

SPECTRUM EXTENDED DEADLINE—We have extended the deadline for poetry until March 30, prose and b&w visuals to April 9. Written submissions can be mailed to S.U. mailbox #293. All submissions can be brought down to C.C. rm. 104. Don't wait a minute longer!

THE MEDIATION PROJECT, a dispute resolution program based at UMass is now open. The project is a free service, staffed by community volunteers who have been extensively trained to help disputants mutually resolve their conflicts. Mediation is offered as an alternative to the existing legal structures, both at the University and in the surrounding community. If you are having problems settling a conflict,—call the Mediation Project at 545-2462 or stop by 177 Campus Center, Monday thru Friday 9 a.m. 5 p.m. Anonymity and confidentiality are assured.

INTRODUCTORY MEETINGS to begin your Summer or Fall 1981 Internship plans are held DAILY at the Office of Internships. Students from all academic disciplines are invited to attend. Call us at 545 0727 or stop by the Office at 16 Curry Hicks for the meeting days and times. NOW is the time to start planning your Internship.

seven innings before a 9-run eighth gave the number one ranked team in the National Association of Intercollegiate Athletics (NAIA) an 18-9 victory. Drelick took the loss despite having some of the best heat in the tournament. Aulenback hit his second home run of the trip, a two-run job in the first, while Bruce Emerson added a solo shot in the eighth. After all the damage had been done, Litano drove in three runs with two doubles in the loss.

But the Point Loma sweep made all things well again, and UMass returns to New England with a better record at this point of the season than ever before.

And, as Aulenback observed:

"The thing we really got out of this trip is the feeling that we can play with anybody in the country. We showed that."

The first set of New England rankings should bear out Mr. Aulenback and his buddies.

Reagan's tax plan fouled

By JIM LUTHER
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Reagan's effort to keep this year's tax cut simple is running into opposition from some who share his goal of increasing incentives for saving and investment.

Some financial and business leaders warmly embrace the president's bill, agreeing it would improve the climate for investment and revitalize the economy. But they are advocating — and are gaining congressional support for — even greater incentives, including a major reduction in the tax on capital gains.

The House Ways and Means Committee, still a month away from starting to write a tax-cut bill, will continue hearing this week from various interest groups who have their own ideas of how taxes should be reduced.

While the House will conduct little if any business this week, the Senate plans to complete by Wednesday the first round of action on a measure designed to slash federal spending by $2.8 billion this year, $36.4 billion in 1982 and $47.7 billion in 1983.

In a series of preliminary votes, the Senate indicated strong support — although grudgingly at times on the part of Democrats — for the cuts recommended by the Budget Committee. Those cuts generally parallel those proposed by Reagan as part of his plan to aid the economy by reducing the role of government.

The House has yet to tackle the budget cuts.

During the first few weeks of hearings on how to cut taxes, the House Ways and Means Committee has found expected strong support among business groups for Reagan's plan. But many business people are urging Congress to go beyond what the president asked and change portions of the tax law that discourage investment.
